"'No person shall manufacture out of any oleoaginous substance or substances, or any compound of the same other than that produced from unadulterated milk or of cream from the same, any article designed to take the place of butter or cheese produced from pure, unadulterated milk or cream of the same, or shall sell or offer for sale the same as an article of food. This provision shall not apply to pure skim-milk cheese made from pure skim milk. Whoever violates the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or not less than six months' or more than one year's imprisonment, or both such fine and imprisonment for the first offense, and by imprisonment for one year for each subsequent offense.'

"A person accused of violating the provisions of section 6 having been convicted of that offense in the court of general sessions of the city and county of New York, and the conviction having, on appeal to the general term of the supreme court in the first department, been affirmed by that tribunal, the case was carried to the court of appeals. The case was one in which it was not charged that the defendant had sold oleomargarine as butter. His offense consisted in selling an article designed to take the place of butter and not made from pure milk or cream. The court (Judge Rappalo giving the opinion) held that the prohibitory clause of the act was so broad as to cover a case in which there was no simulation of butter or cheese, no attempt at fraud, and no complaint that the articles manufactured or sold were unwholesome. This was held to be an infraction of the constitutional right of every citizen to the free use of his faculties in any pursuit not prejudicial to the public welfare. In conclusion, it was declared that the judgment of the general term and of the court of sessions should be reversed.

"This decision would leave in full force the regulative laws of 1882, requiring spurious butter and cheese to be sold under their true names, and prescribing certain marks, brands, &c., to apprise the purchaser of their character. The Legislature, however, has since re-enacted the prohibitory provisions, the vote to that effect being unanimous in one House and with only one dissenting voice in the other.

"In Ohio the prohibition does not apply to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine when manufactured from beef-suet and milk. It appears that the subject is causing agitation in other countries than the United States. The decrease in the profits of British and Irish dairying and the large amounts of butterine, oleomargarine, &c., imported from Holland and elsewhere, and sold as dairy butter, have paved the way, in accordance with the laws of a large number of the American States, for the introduction into the House of Commons of a bill to 'regulate the importation, manufacture, and sale of butter substitutes.' It defines butter as 'such article produced from unadulterated milk or cream, unmixed with any other fatty or oleaginous substance whatever,' and margarine or oleomargarine as 'any imitation of butter whatsoever, or any compound of butter and animal or vegetable oil.' Any tub or firkin containing imitation butter shall have 'Margarine' or 'Oleomargarine' stamped or branded upon it in letters at least an inch in length.

The penalty for the first offense against this section is a fine not exceeding £20; for a second a month's imprisonment or £50, and any subsequent offense six months' imprisonment. Retail dealers are required to inform every purchaser that the article sold is margarine, under penalty of £10. For the better carrying of the bill into successful operation it is proposed to give one-half the amount of any fine to the informer by whose evidence conviction is obtained. Other countries are summarized as follows:

"Austria. There is no law to prevent the importation of spurious butter, but its sale is regulated by the sanitary officers of the different municipalities. If any butters containing a deleterious mixture are sold they must be given their true name and quality and not be sold as butter, otherwise the goods may be confiscated and the venders punished with fine and imprisonment.

"Belgium. There is no general law in relation to the matter. It is the subject of municipal regulation. An ordinance of the communal council of Brussels provides that a person selling artificial butter the color and shape of which resemble those of real butter shall occupy a place assigned to him by the communal administration, and his stall shall bear in distinct characters the sign 'artificial butter.'

"Denmark. The only law bearing directly upon the subject is one providing that artificial butter shall be packed in vessels differently fashioned from those known as butter barrels or kegs, under specific rules prescribed by the minister of the interior, and shall be marked with the word 'Margarine.' Violations of this law are punishable by a fine of 200 to 2,000 kroner ($53.60 to $536), and by the confiscation of the articles, of which one-half the value goes to the reporter of the offense in case he demands it. Still another check on the sale of counterfeit butter is supplied by the control over all food products vested in the health commissioners of the different towns, which, in concert with the police, exercise their authority under regulations sanctioned for each town by the ministry of the interior. A medical man is usually attached to these commissions, and they are authorized to call in experts in case of need to assist them in their investigations.

"France. A bill for the suppression of frauds in the sale of butter was introduced in the French Chamber of Deputies August 14, 1884, by M. Jules Meline, minister of agriculture; but it does not appear from information at hand that the measure has become a law. It requires the vender of artificial butter, or of butter mixed with margarine or other fats, to make known the true character of the article by means of a label placed on the article itself or on the barrel or other package containing it. It must also be correctly described in the invoice and way-bill or bill of lading accompanying consignments of it. The neglect of these requirements is made punishable by a fine of 11 to 16 francs and by imprisonment not exceeding five days. Article 2 punishes with imprisonment from six days to a month, and with a fine of 100 to 2,000 francs, any one who by false declarations on the invoice, freight-office ticket, or bill of lading shall have deceived or attempted to deceive the purchaser.

"Article 3 imposes the maximum penalty on any one convicted within a year after a former conviction. Article 4 provides for the confiscation of the counterfeit or adulterated article when found in the possession of the person offering it for sale. It also empowers the judge to order the publication and posting up of the judgment of confiscation, and makes the same obligatory in case of a second offense.

"Germany. The Mark Lane Express of November 9, 1885, contains the following: 'The question of butter manufacture has lately been very much discussed in Germany, especially in the province of Schleswig-Holstein, where a law has just been passed prohibiting the use of oil or any oily substance, except milk or cream, in making butter and cheese. Nor may either be sold cheaply or offered in the market at an unusually low rate. These conditions do not apply to green or skimmed-milk cheese.'

"Switzerland. The same paper has the following in regard to Switzerland: 'Efforts are being made in Switzerland for the suppression of oleomargarine. The council has decided that inquiries should be made into the subject, and should it be found that oleomargarine has become a regular article of commerce a tariff of duties to check its sale will be issued.'

"Italy. There has not been any restriction placed upon the importation of artificial butter, and no special laws or regulations have been made concerning its manufacture or sale. There are very rigorous general laws concerning the sale of adulterated or unwholesome food.

"Netherlands. The importation, manufacture, or sale of artificial butter is not prohibited or regulated in any manner by law.

"Portugal. There are no legal restrictions upon the production or sale of artificial butters. 'De Mourier's oleomargarine' is subject, on importation, to the same rate of duty as natural butter, namely, 16.2 cents per kilogram. A question arising as to another substance presented at the custom-house and found to be pure margarine, intended for use in the manufacture of artificial butter, it was subjected, by a decree dated February 14, 1884, to a duty of 5.4 cents per kilogram.

"Russia. There are no restrictions upon the importation, but, in fact, none is imported. Artificial butter is manufactured quite extensively, and there is no law to protect or regulate its sale. It may be sold as genuine butter without penalty, provided it does not contain any ingredients which are detrimental to the public health."

The foregoing will show the extent to which the world has become aroused to this great evil. Let the nation that leads in all else not be behind in this great movement. Let no false sentimentality stop us from the vigorous exercise of a power complete and far-reaching for a good much desired. Let not the boards of trade, boards of produce exchange, and the artifice of all the speculative centers of the country intimidate us from our duty. I do not believe that money can be piled up high enough about this great building to draw us from our duty to the nation, to consumers and producers, to the tables and homes of the land, and to that great agriculture-producing class which, like a pure fountain, constantly adds fresh brain power and purity to the wealthier and professional elements of the nation.

does not often come into our presence demanding protection, but he is here now and in earnest. In whatever way we strengthen him we add prosperity to every business pursuit in the land. Each owner of the soil is a stockholder in the Republic. As you strengthen, enrich, and protect that element you do add blessings to all the people. Let Congress here and now do its whole duty by those honest, generous, modest tillers of the soil, whose sinewy arms, rugged hands, and honest hearts are impregnable fortresses of safety to the nation. If what has been said does not remove the scruples of those entertaining constitutional objection or fears as to its constitutionality, let me remind you of the language of an honorable Representative from Connecticut on this floor in the last Congress. When the great floods that swept Ohio shocked the nation by the disasters that followed, Congress was appealed to for aid in that great calamity. We did not fail to respond.

The old gray-headed representative from Connecticut rose to his feet. He far exceeded the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Georgia in his careful guarding of the Constitution. His words in substance were these: "While I do not see the right in the Constitution to pass this law granting this aid to the flood sufferers, still I interpose no objection to the bill, and bow to its passage in the presence of suffering humanity."

Let the same generous spirit be quickened in the heart of every lawmaker here to-day, and in the presence of what seems to be the certain downfall of one of the greatest industries of the country, entailing poverty, misery, and sorrow as it must, let no delicate scruples prevent you from a vigorous and manly action touching this great measure.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Chairman, there are, in my opinion, but two grounds upon which legislation on the subject-matter of this bill can be justified. First, that oleomargarine or butterine, or artificial butter, as I prefer to call it, is deleterious to the public health. Second, that in its sale the people are deceived and defrauded.

I wish to consider these two propositions in the order in which I have named them.

Is artificial butter deleterious to the public health? If we are to believe the testimony of the expert chemists who have investigated the subject it is not. The matter has been made the subject of Congressional, State, and municipal investigation. A hearing was had a few years since before the Ways and Means Committee of this House, at which were read the certificates of many of the ablest chemists in the country. Among them were Professor Ch. F. Chandler, of New York; Professor George F. Baker, of the University of Pennsylvania; Professor S. W. Johnson, of the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale College, and Professor C. C. Caldwell, of the Cornell University. They all testified unequivocally that the artificial butter submitted to them respectively for analysis was "a wholesome article of food."

It must be remembered, however, that these opinions were given several years since and were based upon selected specimens submitted at that time for analysis.

It must also be remembered that a compound of which the separate ingredients are chemically harmless will often, when taken into the human system, prove very dangerous not only to health but life itself. The chemist tells us that the oil of orange and the oil of savin are chemically precisely alike, but are widely different in their effects on the human frame—the one being an innocent and agreeable flavoring substance, while the other is a most dangerous poison. We should not, therefore, put too much confidence in the opinion of the chemists.

When the invention of Mege was new the manufacture was confined to suet taken from fresh-killed beeves. As the possibilities of the industry increased it was found that the inventive genius of man kept pace with his cupidity, so that to-day the fat of hogs and other animals is utilized in the manufacture of artificial butter. And here is where the danger is said to begin. The lard of the hog, under the name of "neutral," is freely used, and when we consider the extent to which that animal is subject to parasites, and the ease with which they are communicated to the human system by partaking of its flesh, and the further fact that these parasites require for their destruction a boiling temperature of twice that given them in the oleomargarine factories, we can readily speculate as to how the use of artifical butter may be the means of injuring health and destroying life.

But speculation is one thing and fact another. In the absence of any well-authenticated case of injury to health or loss of life from the use of artificial butter, although millions of pounds have been consumed, it would, in my opinion, be unsafe to legislate on the subject upon the ground that we were going to protect the public health. I think the sooner we abandon that position the better. It is not tenable. The weight of fact and opinion is against it.

But admitting that artificial butter is deleterious to health, it would furnish no reason for taxing it or regulating its sale. Our duty then would be to suppress it wholly by proper legislation.

If we are going to legislate upon the subject, let us take a position upon which we can stand and from which we can not be driven. Such a position will be found in the proposition that the people are deceived and defrauded in the sale of the spurious article.

How are they deceived? In order to make myself plain upon thir point let me call attention to the composition of the two articles. Buttes is an article which has been known from the very earliest period of which history furnishes an account. In Genesis we read of Abraham entertaining his visitors under a tree on the plains of Mamre with a fresh-killed calf and with butter and milk. In Judges we are told how Jael, the murderer of Sisera, "brought forth the butter in a lordly dish;" and Solomon tells us how it was made, for he says:

Surely the churning of milk bringeth forth butter.

From the time of Abraham down to about the year 1870 butter was known as an article of food produced from the milk of the cow. The substance thus produced has therefore a good title by prescription to the name of "butter."

In 1869, a Frenchman by the name of Mége patented an invention for making an artificial butter, which became known as "oleomargarine." His process was to take fresh beef suet, brought directly from the slaughter-house. It was thoroughly washed, rendered very carefully, strained to remove a portion of the hard stearine, and then churned with milk to convert into artificial butter. The product was salted, and colored with annotto.

In making the oleomargarine and butterine of to-day a very wide departure has been taken from the simple method pursued by the inventor. It is now manufactured largely out of hog-lard and cotton-seed oil, and compounded with a score or more of articles to cheapen its production and assimilate it in appearance and taste to natural butter.

As the finished product is turned out of the factory it resembles natural butter in color, texture, and flavor. So close is the resemblance it is impossible to tell which is the genuine article and which the counterfeit. The four senses which God has given us for the purpose are completely balked. Touch fails us. Smell fails us. Taste fails us. Sight fails us. Fingers, nose, tongue, and eyes are useless. Nothing short of a microscopical investigation or a chemical analysis can differentiate the two articles.

Now, let us look for a moment at the two articles when they come in competition in the open market. I have before me a circular just issued by a manufacturer of artificial butter in my own State of New York, in which he advertises his "New Spring Butterine" at 13 cents per pound. The other day I received a letter from a New York retail grocer in which he said he was paying 30 cents a pound for Western creamery butter and was selling it over the counter for 35 cents. On the same block with him there was another grocer who dealt in butterine. He bought it for 13 cents a pound and sold it as butter for 25 cents. Now mark the consequences. My correspondent, who is too honest to deal in the spurious article, makes but 5 cents a pound on genuine butter, while his neighbor makes 12 cents a pound on the counterfeit article. And not only this, but the dishonest dealer, by reason of selling 5 cents a pound cheaper, has robbed the honest dealer of nearly all his trade. The honest trader makes only 16 per cent. profit, while the dishonest one makes 100 per cent.

Now, in this kind of trading some one is cheated. The man who is getting a profit of 100 per cent. is getting more than he is entitled to under the fair and usual profits of business; and those who pay the excessive profits—the people, the great masses—are being cheated. Why are they cheated? Because they think they are buying natural butter, the market price of which is well known; whereas, in fact, they are getting a counterfeit article. If butterine was sold for its actual value—say 15 cents a pound—the suspicion of the buyer would at once be aroused. Hence, the price is raised to assist in the deception.

The most unfortunate part of the whole business is, the poor man is the one who is robbed out of his hard-earned wages. The rich buy the superior grades of butter and are seldom deceived.

I think I have said enough to show that the sale of artificial butter is subject to great fraud and deception. The deception is of a character which can not be detected by any of the ordinary means furnished man to distinguish a genuine from a counterfeit article.

The question then arises, can legislation be invoked to protect the people from the frauds practiced upon them? When I say legislation, I refer to legislation by the States. At this stage of my argument I do not want to complicate the matter by speaking of Federal legislation. Can the States legislate upon the subject, and, if so, in what manner and to what extent?

Many of the States have already claimed the right and exercised it. In some, laws to suppress, in others, laws to regulate the manufacture and sale of artificial butter, have been passed.

In the State of New York, which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor, after several years of ineffectual efforts to regulate the sale by a system of labeling and branding, a law was passed prohibiting both the manufacture and sale. This law was declared by the highest court in the State, the court of appeals, to be unconstitutional. I have a very high respect for the opinion of that court, and I believe its judgment sound on this question. I do not think we can annihilate the manufacture or sale; but I do think we can and should regulate it.

We have laws to regulate weights and measures, and no one ever questioned the right to make such laws. The underlying principle is that the people should not be cheated by false weights or false measures. If you go into a store and buy a yard of cloth, the merchant in measuring it off must use a stick of the standard length; if you buy 14 pounds of sugar, the weights by which it is weighed must be in accordance with the standard. The law prescribes a certain standard, and proper officers are elected to test all weights and measures from time to time to see that they are up to the standard. The ground upon which the law proceeds is that it is impossible for the buyer to detect at sight a false weight or a false measure. Hence it steps in to prevent fraud and deception. If it is within the province of legislation to guard against false weights and false measures, why is it not also to guard against false butter?

Again, it has always been considered a legislative function, both in this country and in foreign nations, to regulate by proper laws the sale of adulterated food and drugs. The object of such laws is not solely the protection of the public health, but the prevention of fraud. If the adulterated articles were injurious to health they would be wholly suppressed. But the laws are made to insure honesty between seller and buyer. Take, for instance, the adulteration of coffee with chicory. Chicory is harmless and thought by some to improve the flavor of coffee. But chicory being a cheaper article than coffee it is a fraud upon the buyer to mix the two articles and sell the compound for the higher-priced article. And so with milk. No one would claim that the addition of water would make it dangerous to health. And yet the law assumes to regulate milk by prohibiting the watering of it. In buying a gallon of milk you should not be cheated by paying for 3 quarts of milk worth 30 cents and 1 quart of water worth nothing.

I might go on and cite an almost endless number of similar illustrations, but it is not necessary. They all tend to show that the law can lay its hands on any article which is susceptible of adulteration and regulate its sale, to the end that the people shall not be deceived and defrauded.

The debasement of a superior article by mixing with it an inferior and cheaper article is a great moral wrong, conceived in greed and executed in fraud; and it is idle to say that the matter can not be controlled by legislation.

It will be conceded by this time that the States have the right to regulate the manufacture and sale of artificial butter. This much is admitted by the manufacturers themselves. I hold in my hand a circular issued under date of May 19, 1886, signed by Armour & Co. and our other large manufacturers, in which I find the following language:

> We are very willing that these products shall stand on their own merits, and we do not oppose measures honestly intended to bring about that result, but we do protest against legislation by Congress prohibitory in its character and intended to crush out one industry in favor of another.

To like effect are all the numerous protests with which our mails have been flooded during the last month. These protests purport to come from different boards of trade, commercial exchanges, and industrial associations throughout the country. The paper upon which they are printed and the identity of language betray their common origin, which is, no doubt, the organized oleomargarine and butterine manufacturers. These protests, while denying the right of prohibitory legislation, expressly admit the right to regulate.

The next question is, how are the States to regulate the matter? They have already tried to do it, but with indifferent success. I can not speak with certainty as to any State except my own. In New York we passed a law at a very early period requiring the manufacturer and the seller to stamp, brand, or mark the tubs, firkins, or packages with the word "oleomargarine."

In 1880 the law was made more stringent, and in 1882 the evil had become so great that in the session of that year the Legislature passed no less than four bills upon the subject. One of them prohibited the coloring of oleomargarine with annotto or any other substance in imitation of butter; while another forbade the keepers of hotels, restaurants, and boarding-houses from serving it as food or using it in cooking. And still in the face of all this legislation the evil grew and became almost unbearable. In the summer of 1884 a legislative committee was appointed which made a thorough and exhaustive examination of the whole subject and reported back that all measures to regulate it were utterly impotent, and thereupon the Legislature passed a bill absolutely forbidding the manufacture or sale of the article. As I have already said, the court of appeals subsequently declared this law to be unconstitutional.

Mr. Chairman, the great difficulty in regulating the sale of "artificial butter" arises from the large area over which it is distributed. We can control it in the hands of the manufacturer and the middleman, but when it gets to the store of the retailer it is impossible by any system of branding or labeling to prevent its fraudulent sale. Such has been the experience in all the States. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] stated last evening that a law in his State requiring the article to be branded had put an end to all trade in it. But I fear he is uninformed upon the true condition of matters in his State. Besides, no amount of branding will protect the actual consumer. The keepers of hotels, restaurants, and boarding houses will continue to buy it and serve it up to their guests. If it was not for this demand the trade would diminish very materially.

Another serious drawback to all State legislation is the facility with which oleomargarine can be manufactured in one State and introduced into another. To prevent this requires Federal legislation.

All attempts to regulate the sale of artificial butter by State laws having proved a failure, the people have turned their eyes to Congress.

During the last Congress several bills were introduced upon the subject, but nothing came of them. In this Congress some of the bills introduced went to the Committee on the Judiciary, some to Commerce, and some to Agriculture. On the 8th of March last Mr. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. 6570) entitled "A bill to prevent the illegal sale of all imitations of dairy products, and for other purposes." This bill had received the indorsement of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association. By special order of the House it was sent to the Committee on Agriculture. That committee reported back, through Mr. HATCH, its chairman, a substitute (H. R. 8328), which is the bill now under consideration. Like most of the bills introduced in this House, it is loaded down with unnecessary words. To get a summary of its provisions I propose to strip it of its verbiage.

Section 1 defines what is commonly known as "butter."

Section 2 defines all substances made in imitation of butter as "oleomargarine."

Section 3 imposes a special tax upon all dealers in oleomargarine as follows: Manufacturers, $600; wholesale merchants, $480; retailers, $48. It also subjects oleomargarine to certain sections of the Revised Statutes, the object of which is to bring it under the control of the internal-revenue laws.

Section 4. For non-payment of special tax fines are imposed as follows: Manufacturers, from $1,000 to $5,000; wholesalers, from $500 to $2,000; retailers, from $50 to $500.

Section 5 requires manufacturers to file bonds, keep books, put up signs, and conduct their business under the surveillance of the officers and agents of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Section 6. Manufacturers must pack oleomargarine in new firkins, tubs, or other wooden packages to contain at least 10 pounds, and to be branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe. All sales to be made in original stamped packages. Retail dealers must sell from original packages, and must put what they sell in suitable wooden packages, which shall be marked as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may direct. A violation of these provisions subjects the offender to fine and imprisonment.

Section 7 requires manufacturer to label the packages with a printed notice that he has complied with the law, and cautioning all persons against a reuse of the package or removal of the stamp without canceling it. Neglect to affix the label or its removal without canceling punishable by a fine of $50.

Section 8 taxes all oleomargarine 10 cents a pound, and applies the laws regulating the stamps on tobacco and snuff.

Section 9. Where a manufacturer removes goods without paying the tax the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have power to estimate and assess the tax.

Section 10. Imported oleomargarine shall pay an internal-revenue tax of 15 cents per pound; and all persons selling imported oleomargarine not put up in packages or stamped as required, are subject to fine and imprisonment.

Section 11. Every person who purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine not branded or stamped, shall be liable to a penalty of $50.

Section 12. Every person who purchases of a manufacturer who has not paid the special tax, to be fined $100 and forfeit his purchases.

Section 13 requires stamps on empty packages to be destroyed under penalty of fine and imprisonment.

Section 14 provides for the maintenance of an analytical chemist and a microscopist at a salary of $3,000 each, and empowers the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to employ such other experts as he may deem necessary. The Commissioner may decide as to whether any oleomargarine contains ingredients deleterious to public health; but his decision to be subject to appeal to a board composed of the Surgeon-General of the Army, the Surgeon-General of the Navy, and the Commissioner of Agriculture, and their decision to be final.

Section 15. All unstamped packages and all unhealthy oleomargarine shall be forfeited to the United States. Removal or defacement of stamps declared to be a misdemeanor.

Section 16. Oleomargarine may be exported without payment of tax or affixing stamps; but the tubs or firkins must be branded with the word "oleomargarine."

Section 17. Any manufacturer who defrauds or attempts to defraud the Government out of the tax shall forfeit the factory and contents, and in addition shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

Section 18 punishes every manufacturer or dealer who neglects to do something he ought to do with a fine of $1,000 and forfeits all the oleomargarine he may own to the Government.

Section 19 gives one-half the fine and forfeiture to the informer.

Section 20. Commissioner of Internal Revenue may make all necessary rules and regulations to carry the act into effect.

Section 21 provides that the act shall go into effect on the ninetieth day after its passage.

It will be seen that this bill is not only prolix but complicated. It continues and extends all the odious features of the internal-revenue system at a time when the people are crying for their extinction. It lays a license tax upon manufacturers and dealers, and a specific tax upon their product, ostensibly for revenue, but in reality for purposes other than revenue. It singles out a particular industry, which for all that appears is a legitimate industry, and imposes upon it a burden under the secret plea that such action is necessary in order to protect another industry. It is besides harsh in its exactions and severe in its penalties. It is crude in many of its provisions and calculated to work great injustice in its execution. If the bill should become a law it would necessitate an increase in the number of office-holders and a continuance of the "spy" system, which is so distasteful to the people. Its constitutionality is seriously disputed by some of our best lawyers and judges.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I have been induced to prepare a bill, which at the proper time I shall offer as a substitute for the one reported by the committee. I shall do it with much regret. It is extremely unpleasant for me to put myself in a position of apparent antagonism to any measure which has for its object matters so dear to the people I have the honor to represent. I represent, sir, a county which is known all over the world for the excellence of its butter. I have been told by those who have traveled abroad that they have seen displayed on signs in the streets of London and Paris the words: "Best Orange County butter for sale here!" That is one of the counties I represent.

The farmers of my district are deeply interested in this matter. They demand protection from the unfair competition into which their butter has been brought by the manufacture and sale of the artificial substitute. They claim that the counterfeit article is destroying the genuine, just the same as it was argued in the recent silver debate that bad money would drive out good. The justice of their claim must be admitted. The question which confronts us is, can we do anything by national legislation to help the farmers in their unequal struggle with this stupendous fraud; and, if so, what? We have seen that the States can regulate the matter within their respective domains, but what can Congress do? That is the question. Unless we can frame a law which will stand the test of the courts and accomplish something practical we had better leave the whole matter alone. I do not believe in passing laws out of deference to popular cry, however well-founded it may be, unless practical results can be attained. We had a sample of this kind of legislation the other day in the labor arbitration bill. We passed it in great haste, but what good has come or what good can come from its enactment? The laborer is no better off, and there is nothing in the bill that will help to make him better off. The farmers are before us now just as the Knights of Labor were then. They are asking us for bread; let us see to it that we do not give them a stone.

In looking at the question it must be borne in mind that the powers of Congress are limited by the Constitution. Under Article X the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. Congress has the power, under section 8 of Article I, to lay and collect taxes, but that power is coupled with the condition that such taxes are necessary "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." By virtue of this power taxes were levied and collected during the war and for a long time thereafter on matches, patent medicines, perfumery, &c. From this fact the advocates of the pending bill argue that we have now the right to tax oleomargarine. But are the conditions the same? At that time we were in sore distress for means to carry on the war and pay our debts; while now we have a redundant Treasury and bills before us to reduce the surplus revenues. The proposition to tax oleomargarine is not, therefore, intended as a revenue measure. No one, as matter of fact, will claim that it is. It has a latent object, which all of us feel but which none of us care publicly to avow.

Mr. Chairman, I will now send to the desk the bill which I have prepared as a substitute, and which I feel assured is free from all constitutional objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of artificial butter in the District of Columbia and in the Territories and Government reservations, and to regulate commerce in such butter with foreign nations and among the several States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the purposes of this act "natural butter" is defined to be the substance produced from the milk of the cow by churning, as commonly made and known by the name of "butter" prior to the year 1870; and all other substances made in imitation of "natural butter," or intended as a substitute therefor, are defined to be "artificial butter."

SEC. 2. That all artificial butter, when manufactured in the District of Columbia, or in any of the Territories, or in any place over which the jurisdiction of the United States is exclusive, shall be colored by the manufacturer with alkanet or other harmless pigment, so as to give it throughout a well-defined pink color.

SEC. 3. That the importation and exportation of artificial butter, unless colored as aforesaid, is prohibited.

SEC. 4. That artificial butter shall not be brought from any of the States into the District of Columbia, nor into any of the Territories, nor into any place over which the jurisdiction of the United States is exclusive, unless it is colored as aforesaid; nor shall artificial butter be carried from one State into another, unless the laws of the State into which it is carried, both as to its manufacture and sale in such State, are strictly complied with.

SEC. 5. That the sale of artificial butter, unless colored as hereinbefore required, is prohibited in the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and in all places over which the jurisdiction of the United States is exclusive.

SEC. 6. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for a term of not less than one month and not more than one year.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to review the provisions of the substitute in detail with a few running remarks. The first section divides butter into two kinds—one natural and the other artificial. "Natural butter" is defined to be that which is produced from the milk of the cow by churning, and, for further and fuller identification, a period antedating the invention of oleomargarine is fixed, so as to allow of the salting and coloring practiced by the older butter-makers.

All other is declared to be "artificial butter." It makes no difference how the compound is made, what the process, nor what the ingredients—be they lard, beef-fat, cotton-seed oil, or what not—it is all "artificial butter."

The second section requires that all "artificial butter" manufactured in the District of Columbia, in the Territories, or in the Government reservations must be colored pink.

This section is clearly constitutional, for Congress has power under clause 17 of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution "to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over" the District of Columbia and "over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings; and under clause 2 of section 3 of article 4 Congress has also power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

When "artificial butter" is manufactured in any of the places specified, it must be colored, by the manufacturer, pink. We go straight to the fountain-head, to the manufacturer. Before it leaves his establishment, the coloring must be done. Once done, I think it will be pretty difficult for any one, into whose hands the article may subsequently come, to undo it. When the fat is in the fluid state, the pigment can be applied, and a little lump will leaven the whole mass. I have suggested "alkanet," which is the root of a harmless plant and commonly used by druggists to color ointments. Many of you have no doubt seen a lip-salve of a delicate pink. It is colored with alkanet. Alkanet is soluble in fats and volatile oils, and being quite inexpensive, is just what is wanted to color oleomargarine.

Mr. Chairman, I believe there is no way of effectually regulating the sale of artificial butter except by coloring it in the hands of the manufacturer. No system of branding or labeling will amount to anything. The labels in the store of the retailers will be concealed or destroyed. The signs required to be displayed by boarding-house keepers and restaurants will be neglected or placed in obscure corners where they can not be seen. Let the article be colored pink, and all trouble is removed at once. A child two years of age sent to the grocer for a pound of butter would know if offered the pink substitute that it was not getting what was wanted.

This is the only way to get rid of the deception and it is a way which will prove acceptable to the manufacturers themselves, if there is any sincerity or consistency in their professions. In their circulars they claim that their oleomargarine is a sweet, wholesome article, and that the poorer classes are crying for it. They complain that their sales are interfered with by the inferior grades of dairy butter. They think it unfair for this poor butter, as they call it, to come in competition with their superior oleomargarine.

Then let them color their goods pink and the farmers will not be able to cheat them any longer. Every one will know just what he is buying.

But it has been asked, has Congress the right to compel a manufacturer to color his goods with any particular color? I answer, yes; if the manufacturer is under the jurisdiction of the United States, and Congress thinks that coloring is the best method to regulate the sale so as to guard against deception. The sole object of all legislation is to put an ear-mark on the counterfeit stuff, so that it will be sold for what it actually is. We have just as much right to order it colored as we have to direct that it should be put up in a particular kind of box or branded in a certain way.

Mr. Chairman, there is a sort of retributive justice in the bill I have proposed. We hoist these oleomargarine fellows with their own petard. In order to sell their stuff they have been coloring it yellow in imitation of real butter. All that we propose to do now is to compel them to give up the stolen color and adopt some other. The one I suggest—pink—is a beautiful and attractive one. It is a great favorite with cooks in garnishing their dishes. Just think how our appetites will be whetted when we sit down to the table with a plate of oleomargarine before us delicately tinted like a mound of strawberry ice cream.

It is argued, however, that if my substitute should become a law, and the various States should follow it up with similar legislation, it would put a complete stop to the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine. It is claimed that if colored pink none could be sold—not because of the color, but because people would know what it is, and knowing what is, they would not buy it. I am inclined to think there is but little in this objection. I am disposed to agree with the oleomargarine manufacturers that the opposition to their goods is owing to prejudice, and I think when they come to color them pink and the people get habituated to their use (if they ever do) the prejudice will wear away.

Mr. Chairman, the third section of my bill prohibits the importation and exportation of "artificial butter" except it is colored pink. Can any one find fault with this section? Congress has the right to regulate commerce between the United States and foreign nations. It will be noticed that I put a ban upon the exportation as well as on the importation. The pending bill does not. It increases the tax to 15 cents a pound on imported oleomargarine, but allows it to be exported free of tax. Why this discrimination? It seems to me that commercial honesty as well as self-interest requires that the tax should be the same for exportation as for importation. The great cry of the dairymen has been that our exports of butter, which amounted in value to $6,690,687 in 1880, had dwindled in 1883 to $2,290,665, and the reason assigned is that oleomargarine and the distrust which its exportation excites have driven our genuine butter out of the foreign market. If this is so, we should not, by remitting the tax, put a premium upon the exportation of oleomargarine.

The first clause of the fourth section forbids the bringing of "artificial butter" into the District of Columbia or the Territories unless it is colored pink. If Congress has the right to regulate the manufacture in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, it also has the right to regulate the sale by prescribing the conditions upon which it shall be brought in.

The second clause of the fourth section forbids the carrying of "artificial butter" from one State into another unless the laws of the State into which it is carried are complied with. Nothing unconstitutional about this! Congress has the power to regulate commerce between the several States. This provision is a far-reaching one. It leaves the subject with the States, where it properly belongs. All that a State has to do is to pass a law requiring oleomargarine to be colored pink. Then the national law steps in and prevents the introduction from another State.

I have now given the features of the bill I shall offer as a substitute.

It has one very material advantage over the bill under discussion, and that is its unquestioned constitutionality. It will control the matter in the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and Government reservations, and between the States and with foreign nations. It points out the way in which the States can also control the matter for themselves if they are disposed to do so.

An objection has been raised to my bill, that it does not provide the machinery for its execution. It does not need any. The police powers of the District are adequate for the purpose. By stopping the fraud at the fountain head, we circumscribe the points to be watched. There are probably about fifty oleomargarine factories in this country, and we have five million farmers to watch them.

Mr. Chairman, I approached the consideration of this subject with the most violent prejudices. I have always looked upon oleomargarine as a villainous compound unfit for human food. So great has been my dread of the stuff that for years I have refrained from eating butter except in places of undisputed honesty. I am not like my friend from Georgia who confessed to indifference on the subject so long as he did not know what he was eating. His philosophy is like that offered to Othello:

> He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen,
> Let him not know it, and he's not robb'd at all.

I insist, sir, upon knowing what I am eating, and if I have any suspicions I prefer to go hungry.

Notwithstanding all that I have read about the cleanliness, purity and healthfulness of oleomargarine, I can not divest myself of my prejudices against it. But, sir, I do not propose to let my prejudices sway my judgment when I come to legislate on the subject. I must recognize the fact that the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine is a legitimate industry, and I am forced, upon all the testimony, to believe that its use is not deleterious to public health. Hence, it can not be suppressed, restricted, or discriminated against. I am of opinion, however, that the sale of the stuff as butter and for butter prices is a gross swindle, which should be guarded against by proper laws; and for the same reasons as those which lead us to shut up Peter Funk shops or prevent the sale of pinchbeck jewelry.

Much has been said in this debate about protecting the farmers. I do not believe the farmers are asking for any protection. All that they want is to have "artificial butter" sold for what it actually is. Do this for them and they can take care of themselves. It is the unfair competition of which they complain. They do not want their genuine butter to compete in the market with a counterfeit article. In this respect they are like the honest merchant who fears competition with the smuggler. The smuggler who pays no duty can undersell the merchant who does. Laws are made for the prevention of smuggling. The enforcement of such laws gives incidental protection to the honest merchant. This is the kind of protection the farmer demands, and he is entitled to it.

In proof of this fact, let me read a letter I received a few moments since from one of the most intelligent and successful farmers in my district:

MIDDLE HOPE, May 24, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I am much interested in your bill (H. R. 8840) "to regulate the manufacture and sale of artificial butter," &c. Should it become a law, without great inconsistency on their part, manufacturers of the article could not oppose it.

2. There is no question of its constitutionality.

3. Its enforcement would require but little expenditure of time or money.

4. Every State in the Union would undoubtedly adopt its provisions, and the business would then stand on its merits, as every legitimate business should.

I am too busy to write at length on this subject, as I wish, but will heartily thank you for taking hold of the only feasible plan that has been agitated for the relief of the dairy interest, and hope it will be adopted.

Probably some officers should be designated to enforce its provisions.

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM D. BARNS.

Hon. LEWIS BEACH.

And now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let me say one other word in regard to the pending bill. I do not like it for the reasons I have given. Some say it is not constitutional; others claim that it is. I have a doubt upon this point. I do not claim that my opinion is superior to that of all others. I may be mistaken. For that reason I shall give the farmer the benefit of the doubt and vote for the bill. But I hope that the committee will adopt the substitute I shall offer at the proper time.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. VAN SCHAICK] has promised me forty-five minutes of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman to yield that time now.

Mr. DUNHAM. I simply stated that that it might be understood.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill, no matter what may be said about it or what may be claimed, is nothing more or less than for the purpose of effecting an advance in the price of butter. It may be claimed it is for the purpose of driving out something some persons may think is injurious to health, and, thinking so, may charge so without any particular evidence to substantiate his proposition.

The bill proposes to make the tax upon the manufacturer of oleomargarine higher than upon any other manufactured product in this country. In other words, it proposes to make the tax larger than upon anything within the whole range of the internal-revenue system of taxation. For instance, in the following list, to which I shall call attention, it will be seen that there is no tax placed on a distiller; and I do not believe that any defender of this bill will make the claim here that the product of this manufacture is worse than the product of the distillery.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. What is the tax on a gallon of whisky?

Mr. DUNHAM. The rectifier of less than 500 barrels pays a tax of $100 per annum; the rectifiers of 500 barrels or over pays $200 per annum. For some unknown reason it is proposed in this bill that the manufacturer of oleomargarine shall pay a tax of $600. In that respect, Mr. Chairman, I consider the bill or proposition as an unfair one, to say the least of it, and at the proper time I shall ask the committee to reduce the tax assessed on the manufacturer of this article to the amount that is now required to be paid by the manufacturer of whisky. I could go through this whole list and show the several taxes upon articles under the internal-revenue system, and it would be seen that in none of them is there anything that approaches the tax which is proposed to be levied by this bill.

Mr. FREDERICK. Let me ask the gentleman if he can tell the relative cost of oleomargarine and whisky?

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not know what it costs to manufacture oleomargarine.

Mr. FREDERICK. Then I can tell the gentleman; it costs about 9 cents a pound, while whisky costs about 7 cents a gallon. Now, whisky is taxed 90 cents a gallon, and it is proposed to tax oleomargarine 10 cents a pound.

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the cost of manufacturing an article has anything to do with the subject of taxation as proposed in this part of the bill. The general proposition on which the internal-revenue laws are based, as I understand it, is this: That it would tax the manufacture of the article a certain amount, not particularly for the purpose of deriving revenue, for that was expected to be derived from the tax on the manufactured article, but the assessment was levied upon the manufacturer so as to compel him to take out his license. Why then should the license charged the manufacturer of oleomargarine be more than is required of a manufacturer to take out a license under the internal-revenue laws to make whisky?

Mr. FREDERICK. It is not so much.

Mr. DUNHAM. You take the wholesale dealer in malt liquors. The Government taxes him $50 per annum. The wholesale dealer in leaf-tobacco is taxed $12. You propose to tax the wholesale dealer in oleomargarine under the provisions of this bill $480.

It seems to me to be unreasonable in any light that you look at it. Retail dealers in leaf-tobacco pay a tax of $250, and on monthly sales above the rate of $500 per annum they pay 30 cents for every dollar in excess of such rate. Manufacturers of cigars pay $6. Peddlers of tobacco of the first class (more than two horses or other animals) pay a tax of $30, the peddlers of the second class $15, and of the third class $7.20. Brewers of less than 500 barrels pay $50 per annum; 500 barrels or over, $100 per annum. I cite these instances to show the tax upon other manufactured products, and I can see no reason why the tax upon this product, so far as the manufacturer's tax is concerned, should be anything in excess of the other internal-revenue taxes of the country.

Now, I said in the beginning of my remarks that I believed the object of this bill to be to raise the price of butter. It is not so much that it is injurious to the health of the people (for the bill allows the manufacture and consumption of oleomargarine provided you pay the tax) as it is to enhance the price of butter. It is very bad and very injurious to health we are told, but if it pays the tax upon it the Congress of the United States, notwithstanding the injury it does, proposes to allow the people to eat it and enjoy the consequences. The entire object of the taxation is for the purpose of preventing if possible its manufacture altogether.

Now, gentlemen here think it proper to prevent the manufacture of the article. I do not agree with them in that view, nor do I agree that the measure will result in accomplishing that purpose. We have reached in this stage of the bill what might be called a farmers' panic. A great number of members here apparently have reason to believe that there is danger in this sort of legislation, but they do not see their way clear to vote against the proposition on account of the probability of its affecting votes perhaps in the coming elections. It does seem to me, sir, that gentlemen ought to rise above a consideration of that character, and vote upon any great question coming before Congress in the way they really believe it ought to be carried and not with any view of protecting their interests in coming elections.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. How many towns do you represent?

Mr. DUNHAM. Thirteen towns, besides part of the city of Chicago.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. You have many oleomargarine constituents, have you not?

Mr. DUNHAM. I will say to the gentleman that I am part owner of four farms myself, and have some interest in dairy products.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I understand that you are a butter-maker then.

Mr. DUNHAM. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to take up a great deal of time in this discussion; but I have a few protests against this legislation; and for the benefit of the gentleman from Iowa (who I see is not in his seat), I will say that one thing is overlooked, and that is that in making this attempt to advance the price of butter he overlooks the fact that butter is no lower to-day than anything else in comparison with what the farmer has for sale. My business for the past twenty-five years has given me opportunity to know something of the desire of farmers to receive fair compensation for their labor. No one more than myself regrets the low prices that the cereals, pork product, and cattle are now bringing, and I firmly believe that the permanent prosperity of our country depends very largely on good liberal compensation for farm labor.

It is certainly a very short time since it was considered impossible for wheat to sell below a dollar per bushel; and it was the practice of men who dealt in the article whenever it touched the dollar mark to buy it for all there was in it, and they were usually successful, as my friend from Iowa [Mr. FREDERICK] perhaps can state. But in the natural course of events it seems that wheat has declined to 75 cents.

Mr. FREDERICK. That is because the means of communication by land and water have extended to the ends of the earth, bringing us into contact with cheaper labor and other fields of production.

Mr. DUNHAM. There may be more in it than that. Why should not the price of butter decline at the same time? Butter selling to-day at the price it does brings as much in proportion as anything else the farmer can raise. He does as well on his butter at 20 or 25 cents as on his wheat at 75 cents, and considering what he has to buy perhaps as well as when prices were much higher.

Mr. FREDERICK. But we do not like to take 12 or 15 cents for butter when we have to do so on account of the adulterated article that enters into competition.

Mr. DUNHAM. If you do not like to take 12 or 15 cents, make good butter, and do not buy oleomargarine to mix with it and then ship it to city people for pure butter.

Mr. FREDERICK. Take the statistics of all the expositions——

Mr. DUNHAM. I should be glad to have the gentleman from Iowa make a speech, but not in my time.

Mr. FREDERICK. The gentleman should not have referred to me then.

Mr. DUNHAM. You may take the price of anything that is raised upon the farm, I care not what it is, whether it is wheat or oats or corn or vegetables, and you will find they have declined like everything else.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. Since the Democratic party came in.

Mr. DUNHAM. Just as the clothing you buy and the hats and caps you purchase, they have gone down in price. Farmers' beef has gone with them, and the butter has gone with the rest. And if we, by legislation or by taxing a product in order to force up the price of butter, can succeed in this case, in the next Congress another large interest or large class in the country will apply to us to tax something else, so that they can keep up the price of their product.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the originators of this bill are not particularly anxious as to this 10 cents. I understand that if the principle of the bill can be accepted, they are willing to allow this proposed tax to be reduced. I shall test that proposition at the proper time by offering an amendment to reduce the figure to a nominal sum.

I will now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a dispatch which expresses the opinion of the Board of Trade of Chicago on this matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, May 11, 1886.

Hon. R. W. DUNHAM,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The following preamble and the resolution were presented by the provision inspection committee to the directors of the board of trade and adopted by them this p. m. unanimously:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

Whereas certain parties have petitioned Congress to place a tax of 10 cents per pound on oleomargarine or butterine; and

Whereas such a tax is as unreasonable and unjust as it would be to tax butter or any article of home food; and

Whereas the adoption of such a measure would completely destroy a large and growing industry, and furthermore deprive the public of an article of food wholsome and economical, and furthermore cause a loss of millions of dollars to the stock-raising interests of this country:

Be it resolved, That the Chicago Board of Trade enters its protest against the adoption of such a bill, and prays Congress to defeat it, recognizing, as it does, that this proposed tax is asked simply to further the dairy interests, to the injury and complete destruction of the manufacture of oleomargarine or butterine, an industry which has produced an article of food at once pure, wholesome, and economical and acceptable, and, by reason of the growing demand for oleomargarine, has added to the value of every bullock at least $4 per head, thereby enhancing and promoting the farm and stock-raising interests, and placing within the reach of all an acceptable, economical, and wholesome article of food.

And be it further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

N. M. NEELD, Chairman.
S. A. KENT.
HENRY BOTSFORD.
C. J. SINGER.
JOHN BEASLEY.

Mr. DUNHAM. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] yesterday that 200,000 pounds of this product are made per day in the city of Chicago. I hold in my hand a dispatch signed by the parties that probably make more of it than anybody else and perhaps as much as is made in the country outside of Chicago.

And I wish to say that any statement that has been made that 200,000,000 pounds per annum are made of this product I have every reason in the world to believe to be untrue. There is probably no place in the United States where more of this article is made than in the city of Chicago; and this dispatch tells me that the total manufacture in Chicago and vicinity during the past year is about 20,000,000 pounds. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois would carry 60,000,000 pounds per annum, whereas the total product in Chicago and vicinity is about twenty millions.

As I have intimated, one of the largest manufacturers of this product is in Chicago. The firm is a very large packing company, probably known all over the world. I doubt if there is a place of any prominence whatever in the United States or in Europe but where they have their correspondents, and they ship their products from the hog and cattle to all parts of the world. This firm employ in the city of Chicago about one hundred and fifty men in their office attending to their correspondence and their orders in the enormous business which they do.

In the city of Chicago in the year 1885 there were packed 4,928,730 hogs, of which the firm of Armour & Co. killed and packed 1,126,157. There were slaughtered of cattle in Chicago in 1885 1,334,775, of which Armour & Co. slaughtered 325,151, Fairbank & Co. 217,419, and Swift & Co. 429,483.

I have given these figures because one or two gentlemen have referred to this firm of Armour & Co., and I happen to know them and know them well, and I know them to be as high-toned and honorable merchants as these gentlemen or any others ever knew. In connection with this matter I may state that I have a circular upon the subject which I will publish in connection with a sworn statement I will soon present.

This affidavit bears upon the product itself and states distinctly and under oath how and from what the product is made. No matter how much gentlemen may stand up here and assert and no matter how many men may go before the Committee on Agriculture and talk about putting dead dogs and dead cats into this product, I say to you, gentlemen, this is false. In the very nature of things, if they put such articles into the product it would be spoiled and would never bring anything. You may frighten people into such a belief, but do not take good business men for fools. Men who have the brains to build up great industries, the ability to carry on enterprises that help and encourage the life of the nation, give employment to hundreds of men, are not going to injure or ruin their own interests. It is not within the bounds of reason to suppose that such a thing is done. I send to the Clerk's desk the affidavit I have referred to, which speaks for itself, and in connection with the affidavit I will print the circular to which I have referred.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Cook County, ss:

Philip D. Armour, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a resident of the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, and that he is a member of the firm of Armour & Co.

Deponent further says that said firm of Armour & Co., in the course of their business, makes and sells oleomargarine and butterine, and that this deponent knows of his own knowledge the materials and the methods used by said firm in the making of said products. They are as follows:

METHODS OF MANUFACTURE.

The fat is taken from the cattle in the process of slaughtering, and after thorough washing is placed in a bath of clean, cold water and surrounded with ice, where it is allowed to remain until all animal heat has been removed. It is then cut into small pieces by machinery and cooked at a temperature of about 150 degrees until the fat in liquid form has separated from the fibrine or tissue; then settled until it is perfectly clear. Then it is drawn into graining vats and allowed to stand a day, when it is ready for the presses. The pressing extracts the stearine, leaving the remaining product, which is commercially known as oleo oil, which, when churned with cream or milk, or both, and with usually a proportion of creamery butter, the whole being properly salted, gives the new food product, oleomargarine.

In making butterine we use neutral lard, which is made from selected leaf lard in a very similar manner to oleo oil, excepting that no stearine is extracted. This neutral lard is cured in salt brine for forty-eight to seventy hours at an ice-water temperature. It is then taken and, with the desired proportion of oleo oil and fine butter, is churned with cream and milk, producing an article which, when properly salted and packed, is ready for market.

In both cases coloring matter is used, which is the same as that used by dairymen to color their butter. At certain seasons of the year, namely, in cold weather, a small quantity of salad oil made from cotton seed is used to soften the texture of the product, but this is not generally used by us.

Deponent further says that no other material or substance except as above stated is used by Armour & Co. in making oleomargarine or butterine.

Deponent further says that he has read the statement made in a report of the Committee on Agriculture to the House of Representatives purporting to give the materials used in making oleomargarine and butterine, and he says that none of the materials or substances therein enumerated are used by Armour & Co. in making said products, or either of them, except as herein stated.

Deponent further says that he has read a letter dated May 19, 1886, signed Armour & Co., Swift & Co., George H. Hammond & Co., N. K. Fairbank & Co., and Samuel W. Allerton, a copy of which is hereto attached, and he says that the same is the letter of the parties whose names are attached thereto, and that the statements therein made so far as the same relate to Armour & Co. are true, and so far as they relate to the other parties signing said letters, he upon information believes them to be true.

And this deponent further deposes and says that no ingredient is or ever has been used by said firm of Armour & Co. in the manufacture of said oleomargarine and butterine which is in any way injurious to health.

PHILIP D. ARMOUR.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22d day of May, 1886.
[SEAL.] EVERETT WILSON, Notary Public.

DEAR SIR: So much misapprehension seems to exist in the public mind regarding the component parts and process of manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine that, in view of the false and exaggerated statements and "reports" engendered and promulgated by the so-called "dairy interest," the undersigned, being among the largest manufacturers in the country of these new "food products," consider the present an opportune time for laying the matter frankly before the people and before Congress—where prohibitory legislation is now being sought—in the hope that a full statement of the actual facts concerning these much-abused articles may insure a fair hearing and tend to remove the false impressions which may have been created by the misstatements of interested persons.

Physicians, chemists, and health officers in various parts of the country have pronounced them wholesome articles of food, in no way deleterious to health; and the daily increasing demand for them shows their hold upon popular favor—not as imitations of butter, but as new food products and most desirable substitutes for the medium grades of butter.

The report of the Committee on Agriculture to the House of Representatives accompanying the bill reported by it, is so manifestly unfair that we are sure that its effect will be destroyed by its own absurdity. Of the fifty alleged ingredients mentioned in the report only three are ever used, and those so changed and improved in character from what the report would lead the public to believe that they practically make the whole list a falsehood. The component parts of oleomargarine and butterine are oleo oil, neutral lard, fresh cream and milk—some makers use buttermilk—choice creamery butter, fine dairy salt, and clear cold water. The coloring matter used is precisely the same as that universally used by all dairymen and butter-makers. At certain seasons of the year a very small quantity of fine salad oil, which is produced from selected cotton-seed oil, is occasionally, but not generally, used to soften the texture of the product. The oleo oil above mentioned is made from the choicest fats of beef cattle, rendered at an approximate temperature of 150°. The neutral is made from selected leaf-lard only and rendered in a similar way and at about the same temperature, producing a clear and odorless product, which is put into a bath of clean, cold brine, containing nothing but salt and water, for forty-eight hours; after which, with the proper proportions of oleo oil and the finest creamery butter, the product is churned with cream and milk, salted and colored, and packed for market. We use nothing else.

This is all there is concerning the manufacture of these products, and about which political dairymen have published so many falsehoods. We unhesitatingly affirm that these products are not made by any secret process, nor under any "patent" whatever. While it is true that several patents for making butterine were obtained a few years ago, in order to secure government protection against the French Mége patent prior to its expiration, we do not, nor do we know of any manufacturer who does, make make use of any of the processes covered by those patents. Our factories are always open for public inspection, as hundreds of people can testify, and we consider such visitations as marks of special favor. We are ready and willing to furnish to members of Congress, or to any committee they may appoint, all detailed information which they may desire, both as to the materials used and the whole process of making these products. The manufacture of these articles is practically an open industry in Europe, and it is a positive fact that in this country it increases the value of beef-cattle nearly $3 per head by the utilization of the oleo oil above described; and in addition to all these points in favor of the articles themselves, their manufacture is a legitimate industry, which benefits both the consumer and the farmer, and deserving of positive protection rather than attempted destruction. We are very willing that these products shall stand on their own merits, and we do not oppose measures honestly intended to bring about that result, but we do protest against legislation by Congress prohibitory in its character and intended to crush out one industry in favor of another.

In corroboration of our statements we append copies of letters written by competent authorities who have recently examined these products and the method of working them, and hope that they may assist in carrying conviction to all minds, aside from the assurances that we have herewith respectfully submitted.

ARMOUR & Co.

SAM'L W. ALLERTON.

CHICAGO, May 15, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: It gives us pleasure to say to you that we have recently visited your factory at the Union Stock-Yards in this city, and thoroughly examined the whole process of the manipulation and manufacture of butterine and oleomargarine. We cheerfully testify that we consider the products cleanly, palatable, and wholesome food products, containing nothing injurious or detrimental to health, but on the contrary, cheap and desirable substitutes for the medium grades of dairy butter.

Yours, respectfully,

CYRUS EDSON, M. D.
OSCAR C. DE WOLF, M. D.

Messrs. ARMOUR & Co., Chicago.

ILLINOIS STATE BOARD OF HEALTH, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Springfield, Ill., May 17, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: While engaged in an official investigation with regard to the slaughtering of beef at the Union Stock-Yards, accompanied by Dr. Cyrus Edson, food inspector of the New York board of health, and Dr. O. C. De Wolf, health commissioner of Chicago, recently, I witnessed your process for the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine. By what I saw I am convinced that it is conducted with the most scrupulous cleanliness; that nothing in the manufacture or the material used is detrimental to health, and that the products are wholesome.

Very respectfully,

JOHN H. RAUCH, M. D.

To ARMOUR & Co.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have also two other affidavits of manufacturers of this product in Chicago, which I will not take time to read, as they are of precisely similar import. One of them is made by Mr. Gustavus F. Swift, of the firm of Swift & Co., and the other by Mr. Guy F. Gosman, of the firm of N. K. Fairbank & Co.

I have also a certificate of Dr. De Wolf, the health officer of the city of Chicago, and as it is quite short, I will read it. Dr. De Wolf says:

I am personally familiar with the manufacture and use of oleomargarine. It is absolutely a clean and wholesome food product, and I consider any legislation against it unjust and unnecessary.

OSCAR C. DE WOLF,
Commissioner of Health, City of Chicago.

I have also the following dispatch from Mr. A. M. Wright, president of the Chicago Board of Trade:

UNION STOCK-YARDS, ILLINOIS, May 25, 1886.

Hon. R. W. DUNHAM:

I witnessed, with some forty others, member of board trade, on Friday last, at Armour factory, the whole process of manufacture oleomargarine and butterine. All were united in expressing their gratification, and thoroughly convinced that the products are clean, wholesome, and desirable.

A. M. WRIGHT, President.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that these statements will make any difference in the vote of this House; but when it is charged that these products are made of such vile stuff as the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] have charged, it seems to me proper that the real facts should be made known.

I am authorized to say that the manufacturers of this product invite the closest scrutiny possible; that any Congressional or legislative committee, or any private individuals, are at any and all times at liberty to go to the city of Chicago and visit these manufacturing establishments and see how these products are made.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Are the manufacturers willing and desirous to have it known to all the people of America that their product is oleomargarine and not butter?

Mr. DUNHAM. They are perfectly willing. The manufacturers in Chicago make this oleomargarine as such; they brand it exactly what it is; they sell it for exactly what it is; its name is marked on the packages and boxes; their bills are made out for what it is. They have always done that, and they propose to continue to do it.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Do the people of the United States who consume this product, one in a hundred of them, know that it is oleomargarine and not butter?

Mr. DUNHAM. I can not answer that question. They can know it. You can go down to the market on Seventh street in this city, and you will find a sign inscribed in large, flaming red letters: "National Butterine Association." I was there myself this morning. I stood from fifteen to twenty minutes. I saw people come up and sample the article, and I did not see a single person go away without making a purchase. They were told distinctly what it was. They knew what it was. It has been sold there for several months, and the sales of it have averaged $300 per week.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman says the people who purchased this article knew what it was; but did they take the information home to their boarders? [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not know anything about that. You can go there, though, and the dealers will sell it to you for just what it is and not for anything else. I can say further to this House that the manufacturers of this product do not ask that it shall be sold for anything different from what it is.

Mr. PETTIBONE. You speak of the manufacturers, but I have asked you about the retail sellers who sell it to the people.

Mr. DUNHAM. If the retail dealer takes it out of the package, puts it into his ice-box, and sells it to you for butter, he, and not the manufacturer, is the man that deceives you.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I was not talking about the manufacturer particularly. I was asking about those who sell it to the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, as I have so much extra time I presume the House will have no objection to my taking five minutes to answer all these questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTIBONE. Now, if it be true that "the children cry" for this product, if it be true that the manufacturers do not desire to sell this article for anything else than what it really is, has the gentleman from Illinois any objection to a bill requiring the manufacturers to stamp or mark the article, so that every customer may know what it is?

Mr. DUNHAM. I have no objection to stamping it. I have said that the manufacturers do stamp it. They are willing to be required by law to stamp it. But in the name of the poor people who want to buy this article at a reasonable price we do object to a tax of 10 cents a pound.

Mr. GLASS obtained the floor.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If I can be recognized, I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS] give way for five minutes?

Mr. GLASS. I will do so, if it does not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will come out of the time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER]. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. DUNHAM. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH], who desires to ask me a question.

Mr. BEACH. If it should be found that the deception practiced in the sale of this article can not be controlled by a system of branding or labeling, would the manufacturers consent to color the article—pink, for instance? [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. I will say that the manufacturers in Chicago now use in coloring this product precisely the same article——

Mr. BEACH. As the butter-makers do. But there is the difficulty. Would these manufacturers consent that their product be colored pink so as to distinguish it from butter?

Mr. DUNHAM. Allow me to finish my answer. I say that the manufacturers of oleomargarine in Chicago use to-day precisely the same coloring that is used by the creameries in the district of my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS], and I do not believe they would have the slightest objection to adopting any color that you might designate.

Mr. BEACH. What we complain of is that they color this article the same as butter.

Mr. DUNHAM. We have no objection to any kind of coloring that may be required. You may adopt a law requiring the color to be pink or sky-blue or red or whatever you please.

Mr. BEACH. I would like to have a bill of that kind passed.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Make it sky-blue. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Now, Mr. Chairman, if any other gentleman desires to ask me a question in reference to this matter I am willing to answer it. I only say that the manufacturers are willing to do what I know they now do——

Mr. ROWELL. I wish to ask my colleague whether the "poor people" he spoke of a while ago are Armour & Co. and Swift & Co. and N. K. Fairbank & Co.

Mr. DUNHAM. About twelve thousand of the poor people of whom I speak are employed by Armour & Co.; and if there is any other private establishment in the United States that employs twelve thousand men I would like some gentleman to name it.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Has there been presented here in the way of petition a single protest from the people of the United States against the passage of this bill? And is it not a fact that there are now on file in this Capitol petitions signed by over seventy thousand farmers asking that the bill be passed?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether there are petitions from consumers——

Mr. SCOTT. Allow me to say further that all the protests which have come to this House——

Mr. DUNHAM. Wait a moment. Let me ask the gentleman whether he signed any of the petitions of which he speaks?

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. All right. Now, Mr. Chairman, I admit that there are in the room of the Committee on Agriculture petitions in favor of this bill; but, so far as I know, there is no petition here from any consumer in favor of this kind of legislation.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Have there been petitions from any consumer who wanted the spurious article?

Mr. DUNHAM. I have placed petitions in the box—and a large number of them—against this bill.

Mr. PETTIBONE. But they were from the manufacturers.

Mr. DUNHAM. No, sir, they were not. They were from Knights of Labor who buy this article and object to any attempt to force an advance of food products on them by legislation.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. Did they buy it knowingly?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Yes, that is the question.

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not dispute that the farmers ask for this bill. I stated that fact in advance, but I insist they come here and ask the passage of the bill for no other reason under heaven than that it tends to advance the price of butter. I do not blame them for wanting better prices. My sympathies are with them, but at the same time I claim the principle upon which we are proceeding is wrong. Honest farmers when they carefully consider this matter will in my judgment concede the correctness of this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time yielded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has expired.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. In order to accommodate the friends of the farmers I will yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I hope my colleague [Mr. GLASS] will give me five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I believe he yields to me.

Mr. GLASS dissented.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair requests gentlemen to resume their seats.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS], who is entitled to the floor, to yield for five minutes.

Mr. GLASS. I can not; my time has all been promised.

Mr. DUNHAM. It will not come out of your time, but out of the time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. GLASS. My time has all been promised, and I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS] will proceed.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time, when we shall have reached the appropriate section of this bill, it is my purpose to offer an amendment fixing the tax at 1 cent per pound instead of 10. I have not deemed it my duty to present a minority report, although I have found it impossible to concur with the views of the majority of the committee. I agree with the majority fully as to the necessity of some legislation, either State or national, that will compel the manufacturers of all butter imitations to stamp and identify their products, so that every purchaser and consumer may know precisely what he is buying. It is alleged that some of the States have tried and have failed to accomplish this.

I consider the powers and jurisdiction of the States ample to provide for every condition and emergency where the imitation butter is produced, sold, and consumed in the same State and where it is confined to the limits of the State within which it is manufactured. Congress has only the power over it of taxing it for revenue by subjecting it to the internal-revenue laws, and may have jurisdiction over it in two other contingencies, that is, as an article of interstate commerce and as an article of export. Save in these three instances Congress has no power to legislate in regard to it, the States not having conferred any such power on the United States. Now is it good policy to extend the internal-revenue laws so as to include additional articles not already subject to its provisions?

I doubt such a policy, and have hesitated to commit myself to it. Such a system of taxation is not in strict accord with our republican institutions, and has only been resorted to three times in the history of our Government, and each time to provide revenues to carry on war, and continued to pay war debts. It is hardly proper in a time of profound peace to extend the system seemingly with a view of perpetuating it. It is an unpopular system for raising revenue, and the execution of it is attended with difficulty, not infrequently provoking resistance and bloodshed; and I look to the time, not in the distant future, when we will have approached so near the extinguishment of our war debt that the entire system will be abandoned and no revenues collected in this way.

But with the view of compelling the manufacturers to more fully identify their products, I have consented to a tax of 1 cent on the pound. There is now turned out by the forty or fifty establishments manufacturing it about 200,000,000 pounds annually. A tax of 10 cents on the pound would bring in $20,000,000. This amount of revenue is not needed for any proper purposes of the Government, and, moreover, the tax would be excessive and unjust. One cent a pound would bring in $2,000,000, which would be ample to pay all the expenses of executing the law, and leave a handsome balance in the Treasury. I have no doubt but that much of this butter imitation is uncleanly, and not only unwholesome, but really deleterious to health, and some of it absolutely poisonous because of the acids used in its manufacture. I have been informed that more than one hundred patents have been taken out to be used in the manufacture of these compounds, some of which compounds are but little better than infamous; and while so much of it may be, and doubtless is, uncleanly and unfit for human food, I do not doubt that the industry may be made a legitimate one, and the products wholesome and nutritious food for man.

I admit that the power to tax it exists under the Constitution, and that the power is only limited by the necessities of the Government, but that the needs of the Government do not justify such excessive taxation as the bill proposes. The Government of the United States has no right to tax an industry out of existence, or to tax one industry oppressively for the benefit of another. While I sympathize with the dairymen and would gladly do them full justice, I can not go with them in their efforts to inflict great wrong and injustice upon a competing industry. I do them no injustice, for I know that they are a high-toned, honorable class, but I must say that the purpose of many of them is to destroy the oleomargarine industry, and for that purpose they have appealed to Congress.

This Government has once exercised its taxing power to the destruction of all the State and stock banks of issue, to the great injury of the people of nearly half the States, but there exists no such necessity for such legislation at this time. Invention, enterprise, and discovery must not be legislated against, but rather encouraged and rewarded. It is not the province of government to legislate an industry out of existence that promises good to mankind. And the authorities in support of the oleomargarine products being capable of becoming wholesome and nutritious articles of diet are too numerous and too high to be gainsaid. S. W. Johnson, Sheffield Scientific School of Yale College, said it, "A product that is entirely attractive and wholesome as food, and one that is for all ordinary culinary and nutritive purposes the full equivalent of good butter made from cream." S. W. Caldwell, of Cornell University, says, "Possessing no qualities whatever that can make it in the least degree unwholesome." And I could cite many other authorities of equally as high character for scientific attainments.

You can not stay the march of progress and invention; they have revolutionized industries and systems, and will do so again. When Galileo accepted the Copernican system and gave it to the world he was subjected to the tortures of the inquisition, yet it was established nevertheless as the true planetary system; and when Arkwright invented the spinning-jenny and the power-loom they caused riots and mobs, and so will other inventions. Thousands of good women all over the country once found what was then profitable employment at the old-time spinning-wheel and hand-loom. These have been entirely dispensed with in consequence of the improvement in machinery. And those who followed the old-time wheel and loom for a livelihood were driven to abandon them without any fault of theirs; and yet they did not appeal to government to put a tax on the improved appliances to protect them against the competition that was ruining them.

I remember that the census returns of 1860 showed that Tennessee was the largest producer of home-made manufactures of cotton and woolen fabrics in the Union. Her cotton and woolen fabrics were of the most superior character and finish, but cheaper products drove them out of existence. How is it now? Improved machinery and labor-saving inventions have literally annihilated this once prosperous industry. Notwithstanding this caused much distress and partial ruin of many, there was no remedy for it. And so it may be with the industry of the dairymen, but I scarcely think it will be so.

The live-stock exchanges of Chicago, Milwaukee, Kansas City, and other cities protest against the proposed legislation, and declare that the proposed tax, if carried into effect, will reduce the price of beef-cattle from one to two dollars per head, because the demand for the beef-tallow used in the manufacture is worth that much more than if sold to the soap-makers.

Whatever tends to diminish the cost of living or lessens the burden of the toiler should be favored and encouraged by government. This will sometimes work injury to individuals and classes, but the good of the individual must not stand in the way of the good of the many. But I apprehend no such dire calamities as have been pictured to us on this floor will befall the dairymen. Whether we tax these products or not, the dairy business will go on, and every family may have their pure dairy butter if they choose, and the dairymen will not be ruined and the comforts of mankind will be increased.

The States may and should pass stringent laws on the subject and punish severely all who shall sell these imitations as genuine butter; but we have no power here to enact such laws, except as a penalty of the violation of our revenue laws.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FREDERICK having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced agreement to the report of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

IMITATION OF BUTTER.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

Mr. GLASS. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], twenty minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], and the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I reserve my time.

Mr. HATCH. You had better take your time now, or you may not get it.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield me his time now and I will return it to him after a while.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will see you presently about it.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling to vote upon a measure of the importance and character of the one before the House without placing upon record some of the reasons which influence my vote and my action as a Representative.

In the course of my public services, which has extended over a period of seven or eight years as a member of Congress, I have of course seen many strange and remarkable things occur when measured and considered by the rules and principles which are supposed to govern parties and the principles of parties.

In fact I have come to doubt, Mr. Chairman, very seriously whether there is any party in the United States or not—any political party with fixed, definite, and well-ascertained principles—whose members adhere to those principles.

I have seen many strange bed-fellows in politics in the various changes and shiftings of parties and the pressure of measures and changing conditions, but I confess that I have never seen any measure brought before Congress which has brought together so many heretofore supposed inconsistent, antagonistic, and hostile elements.

When the debate on this bill shall have been finished we will find the free-trader standing side by side with the pig-iron protectionist, the advocate of the greatest amount of liberty, of the greatest measure of personal freedom to the individual, heretofore supposed the irreconcilable enemy of sumptuary legislation, standing side by side, hugged breast to breast, lying cheek by jowl, with the advocates of the blue laws and sumptuary legislation.

I have received during the pendency of this measure some of the most remarkable dispatches and messages and advices and petitions. They have come from the most unexpected quarters of the country and the most unexpected sources. The overtaxed and heavily-burdened cotton-planter, who has pleaded for free trade during all the days of his life and fought for it part of the time——

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. DUNN. No, I will not be interrupted at all.

I have seen the stalwart advocate of free trade petitioning here for the passage of the most outrageous measure of protection, the most unjustifiable measure of protection I have ever seen brought into Congress. And, on the other hand, I have heard and read and received petitions from that same class of confederate cotton-planters, Western greenback free-traders, and all that element, asking me to vote against the measure for the protection of the cotton-planting interest of the South and some of the interests of the West. Those who are for it are for it for protection, and those who are against it are against it for protection. If a bomb of dynamite had been placed underneath the old citadels and council chambers of parties, and they had all been blown up and scattered to the uttermost ends of the earth, and had fallen intermingled, and each one had been raised up from the place where he fell, speaking the new tongue and new language and new doctrine given by this measure, confusion could not have been more completely confounded. [Laughter.]

I am curious to know when my friend here, this stalwart free-trader [Mr. HATCH], the enemy of sumptuary laws, who has been the most unyielding champion of the rights of man, of freedom of action, of the privilege of individuals to eat, drink, and wear what they wish without legal hinderance—I am curious to know how and when he became converted to the doctrine of sumptuary legislation and protection. It will be something the whole country will be curious to find out, and will wonder over it when they do find it out. My friend from South Carolina says here is another, pointing to the gentleman from Mississippi. [Laughter.] Certainly. They are all around here. I begin to feel lonesome—like one who is in a strange land and among strangers. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Here is another.

Mr. DUNN. I know there is. The woods are full of them. Congress is full of them. The country is full of them. [Laughter.] I am only trying to express my amazement and astonishment it should be so.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. DUNN. The gentleman will pardon me; I can not.

Mr. MORGAN. I will give you five minutes of my own time if you will.

Mr. DUNN. Well, I have got this time; it is mine; but I do not know whether I will ever get that or not. [Laughter.] There is an old adage which says, "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush." The present is mine; the future I can not control.

Mr. MORGAN. You can not answer the question, maybe.

Mr. DUNN. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is an amusing thing, one of the most remarkable things I have ever known or seen. Why, before it came up here for consideration, I did not suppose that the committee that brought it into the House were really in earnest about it. I had no idea that it would receive any serious or strong support in the House. But when it came steaming in with its head-light burning pure butter [laughter] and the track fairly greased with oleomargarine, with a full train crew from the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] as conductor, I was astounded. It came as a revenue train on the revenue track, but going a contrary direction. There were two other heavily loaded trains standing on that track—the tariff bill and the bill to reform the internal-revenue service. These were headed the other way, slowly getting up steam and in search of a crew to run them. They had not enough help to move them, but they were headed in the right direction. This train was going the wrong way. It seemed to be a stray or runaway concern, a sort of wild-flyer.

We went into Committee of the Whole and we came to all sorts of measures for the reduction of taxation. My distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] asked the House the other day, turning to the Democratic side, "How came you here; what brought you here; who sent you here, and what did you come for? Was it to increase or to reduce the burdens of taxation? To reform the maladministration of public affairs, to reduce the number and the wages of public office, to reduce and lighten the burdens of taxation, to roll that log off the people; that is what you came for." But he obeyed his commission. We were all of us, as I thought, ready to support him. I was ready to support him. I was and am yet ready to support him in redeeming our oft-repeated promises to the people to reduce taxation. He brought in a measure here to reduce taxation. His colleague on the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], brought in another to reform and modify and in great measure remove the bad features of that most odious of our methods of taxation—the internal-revenue system.

The whole country has demanded both of these measures, to reduce tariff taxation and internal revenue. We promised it; our party promised it. The people commissioned us to do it; and yet when this butter-train was run up against those two measures which stood on the track, although they had posted up their Josh Billings regulations for running a railroad, "two trains are forbidden to pass each other on this track going in contrary directions," yet the conductor of that butter-train never put on a break, never even blew his whistle or reversed his engine, but steamed squarely up and telescoped, literally telescoped the other two, knocked them off the track, and went on without a jostle, and the track seemed to be greased for the occasion—fairly greased for him. [Laughter.]

Then I found that a good many other things could be killed by being choked to death with butter except the old fabled dog that was said to have been once choked in that manner. Beware that you do not choke the Democratic party to death with butter [laughter], I say to my friend from Missouri.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I am amazed, I lack words to express my astonishment, that the American Congress could be absolutely converted, deliberately converted, into a great wrestling-ground, a gymnasium where all the business athletes of the country come to wrestle for supremacy, a prize-ring where jobbers come to blows and where the big jobs knock the little jobs out. I thought the policy that ought to guide parties and men commissioned to administer the affairs of this Government was the policy that would adhere to the public interests, pushing aside the private interests, private jobbery, and private enterprises, although they are alleged to be for the public good. The Committee on Agriculture seems to have resolved itself into a sort of deputy Ways and Means Committee, and have brought in to us here this nondescript revenue bill headed the wrong way.

This bill in the first place proposes to reverse the engine and turn back up the hill, steam away back up the old road of internal-revenue taxation and rehabilitate in all its odiousness that old offensive system as it was in the era of espoinage, inquisition, search, and seizure, from which no private interest, no private citizen was exempt, his household was not exempt, his private accounts and affairs were not exempt, nothing was exempt. We have turned square back, going up that old track again. If there is any system of taxation, if there has ever been any one system more odious than another in this country it has been that internal-revenue system. It has brought from the groaning hearts of the people the bitterest and deepest imprecations and curses upon this Government that ever were uttered against any other policy or any other measure of taxation.

The people have been almost imbittered to the point of disloyalty. If anything can make men disloyal to their government it is a system of taxation that invades them in that odious, outrageous, and offensive manner. It tempts and strains the loyalty of the people. A government can never have in power that security which it has in the affections of its own people, in a willing, cheerful, free acceptance of its laws, its policy, its administration. That is the best sheet-anchor of a government. No measure of power, however strong it may be, can give that security to a government which the free and generous consent of the people to its laws can give. We turn back at a time too when we had reached the very confines of that blessed day of emancipation, when the flickering star of hope was beginning to give its gleams of promise to us, and the whole country was ready to exclaim, "Hail, holy light!"

Suddenly we are turned back to that dark era of odious, offensive legislation. For what? Not for revenue. The Government does not need that. The whole country demands emancipation from taxation. Every consideration of public duty compels us to give the people that relief.

Gentlemen say this is not a revenue bill. Then it comes here under false pretenses, and unjustly, and under false pretense avails itself of the privileges of a revenue bill upon this floor. If it is not a revenue bill it is worse—it is a job—one industry against another. And along in the line of protection the richest and the strongest industry wins the battle in the scramble in this arena where they all come to wrestle for a blessing with more resolution and persistence than that with which Jacob wrestled with the angel of the Lord. He was wrestling for a genuine blessing; this is for a curse.

A MEMBER. That was Jacob.

Mr. DUNN. Yes; Jacob was the fellow who did that wrestling. But here they wrestle for a curse. They come for gain. It is the result of the system of protection in all its forms, phases, and ramifications that it fosters monopoly. The greater combinations crush and destroy the lesser and win the favor of the Government, under which they rob and plunder the people.

Now, if this is not for revenue, then it is for taxation, to prevent the manufacture and increase the price of a cheap food commodity. Gentlemen in their overzeal have gathered—I will not say as scavengers, for that would be an odious expression—but they have gleaned with wonderful industry all the unreasonable, improbable, outrageous, and filthy stories with which these people have filled the newspapers for years past, and have unloaded it all in this House. I have read as bad stories as the worst told here about almost every article of food we commonly use.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUNN. I should like to have a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS] has twelve minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. GLASS. I promised the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] ten minutes, and I yield what other time I have to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. The only effect of this taxation is to increase the price of cheap food for the poor of the country. Like all other systems of protective taxation, you load up the burdens upon the poor, upon their necessaries of life. I have never heard of this compound called oleomargarine killing anybody. They say there are manufactured and sold some 200,000,000 pounds of it per annum. It is marvelous that it should have gone on to this extent without killing everybody in the country if it is the horrid compound it is said to be. We shall go on, I trust, inventing methods of producing cheap food and increasing our food supply.

It is the office, as the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] said to-day, it is the office of the States and they are clothed with full power to protect the people against unwholesome and poisonous foods that are deleterious to health. But who has the right to say what we shall eat? That is sumptuary legislation. If we may tax this article so as to prevent its use we may tax all other articles of food and limit quantity as well as quality. Why, sir, it is unhealthy to eat too much of anything. So Congress must lay a tax upon the additional ounces of our daily meals above that which may be adjudged to be healthy so as to prevent us from eating too much. They used to be stoned to death for gluttony in the old times.

Mr. Chairman, this is a dangerous, an alarming, and an ominous tendency in legislation. It is discouraging to the patriot who loves his country, who understands that that Constitution was ordained by the fathers to be the great palladium of liberty for man, the greatest that human ingenuity has ever invented, that it should be trampled under foot and disregarded, and the administration of the Government drawn away from that basis and from the limitations contained in the instrument and converted into a huge system of jobbery.

Here we have those who churn butter against those who manufacture butter struggling for Congress to intervene and license one and prohibit the other. It is the saddest position I have ever seen this House placed in. I have read no history of anything like this heretofore and it will be the most marvelous scene when we come to pass between the tellers or march up and answer to our names when the ayes and noes are called. After we get through with that little formality here I am afraid that we shall be in the condition of a distinguished gentleman whom I once heard of in this city. After dinner, late in the evening, perhaps early in the morning, it is said that with some assisting friends he reached the front of his residence—there were a number of them, quite a number—he rang the bell.

When his summons was answered, it is said a lady put her head out of the window and asked what was wanted. He asked if Mr. —— lived there—this was the name of the gentleman himself, and whose wife this was. She answered, he did. "Then," said he, "will you be kind enough to come down here and pick your husband out of this crowd and take him in?" [Laughter.] When we are through passing between the tellers and registering our names let us all send the request to our constituents to please come down here and pick out their representatives and take them home. They ought to go. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GLASS. I rise to a question of privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GLASS. I have been informed by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that the committee were censuring me for the position I am occupying on this question to-day.

Mr. HATCH. I beg the gentleman's pardon, he is mistaken.

Mr. GLASS. I understood you so.

Mr. HATCH. The committee were somewhat disappointed that the gentleman having taken up the hour in favor of the bill should yield it to those who have opposed it.

Mr. GLASS. I appeal to the chairman to correct that statement. I never stated which side I would occupy, and the chairman put me down by mistake as in favor of the bill, and then insisted I should have had the place assigned to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] in opposition to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was informed this was the unanimous report of the committee, and therefore supposed all the members of the committee were in favor of the bill. The gentleman came to the Chair and stated he was opposed to the bill in its present shape.

Mr. GLASS. If I have any time remaining, I give it to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. DUNHAM. I take it that a member of the committee has as much right to be converted to the honest side of this question as anybody else. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I, including that yielded to me by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I reserve that and beg some more from some other gentleman.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman is to have ten minutes of my time whenever the chairman will let him have it.

Mr. FUNSTON was recognized and yielded fifteen minutes to Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make my special acknowledgments to my friend from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON], because by the concession he has made me I am enabled to follow immediately after my distinguished Democratic friends on this side of the House. I wish to notice some of the remarks they have made and some of the politics they have presented here. When gentlemen come forward, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] did yesterday, and say that this is a bill to popularize, perpetuate, and extend the internal-revenue system, and that therefore he opposes it; when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] rises in his place and says that for once in his life he will walk over and shake hands with his distinguished friend upon the other side; when the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] rises and enters upon a humorous discourse, in the course of which he develops the fact that his opposition to this bill is based upon the internal-revenue feature of it, and then talks about the reduction of taxation and says that this bill proposes to increase taxation—when gentlemen talk in that way about this bill, I feel that I am under special obligation to my friend from Kansas for giving me the opportunity of speaking at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say here and now that as a member of the Committee on Agriculture I give my unqualified approval to this bill, and that I am the mover in that committee of the 10-cent tax. When gentlemen talk of the internal-revenue feature of the bill and oppose it upon that ground I desire to say to those gentlemen that that feature of the bill more than any other commended it to my mind. When I investigated the testimony in this case, looking at it carefully with a view to ascertaining the truth and doing justice to the public, having no interest whatever on the part of any of my constituents conflicting with that purpose, I took the view that here was an inviting opportunity to find another field of revenue without imposing any additional taxes upon the people, and I thought that if we could raise ten or twenty million dollars in this way it would help my friend from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], who is to bring forward presently a bill reducing taxation.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] facetiously asks the gentleman from Missouri how it happens that he, a free-trader, is found upon this side of the question. I do not know whether my friend from Missouri is a free-trader or not, nor do I care. This bill is not based upon any idea of that kind. This is a revenue bill, framed for the purpose of raising revenue, and when we come to deal with a measure of that kind it is the duty of this House to search for places where revenue can be raised, bearing as lightly as possible upon the people, and then to turn around and look for other quarters in which corresponding relief can be given to the people. When gentlemen talk about the constitutionality of this bill it is well to look and see whether they are not uttering the sentiments of the oleomargarine men and nobody else. Gentlemen say that we come here with this bill and seek to raise revenue when there is no need of revenue. This is indeed a happy goal we have reached! Able to run this great Government without money!!

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] says that this is simply a contest between the regular butter producer and the butter manufacturer, that there is no necessity whatever for this bill, and that it is brought forward in the interest of one set of producers for the purpose of suppressing another set of competing producers. I desire to enter here and now my solemn protest against that assertion, and, as a member of the committee, to declare that it is unfounded and not based upon fact. As a committee, our whole purpose was to arrive at a just and proper conclusion in this matter. We brought the dairymen before us and asked what they desired and what they complained of. We brought the oleomargarine men before us and asked what their desire was and what their complaint was. We brought the produce men before us and asked them what was their desire in the matter.

We consulted all the interests concerned, the dairymen, the oleomargarine makers, and the consumers; and having considered the whole question to the best of our ability, we brought forward this bill. When any man states here that it is not a revenue bill, but a measure framed for the purpose of suppressing one industry in the interest of another industry, I say that he speaks without knowledge of the facts. I deny that the bill was framed for any such purpose; and, speaking for the dairy interest and for the agricultural interest of the country, I deny that any representative of those interests ever appeared before the committee to ask for the suppression of this oleomargarine trade simply as a competitor of theirs. On the other hand, I assert that when gentlemen come here and make their arguments and produce their literature in opposition to this bill, they simply reproduce the arguments and the literature that were laid before the committee by the representatives of the oleomargarine interest.

You gentlemen come here and repeat the arguments made by Mr. Stern, the representative of Armour & Co., and of the oleomargarine interest. That gentleman, who is one of the brightest and keenest and most intellectual men I ever saw, came before the committee and delivered his address and was thoroughly cross-examined, and from that time to this the country has been flooded with literature on that side of the question, and it nearly all comes from his pen or is inspired by his genius. I have it here before me coming up from various portions of the country, purporting to represent the stock-exchange interest, the produce-exchange interest, and the labor interest, and I say that these various productions are in large measure identical in language with the argument of that gentleman which I hold in my hand. Furthermore, the protest and the explanation of the manufacturers of oleomargarine which have been presented here to-day by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] and read at the Clerk's desk are substantially and largely verbatim the same as the argument of the gentleman I have named. We asked these people what it was in this bill that they complained of, and I desire to call attention to what they have to say.

Mr. VAN EATON. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. With pleasure.

Mr. VAN EATON. Does my colleague mean to say that the country or the Treasury is in need of more reve ue than is now coming in?

Mr. MORGAN. I mean to say that the country needs money. I mean to say that we owe $1,500,000,000 to-day. Two hundred millions of dollars of it is now due. I mean to say that we have a Government which is expending $360,000,000 every year; that $80,000,000 will be required annually for the purpose of paying pensions; and in raising money to pay the indebtedness of the Government and for its current expenditures we need to raise it from the right source and to take off taxation where we have been raising it from wrong sources.

Mr. VAN EATON. One more question. How much more revenue ought we to raise than is now being raised from ordinary sources?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know. The Secretary of the Treasury says that next year, if the revenus do not increase, we shall be $24,000,000 short. Surely we need as much more as will be raised from this bill.

Mr. VAN EATON. Then I understand my colleague to say, as a member of the committee, that the bill proposing to levy this taxation was adopted solely for the purpose of raising revenue—needed revenue?

Mr. MORGAN. So far as I am concerned—I speak for myself alone—I voted for it simply because it opened up a new field especially commending itself to my mind for taxation and put this article side by side with whisky and tobacco. [Applause.] On that ground I stand. I ask the House to put taxation there, and take it off the blankets and the shoes and the clothing of the widows and orphans throughout the length and breadth of the land. [Applause.] If we are to have reduction, let us have it at the right place. The whole outcry here about internal-revenue taxation is raised by gentlemen who want to take the tax off whisky and tobacco and keep it on the blankets with which the poor widows and orphans of the country wrap themselves in winter.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. How many of the gentlemen who are ready to vote to impose this tax will vote to reduce or remove the taxation on blankets?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know. I hope enough will vote with me to do it. But I will say to my distinguished friend from Texas that when we can get $20,000,000 of taxation from this source—the quantity produced being as we understand 200,000,000 pounds—I think the taxation should be taken off something somewhere.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. How much revenue will you get if you pass this bill?

Mr. MORGAN. If what the oleomargarine people say is true, that oleomargarine sells as it does because it is better than butter and is not a fraud, we shall get $20,000,000. If those statements are not true, then this article will have to sink to an ignoble grave and die the death of a fraud. [Laughter.]

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Do you think if we pass this bill we shall get $20,000,000 of revenue, or $10,000,000, or $5,000,000, or $1,000,000 from this article?

Mr. MORGAN. Now the gentleman comes to the "milk in the cocoanut." I say if we pass this bill we shall unmask this business. If oleomargarine is the pure and virtuous thing it is represented to be—if there is truth in the representation of the great head center of the oleomargarine people who has testified that "heretofore the people have had bad butter on their tables, but now they have a sweet, delightful, and palatable article"—if this be true, oleomargarine will stand the test; but if it is a fraud it may not be able to stand the treatment.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. But shall we get any revenue from it?

Mr. MORGAN. If this article is what it is claimed to be, an honest article of trade, which people buy knowingly and because they like it, we shall get $20,000,000; and the revenue we thus get will be obtained from a proper source.

Mr. HAMMOND. If a man thinks we ought not to raise $20,000,000 additional revenue, ought he not to vote against this bill?

Mr. MORGAN. He ought, provided he thinks taxation should be continued on woolens and shoes and things of that kind, from which we wish to remove it. [Applause.] The simple question is, Where are you going to get money? That we must raise money to run the Government no man can deny. We must pay $80,000,000 annually as pensions to ex-soldiers, their widows and orphans; and no man can deny the duty of the Government in that respect. But when you come to talk about raising money, why should you speak about "suppressing an industry?" When gentlemen who oppose this bill get up here and say that we are adopting this form of taxation for the "suppression of an industry" they are simply repeating the slanders of the oleomargarine manufacturers. We must have revenue; there is no use talking about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say to the gentleman that I am proud to have him ask me a question, and I shall be glad to have any other Democrat on this floor ask me a question.

A MEMBER. How about Republicans?

Mr. MORGAN. I am talking to Democrats. I am a Democrat myself—one of the old "blue hen's chickens." [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, it is a very queer shade of color to-day. [Great laughter.] I understand the gentleman and others who have preceded him on his side of the question to maintain that 200,000,000 pounds of this oleomargarine are manufactured and sold every year and consumed by the people.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not desire to make any correction unless the gentleman's figures are better than mine. I am speaking from the record, and I have examined the question as a lawyer. I have sat a good deal of my life as a judge, and I have tried to train my mind to calm and careful investigation.

Now [turning to Mr. TILLMAN] give us your question. [Great laughter and clapping of hands.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well. How do you get your twenty millions of revenue unless——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. TILLMAN. As the House laughed away the time, all I ask is it will give me an opportunity by unanimous consent to finish my question.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly; I hope so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FUNSTON. I will give the gentleman from Mississippi five minutes more.

Mr. MORGAN. He wants to know how I am to get twenty millions revenue.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; who fixed it at 200,000,000 pounds? At 10 cents a pound it would be $20,000,000.

Mr. MORGAN. You have there a source for raising revenue. Fifteen million dollars taken off the salt, and trace-chains, and clothes of the farmers would be no small relief, and in the right direction.

Mr. TILLMAN. If this bill is advocated as a revenue measure, and solely as a revenue measure, and if it is right to tax oleomargarine 10 cents a pound, is it not honest to tax butter 10 cents a pound?

Mr. MORGAN. We have the power to do it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then why not do it?

Mr. MORGAN. Bring in your bill and let us see about it. I trust we may find something to which we may transfer the tax from "Widows' Weeds." [Laughter and applause.] Mr. Chairman, I desire to say—as I am allowed ten minutes more of time—that I hold proof here to show that when you impose this tax of 10 cents a pound on this imitation of butter you do not take it out of the manufacture or increase the price of oleomargarine. I hold here the testimony of a man whose official duty required him to study all about this question, and who did so as a high official of the State of New York, and he states it as a fact the average price of oleomargarine sold as butter is 26 cents a pound, although it is made for only 7½ to 8 cents a pound and wholesaled at 11 cents a pound, and that if you tax it 10 cents it will leave a margin of 5 cents for profit, whereas it now leaves a margin of 15 cents as a temptation to swindle; and it is that swindle that will be driven out of existence if anything should be, not the product itself.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman can buy oleomargarine in the city for 15 cents a pound.

Mr. MORGAN. It was for the reasons which I have stated that this bill was brought in. The gentleman from Illnois says oleomargarine can be purchased here for 15 cents a pound. Oh, yes, Mr. Sterne came and told us all about that. [Laughter.] Stalls 349, 350, and 351 in the market-house of this city—is not that your thing? [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. DUNHAM. They sell it exactly for what it is.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes, so they do; but that is "after taking." [Great laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems strange after what we have heard that when some two hundred millions of oleomargarine is manufactured it can be distributed among the people without enlarging the graveyards. [Great laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. Possibly it does.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know it.

Mr. MORGAN. It will deceive anybody, for it is very difficult to distinguish the difference between oleomargarine and real butter. It can only be done with a microscope and in the hand of an expert.

Mr. TILLMAN. If two hundred millions of pounds are manufactured and sold it is a matter of great importance to a great many people.

Mr. MORGAN. As I will have an opportunity to speak hereafter and as the time given me has expired, I now give notice I will bring forward proof that out of the many places in the State of New York where it is sold it is never sold as oleomargarine, but always sold as genuine butter. Mr. Van Valkenberg, assistant dairy commissioner of the State of New York, states that at five hundred places where it was sold it was found through the medium of his detectives that four hundred and ninety-five sold it as true butter, and when other detectives were sent out disguised as coal-heavers and sent to these five who had sold it as oleomargarine, all of the five sold it to the new men as true butter. [Great laughter and applause.] They suspicioned the first to be detectives.

Mr. TILLMAN. Did any one die from eating it? [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. It was administered to them in disguise and no one could tell of what they died. [Laughter.] My friend from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] asked how much of this was sold as genuine butter and how much as oleomargarine. I want to tell him that we had the great chief of this institution before us, and I put the question to him in one direction and my friend from Iowa [Mr. FREDERICK] in another, and asked him what objection he had to its being sold to the people and put upon the table as oleomargarine. He said his objection was that it would not "go off" if that was done.

Mr. FREDERICK. That it would prejudice the sale.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; and that was the reason that he assigned for it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Who is this great expert that you are quoting?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Sterne, and he knows more about it than all the balance put together. [Laughter.]

I thank my friend from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] for yielding me his, time, which I will give back to him hereafter, with interest.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of resolutions and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, namely:

A resolution to print 30,000 additional copies of the first annual report of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor;

A resolution to print the report on Alaska by E. W. Nelson;

A resolution to print 7,500 additional copies of the report of the board of fortifications;

A bill (S. 2026) granting a pension to Wallis Pattee;

A bill (S. 2075) granting a pension to Jackson Chapman;

A bill (S. 2132) granting a pension to Fridoline Glastetter;

A bill (S. 2180) granting an increase of pension to William Wallace Young;

A bill (S. 2197) granting a pension to Henry Daner;

A bill (S. 2198) granting a pension to Charles Brunbridge;

A bill (S. 2118) for the relief of Lucy A. Washburn;

A bill (S. 2220) granting a pension to James A. Mathes;

A bill (S. 2228) granting a pension to Samuel F. Rowe;

A bill (S. 2233) granting a pension to John P. McElroy;

A bill (S. 1902) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann E. Lamburg;

A bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of customs of the district of the city of New York; and

A bill (S. 2056) to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or a leg in the service.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 453) to forfeit the lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate returned to the House, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 356) granting a pension to Samuel Hanson.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a request received from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE, May 25, 1886.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk of the House will be directed to return the bill as requested.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. FUNSTON. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL].

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON] for yielding a few minutes of his time to me.

It is a fact well known to all familiar with my views that I am opposed to the entire internal-revenue system. I have never seen the day or the hour during my service here when I would not have voted for the total repeal of this system.

It was born of the war; intended as a war measure, to raise money for the support of the Government during that trying period and for the prosecution of the war.

Peace has long since come to our distracted country, and yet this law still stands upon the statute-books.

It is undemocratic and unrepublican.

It is wrong in principle, oppressive in its operation, and tyrannical in its enforcement.

In certain sections of the country God has given the people a soil adapted to the cultivation of tobacco, and that almost alone. The land belongs to them by inheritance from their fathers, who cultivated it for many decades without restriction under Democratic administrations. Yet under this iniquitous system these people, freemen, breathing the inspired sentiments of a free land, from the time they sow their seed in the seed-bed until they have marketed the last plant have some little revenue official hanging around them watching with suspicious eye for fear they may dispose of a leaf of the products of their own land, raised by their own sweat and toil, to some one not a licensed dealer.

In other sections, in the mountains, distant from railroads and markets, nature has prepared their recesses for the growth of the grape and apple; and here, too, this same little official is ever present with the scent of a bloodhound to track down the lowly denizen in his mountain region who may dare dispose of a gill of distilled spirits without paying a tax to the Government of this boasted land of the free, though it may be that the very sale is to procure food for his children.

I repeat, sir, that I would vote with the most supreme pleasure for the abolition of this entire system and for a return to the old-time Democratic method of raising revenue.

But so long as we have the system I propose that these products of the soil and these tillers of the ground shall not bear all the burdens of the system and receive no benefits from it. If these particular industries and products are to be taxed and this espionage upon them kept up I intend by my vote to relieve other agricultural pursuits from depression and restore them to their wonted prosperity by taxing a stuff which has prostrated them and which under the guise of a food is spreading disease and death throughout the land.

I am, therefore, in favor of this bill and shall support it earnestly. [Applause.] I live in a section, sir, and represent a district grand in its agricultural advantages, and literally "flowing with milk and honey"—the historic Shenandoah Valley and part of the classic Piedmont section. Its population is composed of a sturdy race, who despise shams and frauds in whatsoever forms they may present themselves. One of its great industries has been that of the dairy. Every farmer, large or small, has made butter-making one of the sources from which he derived his support, and the good housewives vied with each other in quality and quantity. All that the section could produce after supplying home demand found a ready market and fair price in the cities until this sham and fraud known as oleomargarine made its appearance. Then the demand dropped off, sales stopped, the dairy interest languished, and valuable dairy cows were fattened and slaughtered for beef.

For some time the farmers, honest and straightforward in their dealings, could not understand why the demand had ceased. It never occurred to them that butter, which had been used as a healthful food from the earliest recorded time, had been supplanted by a mixture of tallow and nitric acid, castor oil and butyric acid, mustard seed oil and benzoic acid, cotton-seed oil and capsic acid, turnip-seed oil and commercial sulphuric acid, oil of sesame and sugar of lead, stomachs of sheep and pigs and calves and nitrate of soda, and the many other articles and ingredients which enter into this stuff, which no stock-raiser would feed to his swine.

They never dreamed that a substitute such as this had been introduced for human consumption, thereby forcing out of the market their honest product made from that which God himself had ordained should be the early sustenance of mankind and the great sustainer of human life in disease.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the discussion of this question and the exposure of this traffic ought to arouse such a spirit of indignation as to bring down the most severe condemnation upon the heads of those who have been engaged in the manufacture of this nauseous compound. No man, unless his sensibilities are deadened, can reflect that possibly at some time he has eaten of it at his table without unpleasant sensations.

But they say, "it is the food of the poor man." Yes, they admit they do not expect the rich man to buy it, but they want to palm it off on the poor man and hold up before his vision the tempting bait of cheapness and induce him thereby to take it to his humble home and feed its lurking disease to his children. I would rather see a viper pressed to the bosom of my child, for I might find an antidote for the poison of its fangs, than to have put day by day before it an insidious poison in its food to sap its young life by degrees. [Applause.]

Yes, "cheap food!" The stomachs of pigs, sheep, and calves reduced by acids, and then bromo-chloralum used to destroy the smell and prevent detection of the putrid mass. Bromo-chloralum! So strong is the smell that this powerful disinfectant used in a charnel-house must be brought into requisition to destroy the odor which would otherwise stench in the nostrils of the poor man while they sell him the "poor man's food." [Laughter.]

Yes, "cheap food!" When one of the ingredients is pepsin, in the use of which is an admission that the compound is indigestible and aid must be given to digestion, and with every meal this powerful medicine must be eaten, and the digestive organs must be constantly stimulated, and consequently day by day weakened, resulting necessarily in final death. Yes, "cheap food" in the shape of putrefaction rendered odorless by a powerful disinfectant. Yes, "cheap food" in the form of an apothecary's shop in the poor man's stomach! [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Did you ever hear of anybody being made sick by eating oleomargarine?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I have never, thank Heaven, been brought in contact with it.

Mr. TILLMAN. You have no doubt ate a good deal of it in this city.

Mr. O'FERRALL. If I thought I had done so, I should feel squeamish about it at this moment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is there any record confirming the gentleman's statement?

Mr. O'FERRALL. The charges have been made, and though we have much literature from oleomargarine manufacturers they have never been denied.

Now, sir, in the name of all that is right, in the name of humanity, I ask, should this miserable, death-dealing fraud be allowed to remain in competition with the honest production of honest industry? Should it by its cheapness be longer permitted to lure men into its purchase and poison the well-springs of public health?

I find sir, from the report of the Committee on Agriculture, who gave much thought and consideration to this question, that about 200,000,000 pounds of this mixture are now being manufactured annually, which, as they say, not only takes the place of so much butter, but stops the consumption of much more by the demoralization of the trade; that "before its introduction cows were worth on an average $40 per head: and now only $30 each; that during the last year 300,000 milch cows were slaughtered in Chicago alone, or an average of 1,000 daily; that there have been from four to five million American citizens engaged in the dairy business; that they have over 15,000,000 cows, and have produced annually over 1,000,000,000 pounds of butter and 300,000,000 pounds of cheese, and that the products have been worth $250,000,000, and that about an equal amount has been realized from the sale of milk, making in all $500,000,000 annually."

Now, leaving everything else out of consideration, ought not some thought be given to the agricultural interests of this country? Is not the farmer entitled to some protection? Is he to be made to pay all the taxes, bear all the burdens? Is his legitimate sphere to be invaded and circumscribed by a fraud?

Every industry except that of agriculture is clamorous for and receives at the hands of this Government protection. The farmer stands out with his bronzed face and hardened hands as the payer of tithes to the manufacturing and railroad monopolies of the land. "As the hart panteth for the water-brooks," the tiller of the soil panteth for relief from the exactions of heavy taxation and a high protective tariff.

While differing upon the question of the tariff and upon political issues generally with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] who addressed the House on yesterday, I say with him pass this bill, and while raising revenue give "incidental protection" to the farming interests.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, I have not had time to discuss this bill in a manner which its importance demands. I have not had time to refer to the constitutional question raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]. I will only say that if it is constitutional to tax tobacco and distilled spirits it is constitutional to tax oleomargarine. I would like to refer to the position of some gentlemen on this floor who have been most violent opponents of the repeal of the internal-revenue system so long as it only affected the interests of other States or sections, but as soon as it was proposed to extend the system so that it might indirectly affect the interests of their sections they cry aloud against the extension. It seems even here to make a difference "whose ox is gored." I again thank the gentleman from Kansas for his courtesy and the House for extending my time and its kind and attentive hearing. [Applause.]

[Before Mr. O'FERRALL had concluded his remarks the hammer fell, and the chairman stated that his time had expired.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I should like to be permitted to occupy five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. This hour belongs to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. FUNSTON].

Mr. FUNSTON. I will yield to the gentleman to go on for five minutes by unanimous consent, provided the time is not taken out of my hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Virginia being allowed to proceed by unanimous consent for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'FERRALL resumed and concluded the remarks above printed.]

Mr. FUNSTON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. ROWELL. The discussion of this question is necessarily confined within narrow boundaries, and I am well aware that after all that has been said it is next to impossible to say anything in favor of this bill or against it that has not already been said in some way. But as I intend to vote for this bill, I am not willing to let the occasion pass without protesting against some of the reasons which opponents of the bill have attempted to offer as the reasons why we are going to vote for it.

I do not believe in the doctrine of protection as applied to the people in the same country. But I do believe in the doctrine of a nation protecting its own people against unfair competition with people of other nations. And I do not intend to vote for the bill under discussion upon the principle of attempting to protect one legitimate industry in this country against competition from another legitimate industry. It is not upon any such principle I base my advocacy of this bill. It is to protect one legitimate industry against the unfair competition of a fraudulent industry. All that I desire is that this butterine business, this oleomargarine business, shall stand upon its own merits; that the article shall go into the market upon its own merits. The very nature of the business enables its projectors to commit frauds upon the people, and they of all men ought not to object. If the people of this country insist upon laws which shall protect them against frauds, they ought not to object if they be compelled to pay the expense of that protection.

I object again to the assumption that we are impliedly violating our oaths to support the Constitution when we vote for this bill. We believe that while the bill itself is constitutional, the object to be obtained is a constitutional object.

Now, I will neither support nor advocate a bill which seeks fraudulently to attain an end that can not be obtained honestly and fairly. I believe it to be within the power of the National Government to accomplish by means of taxation something more and higher than simply getting money to spend again. If I understand anything about logic the power to do a thing implies the power to accomplish everything that is implied in doing it. The power to levy a tax is the power to get whatever good may be obtained through the levying of that tax, and it is not an unconstitutional intention to get some other good than simply the good of getting money.

It is admitted that we have a right to select the objects of taxation. But if the theory is a correct one as advanced by the constitutional lawyers here, we may only levy an ad valorem tax; we must tax every article according to its value and leave none untaxed, because if we select one and leave another we do accomplish another purpose than the purpose to simply get money. Conceding the right to select the objects of taxation, you concede the constitutional right to get some other good out of the tax than getting money; and if the constitutional right, then you concede the perfect right of every man under his oath to support the Constitution to get that other good, the duty of every man to select such objects of taxation as will get a declared good to the American people.

Now in levying a tax on oleomargarine, surrounding it with machinery which shall extend all over the nation, you supplement the powers of State Legislatures by constitutional methods, and you simply succeed in surpressing an acknowledged fraud.

Mr. DUNHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. ROWELL. You succeed in suppressing an acknowledged fraud. My colleague says "Oh, no." His constituents, the three great firms of Chicago boldly proclaim that they manufacture oleomargarine. They say that they mark it, stamp it; but they will not be so foolish as to come here and claim that one pound out of a hundred, when it reaches the people who consume it, goes there honestly with the understanding that it is oleomargarine. Why do you make it in the image of butter, why do you color it the color of butter, why in your manipulating process do you do everything to destroy the distinction between it and butter if you do not do it for the purpose of deceiving the consumer? It is an acknowledged fraud—an acknowledged fraud between the manufacturer and the consumer. Being an acknowledged fraud, it is not honest competition between the dairymen, the butter-makers, and the few great manufacturers that make oleomargarine. Concede that it is wholesome, yet if you sit down to a table and are told that the "butter" comes out of Armour's establishment you turn away from it.

Go into a boarding-house and let them give you notice that they use only oleomargarine and you seek another boarding-house. Go into any town or city in this country and go through the grocery stores that sell butter, and you can not find one in fifty which will acknowledge that it sells oleomargarine. I know that your Chicago firms have established in this city a place where oleomargarine is publicly sold as such. I know also that Congress is in session, and that this legislation is before Congress, and that they are seeking to meet this legislation by setting a good example here. But go to the hotel where you board and ask them if they use oleomargarine and they will tell you no; yet I would bet my bottom dollar that on every table in that hotel they do set oleomargarine, and you eat it every day and do not know it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. Tell him also that there is a Federal law upon the statute-book applying to this District that will fine and imprison any man who sells oleomargarine for anything else than whatit is.

Mr. ROWELL. Yes. Now, if the tax proposed by the bill is too large, let us amend the bill and make it less. The real purpose is a constitutional purpose, to be effected through the taxing power, to supplement the action of the States and make this business go before the world as an honest business, leaving the butter-makers as they are, honest men.

We propose to make the men who engage in a business which can be fraudulently carried on pay the expense of guarding the public against deception, and if in paying that expense and without increasing the cost to the consumer we can get some added revenue to make up for losses, let us get it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. You concede that the manufacturers make this article and brand it as what it is, but you say that when it reaches the consumer he does not know whether it is butter or something else?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then would you be in favor of an amendment to this bill which would reach the retailer?

Mr. ROWELL. I concede that the Chicago manufacturers stamp the article, but I say they could not get along without doing it. They would be caught violating the laws of the State of Illinois if they did not. But they can not cover, while the retail dealer with his ice-box can. You can afford to be honest when you can not help it. [Laughter.] I would not trust Armour nor any of the balance of them if they could cover up their manufacture and send it out to the world as pure dairy butter. But they can not do that. You can not hide an elephant. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Then you would be in favor of an amendment to reach the retailer.

Mr. ROWELL. If the tax provided in this bill is too high, I say make it lower; but if we can get some money out of this thing and at the same time keep these people from deceiving the public, so much the better. We need the money. Not a day passes here that somebody does not get up and protest against some needed expenditure as a raid upon the Treasury, and declare that the Treasury can not stand such a raid. Fill up your Treasury; then it can sustain more of the "raids" that do good in this country. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation and exportation of oleomargarine, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled the bill (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to announce to the House that the session this evening will close the general debate upon this bill. I propose to-morrow morning, before we go into Committee of the Whole, to limit general debate.

Mr. DUNHAM. And I simply desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I expect that the House itself will have the right to say whether the debate shall close or not.

ADDITIONAL RIGHTS TO CERTAIN HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

Mr. McRAE introduced a bill (H. R. 9011) to grant additional rights to certain homestead settlers on the public lands, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MANAGERS OF SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. BRAGG introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing managers of the national homes for disabled soldiers to fill vacancies in the board which occurred April 21, 1886; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THE FISHERIES.

Mr. REED, of Maine, presented resolutions of the Fishing Exchange of Portland, Me.; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, on motion of Mr. REED, were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions are as follows:

PORTLAND FISHING EXCHANGE, Portland, Me., May 21, 1886.

At a meeting of this exchange the following resolutions were passed:

Attest: O. B. WHITTEN, Secretary.

Whereas the Canadian Government have seized American fishing vessels and, as we believe, unlawfully, whereby the flag of our country has been insulted: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Portland Fishing Exchange that the President of these United States should immediately by proclamation declare non-intercourse with the Dominion of Canada in all matters pertaining to the fisheries.

Resolved, That whereas the Canadian Government have fitted out armed vessels to pursue ours, therefore we ask our Government to send armed cruisers into Canadian waters to protect American vessels.

Resolved, That we oppose and protest against the appointment of any commission to treat with Great Britain in regard to the fisheries.

Resolved, That we call upon Congress to take such action as will protect us in our rights as American citizens from seizure of our property while in the act of trade with the colonial government, and demand immediate release of the vessels now under seizure.

Resolved, That whereas our Government has issued papers granting our vessels permission to touch and trade in foreign ports; and whereas vessels holding such permits have been seized, we ask our Government to protect all American vessels in colonial ports against illegal seizure.

Resolved, If our Government refuse to send immediately armed vessels to protect our fishermen in their rights, we deem it expedient to arm and equip our American fishing vessels for their own protection.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to our Representative, Hon. THOMAS B. REED, and Senator WILLIAM P. FRYE.

EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF PRESIDENT TAYLOR.

Mr. KING introduced a bill (H. R. 9012) for the erection of an equestrian statue of ex-President Zachary Taylor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

TITLES TO REAL ESTATE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. KING also introduced a bill (H. R. 9013) to quiet title to real estate in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House took a recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m.), and was called to order by Mr. TOWLES, Chief Clerk.

The following was read:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 25, 1886.

SIR: Hon. JOHN T. HEARD is designated to preside at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the special order to consider the House bill 8328.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago this House after a thorough debate passed a bill for the arbitration of disputes and troubles between employers and employés. The bill then passed was intended to be a peace-maker in troubles of that sort; and it was expected, as one of its merits, that it would at least give employés an equal opportunity with the employer, it being recognized by public opinion that the hired class were not in all respects equal, without the aid of the law, in the maintenance of their rights. This Congress thought it best to throw round that settlement by arbitration both sentiment and power; and all of us felt well satisfied that, however imperfect the measure was, the aims of Congress in that respect were carried out.

Now to-day we have brought to our view another troublesome question, in connection with which we find a great class in this country, backed up by very strongly-manufactured sentiment, endeavoring, so far as it can, to invoke Congress to so legislate that another great and competing industry in this country shall be subject to a "lock-out." This, to my view, after reading this bill, is its ultimate result, or at least the object sought. The intention is substantially to legislate out of existence a commercial commodity, a food product, together with an industry that employs thousands of people and is certainly to be regarded as a legitimate branch of business. The aid of Congress is invoked to tax out of existence this industry, in order that the other industry may gain the entire benefit and become ultimately a monopoly created by law.

Mr. Chairman, I am not a lawyer nor the son of a lawyer, but am simply a manufacturer and business man. I am free to say that on constitutional and great legal questions I accept my opinions from those who have made the law their study. I was aware that bills of this character, having the same aim as that now under consideration, had been submitted to the Judiciary Committee; and I find in a report of that committee an opinion which I understand is the accepted opinion of at least a majority of the committee; and to my mind this opinion, divested of legal verbiage and the traditions and decisions of the law, meets very broadly the whole case submitted to us. Allow me to read it:

It remains to inquire whether oleomargarine or any other product may be subjected to an internal-revenue tax.

If the power to lay taxes (Const. U. S., Art. I, secs. 8 and 9) involves the power in Congress to select any article for excise or other tax, as seems to be now settled by the practice of the Government (and no doubt properly so settled), then the right to tax oleomargarine is undoubted.

But your committee are constrained to add that this is a revenue power. The right "to lay" is conjoined with that "to collect taxes," and the right to lay and collect is conjoined with the purpose "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare." The power is conferred in order to the duty imposed on Congress. It is a trust power, and becomes a right only when used for the purpose in view. The tax is the means to the end, and is only legitimate and rightful when needful for the end.

To use the tax when needless for revenue, merely to strike down a product or an industry, is to abuse a constitutional trust; and while the power may be conferred, the right to use it in such case can not be asserted. All power under our system is trust power; to use it for the trust makes it a rightful power; to use it diverso intuitu is wrongful perversion and abuse of power, and is contrary to the Constitution. In other words, as Congress can not forbid the production of an article in a State by direct legislation, it can not use a power conferred for another purpose to destroy and prevent such production. To do by indirect means what it could not do by direct legislation would be an unworthy evasion of constitutional limitations, which can not be sanctioned by an enlightened construction of the Constitution.

It is true that in such case the judicial power may not be able to declare such taxation void, because the judge dare not look into the intents of the legislator's breast, but the legislator who so abuses his trust and wrongfully misuses power can not avoid responsibility to his own conscience, bound as it is to support the Constitution; for by personal introspection he will find his motive not to be a tax for revenue to the Government, but a tax as a means of destruction to the product subjected to it; that is, tax used as an instrument of destruction and not as a means of revenue.

Your committee therefore think that Congress may lay the tax, if it be needed for revenue, but does it against right if only to restrain and destroy the use and sale of the article in question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is "the article in question?" I wish to claim, and claim very broadly, that oleomargarine as manufactured by the great producers of America is a wholesome, nutritious food. I care not by what schemes middle-men may bring it into market, I make the broad assertion that it is equal to any medium grade of butter; and I make the still broader assertion that during the whole of this debate not one single friend of the bill has brought forward from competent testimony of any kind whatever, with the possible exception of a Dr. Tefft, one word tending to establish its unwholesomeness. I understand by hints thrown out by a few speakers that this committee had testimony of some kind from those who appeared before it, in which it was intimated that the product of other animals than cows and oxen had been used in the manufacture of this product. But I consider these intimations as upon a par with other statements made here without foundation, and evidently for the purpose of padding out a weak argument. I state broadly that not one word has been uttered by an advocate of this bill as to the positive unwholesomeness of oleomargarine as a food product.

Possibly I should not have said one word in this discussion but for one paragraph in the report of the Committee on Agriculture, a paragraph which may well be designated as the "death's head and crossbones" paragraph, in which by some dexterity, some sophistical way of reaching conclusions without data, we are furnished with something like the chemical schedule of a tariff bill or a compendium of the United States dispensatory, in which we are treated to acids and alkalies and various other matters, reminding one very much of the scene from Macbeth read to-day by my good friend from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

I find in this paragraph—

Nitric acid, sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, curcumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry-blood albumen, saltpeter, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, caparic acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame (or benne), turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, sal-soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, bromo chloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda.

My impression after reading is that in all likelihood the writer of it consulted a few of the patents in the Patent Office, in which, I grant you, he may find more acids and sodas than he quotes here in the process of making oleomargarine.

It so happens, Mr. Chairman, that a part of my life has been spent in business in which these acids have become somewhat familiar to me. Properly used in the treatment of fatty matter, in the manufacture of oleos, nearly all of these acids I have quoted from the report are used, and are as necessary for the purposes of that manufacture as fire is in an oven to the making of bread. The very way you reach a pure food is reached very often in the treatment he suggests here by these acids. The only way you are able to detect fraud in food is by these very acids.

Now take one of those placed blindly here without any intention to deceive, but no doubt to make the list as long as possible—take butyric acid. Butyra in butter itself is the sweet, pure taste that adds the exquisite flavor which is needed in it, and butyric acid is simply the rancidity of bad butter. That is all. That is its official name. Butyric acid—rancidity of butter.

It is not pretended surely by this committee that any manufacturer of oleomargarine intends to inject butyric acid into it when that is the very quality he wishes to get rid of. That which he wishes to eliminate certainly is not the one which he will put into it. That is the reason, I say, the paragraph is unfair, and that it gives a character to that report which makes it false. Without the treatment through which all of these oleos pass I defy any man or manufacturer of this country producing these commodities to make a pure and wholesome food. More than that, you can not find any chemical expert in this country who will declare that after oleomargarine comes to be put upon the market it retains the trace of any one of these acids. They have been used as "washers" to purify it. It only astonishes me where the stomach trouble comes in or Bright's disease or other kidney trouble. The very reason these acids are used in the manufacture is to make it pure when the article comes to be put upon the market and sold as food. There are unhealthful elements even in butter itself which ought to be eliminated.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the gentleman state real butter would be better by the treatment he has referred to?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I said butter could be treated also so as to make it better. Because when rancidity comes into butter there is no way of remedying it, except through the treatment which I have indicated, as that rancidity is the first state of putrefaction.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true as to butyric acid; but is it true also of nitric acid and of sulphuric acid?

Mr. FARQUHAR. There are four or five of these acids which possess nearly the same properties and which are used in the treatment of the mess. These acids are used in cleaning or in separating these fatty substances from the tissue.

The most rapid one in the whole list which can reach the result is probably caustic soda, and that is the last one noticed in the list which I have read from the report. The knowledge of how much is to be put into the mess belongs only to the man who superintends its manufacture. But where you wish a pure matter you reach it only by the use of these acids.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true; it requires an expert in order to get the acid out of the product, does it not?

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is true. But I wish to say one thing more. My own idea of the matter is when Mége's patent came into this country I think it very likely he went more into the chemistry of the manufacture of this product than was necessary. I know in the manufactory of lubricants in which I own an interest we have, possibly, in handling some of our own patents, been hampered by them. I know now, or should judge it to be so from the explanation that has been furnished by manufacturers and others who have sent letters and circulars around here, that they have a much more rapid way of treating these fats now than by the old Mége process.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the gentleman will permit another question I shall not interrupt him again, as I have no desire to break the continuity of his argument. My question would be based on the fact that while we require no acids in making the ordinary butter, and the fact that the acids and chlorine and other materials are needed in preparing oleomargarine, does it not prove that the materials from which the oleomargarine is made are impure and unfitted for food, but must require some chemical process to purify and make it suitable for food? In other words, are not the acids used as a purifier?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly, I agree with the gentleman that it must be so. I am not a manufacturer of oleomargarine myself, and I can not say what the facts are in reference to the matter, only to this extent, that when you want to reach a rapid process that you have to use what I would say is a rapid acid to accomplish it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I would like to ask another question if not interfering with the gentleman's argument. Is it not true that you can take any kind of fat, however rancid or impure or unhealthful it may be, and treat it with chemical substances and produce by such treatment in a short time an article that is not only not unpleasant to the taste or smell, but one that becomes a fair article for food?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will answer that very plainly. My own experience in treating these fats reaches the fact that I never could use any tainted fat whatever when I brought heat in contact with it.

You may place in a rendering kettle, in any process to which you subject the the substance you are going to use, a hundred pounds of fat, tallow, or lard in good condition, and add to it, it may be but 1 or 2 pounds of tainted fat, and when you reach a temperature of from seventy-five to eighty degrees your whole mass goes.

The small amount of tainted fat affects all the rest of the bulk. It spoils it all. That I know by my own personal experience; and I wish to say in answer to the question called out by the gentleman just one thing that ought to be brought out here. It is this: I am no advocate of this manufacture at all. I am looking to a fair business-like question of producing palatable food, and when you produce palatable, nutritious, wholesome food, as some of the oleomargarines are that I have eaten myself, I say it is for the benefit of the manufacturer to use the very best tallow that is possible to be obtained. And why? Because you will reach the very best results in oleo oil when it is expressed from the best fat, and I can not see, considering the competition there is in the making of oleo, how it can be to the benefit of any manufacturer of this article to use anything but the best tallow.

Mr. GALLINGER. In which shape the poison would not be required.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to say that when you endeavor to sweeten tainted fats, or make them what is called deodorized, you can not retain the original life and properties of the fat, but you will destroy it, or transform it from original conditions, exactly as good, cleanly people destroy other offensive things at times. In other words, you do it by using chlorides of lime, and chlorides of lime are destructive. So I can not see, under any process known to me as discovered, how they can make tainted fats sweet; that is, by any process involving the use of heat.

Mr. GALLINGER. The gentleman claims that he has eaten good oleomargarine. Now, let me ask, do you know the good from the bad? Is there any mode of determining, except by the microscope, what is good or what is bad? Do you know that you have eaten good oleomargarine?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Well, I will say that I have eaten of that called the best for the New York market.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. STRUBLE. They call all of it the best.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And it was eaten, I think, without any coloring matter, which at the time of using was expressed from the carrot, I think.

Mr. GALLINGER. In this country the microscopists tell us that there is no means of determining the good from the bad, or determining the article at all except by the microscope. That is what the scientists say.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I question very much in my own mind whether even the microscopists can tell.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the information they give us.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In the reports of the State boards of health, especially the Massachusetts State board of health, of which my friend Mr. DAVIS is a member, that question has been considered, I believe, and I do not think from their reports that the microscope furnishes as intelligent an analysis of it as heat does. That is the impression that generally prevailed, I think, when the cases were brought up in the State of New York, where they had for years this discussion in respect to oleomargarine. The best chemists were brought in from every State, and it is singular that out of all that were called as experts in these investigations I do not now recollect of one who ever gave an official or scientific opinion, after an inspection of all the miscellaneous samples that had been provided, that any of it was an unwholesome food; not one.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that where the oleomargarine is made from cotton-seed oil it is a perfectly clean and healthful food, and not at all deleterious?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will answer the gentleman by telling him that oleomargarine is not made with cotton-seed oil at all; and then in the next place that cotton-seed oil as now manufactured forms one of the finest table salad oils that we have, healthy in every way. And when an oil as I understand is used in oleomargarine it is simply to reach a quality in temperature. It is placed in the winter production I understand of oleomargarine.

Mr. WHEELER. I have learned or have been told that cotton-seed oil is used extensively in making this article. I ask the gentleman if that is not so?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It is used largely in East Saint Louis, I am told, in this manufacture.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If the gentleman will permit me I will take the authority of the greatest manufacturer of this article, Mr. Armour. He says:

The component parts of oleomargarine and butterine are oleo oil, neutral lard, fresh cream, and milk—some makers use buttermilk—choice creamery butter, fine dairy salt, and clear, cold water. The coloring matter used is precisely the same as that universally used by all dairymen and butter-makers.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman will admit that cotton-seed oil and the cake can be used to make this material?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The cake! Not much of that. There is no necessity for that at all.

Mr. ROWELL. I would like to be permitted to say that Mr. Armour in a personal letter says they use cotton-seed oil.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let me read his further statement:

At certain seasons of the year a very small quantity of fine salid oil, which is produced from selected cotton-seed, is occasionally but not generally used to soften the texture of the product.

Mr. WHEELER. Because it is very expensive would the gentleman not think it a good amendment to exempt all butterine from taxation that is made of cotton-seed oil and cotton-seed cake on account of its purity?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I suppose the gentleman who asks the question is as well acquainted as I am with the manufacture of cotton-seed oil and cotton-seed cake. But we are talking about oleomargarine, and not about cotton-seed. If there is any particularly valuable filling property in oleomargarine, it comes from a very fine neutral in leaf lard. No one could intend, as a manufacturer, to bring in cotton-seed cake or any other dry-as-dust commodity in that line.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he feels certain considering the effect which cotton-seed oil is said to produce if it is to be put in oleomargarine and universally used—if he feels certain we should not have to import the next generation?

Mr. PETTIBONE. That is correct.

Mr. FARQUHAR. As I understand from this circular, it is not the cotton-seed oil and the salad oil that is used, but that is a very small question.

Mr. PETTIBONE. It involves the destiny of humanity. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question for information?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I am asking the question in good faith for information.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I know the gentleman would ask it in no other mood.

Mr. HATCH. For the first time in the investigation of this subject I have been made acquainted with the medical and medicinal qualities of sesame or sesame oil, and if the gentleman will give me any information within his own knowledge of the medical properties of that oil I will be obliged to him. I will state to the gentleman that I find in the investigation before the senate committee of New York, in which one of the largest manufacturers of oleomargarine in the State of New York, Mr. Mendel, a member of the firm of N. I. Nathan & Co., stated that 5 or 10 per cent., perhaps more—I am not stating the proportion exactly—of that material was used by all the manufacturers of oleomargarine as far as his knowledge extended.

Mr. FARQUHAR. While his knowledge may go beyond the Armours and Dold and the heavy manufacturers in this country, I was not aware that sesame oil was used at all in the manufacture in that proportion or less. I know it is quoted in that line. But let me answer the question by giving the gentleman a positive, scientific answer, so that we may save a good deal of catechising that is not of much use. Dr. Henry A. Mott, of New York, one of our most eminent chemists, makes the following scientific analysis, showing that the constituents of both products under discussion are nearly the same, with the advantage in favor of artificial butter in those ingredients which tend to resist decay:

Constituents.	Natural butter.	Artificial butter.
Water	11.968	11.203
Butter solids	88.032	88.797
Total	100.000	100.000
Insoluble fats	75.256	81.183
Soluble fats	7.432	1.823
Casein	.192	.621
Salt	5.162	5.161
Coloring matter	trace.	trace.
Total	88.033	88.797

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does that state where the sample of butter was obtained from?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I think this is part of the expert testimony that Dr. Mott gave and which was used in the contested case in New York which was carried to the court of appeals.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. In Johnson's Encyclopædia, which gives the latest information, the percentage of water is stated as over 80 per cent., while what the gentleman from New York read gave it as 11 per cent.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is impossible.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is utterly impossible; but still——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, the point I want to make with the gentleman is this, that in order to make Dr. Mott's testimony of more value we would like to know the sources from which the samples were obtained, both of the butter and of the oleomargarine, because it would be very easy for the manufacturer to prepare the samples for the test.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Will the gentleman from New York allow me a question?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Very willingly.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Does the gentleman state that the oleomargarine that was tested by the professor whom he quotes was like all other oleomargarine, and does he also think that the butter was the butter of the country, or does he admit that butter has a fixed quality, and that this sample was a particular kind of oleomargarine?

Mr. FARQUHAR. If the gentleman will take a commercial answer to his question, which is a little wider than my own personal knowledge, I will tell him, and just exactly, how they grade oleomargarine, how the commercial men all over the country who buy it grade it, and I will tell him what the grades consist of. That ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Yes, that is what we want.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will give him the rules of the New York Mercantile Exchange on this subject, which are just as Draconian as their rules for butter or cheese. They have four grades, extras, extra firsts, firsts, and seconds. The extras, they say—

Must draw clear on the trier, be of perfect texture for the time of year, be high in flavor, taste, and smell, be of good, natural color, be evenly and perfectly salted, and be put up in new and uniform style of package.

That same exchange makes also its classifications for the whole Eastern market of the oleo oils, of which they have three grades—choice, prime, and No. 1. The oleomargarine sold in New York city and the oleo oil sold there are tested and inspected as legitimately as any Western product of butter or cheese, and they are branded perfectly. No man buys them with his eyes shut.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Are they branded when put on the retail market?

Mr. FARQUHAR. On the wholesale market.

Mr. PETTIBONE. That is the point; wholesale, but not retail. I want the House to take notice of that. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. And I desire the gentleman to take notice of another thing, that when he frames a bill to make police regulations by the United States Congress that can keep a compound like oleomargarine off the table where he eats, he will be smarter than the men who generally make the laws.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I do not eat the thing at all.

Mr. FARQUHAR. If this Congress passes a law such as this is intended to be, providing for a police inspection of this product at every stage from the place where it is manufactured until it appears on the dining-table, it will take an army of internal-revenue officers to carry the law into effect.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do I understand the gentleman to mean that we should not tax oleomargarine because the men who make it and the men who deal in it are so dishonest and so sharp that they will evade the law?

Mr. FARQUHAR. In answering the gentleman's question I wish to eliminate one word from it, that is the word "dishonest." I claim that Mr. Armour and Mr. Dold and the other manufacturers are just as honest as any man holding a seat on this floor, and that the goods they put into the market are fairly branded and properly inspected and graded, and you can ask nothing more.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But if they pursue the course which the gentleman gives this House to understand they will pursue, it does not make any difference whether their names be Armour or something else, the cause is a dishonest one.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to remind the gentleman that I have not said what course they will pursue. I have not said that the manufacturers will pursue any course. I say this, that when the article is properly branded, and goes out of the manufactory, it goes to a great public exchange to be sold; there it passes into the hands of middle-men, the retailers spoken of here, and, let it be branded in any way you please, when it passes into the hands of the men that sell it over the counter, who knows what they are going to do with it, or how they are going to sell it, or who knows what he is going to eat when it comes upon the table?

Mr. PETTIBONE. It is all right, then, if the consumer is swindled?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I say that you can put checks on oleomargarine clear down to the time when the consumer buys it, but when it gets beyond that point no one knows what is to follow.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If Mr. Armour puts into the market a bogus or imitation butter which he sells, the purchaser knowing that it is bogus butter, but Mr. Armour knowing that he will go to the consumer and sell it to him without informing him that it is bogus, do you say that that is an honest business on the part of Armour? Let me illustrate my question. The "banker" of counterfeit money (as we learn in prosecuting counterfeit cases) sells the conterfeit bills to the "shover" at 5, 10, or 15 per cent, and when he sells them to the "shover" at that small percentage the "shover" knows that he is buying counterfeit money and the "banker" (who in my illustration takes the place of Armour) does not deceive the "shover" who buys of him at that rate; but the "banker" knows that the "shover" is going into the country to pass that counterfeit money at its face value, 100 per cent., upon innocent and unsuspecting men, is that banker, is that "Armour" an honest man in the judgment of the honest man that stands before me?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Well, Mr. Chairman, I did not understand that we should go into ethics or casuistry or metaphysics on this question. [Laughter.] I supposed that this was a kind of business proposition with probably a little chemistry thrown in; but when the gentleman comes to take the part of prosecuting attorney, I do not know whether he places me in the position of judge or jury. I know one thing: I certainly am not here to defend Mr. Armour; but if a hypothetical case of that kind is to be brought before me I want to say this much about it: I said in the opening of my remarks that oleomargarine as it comes from the manufacturer is not fraudulent, and I stay by that assertion. I also said (and I want the gentleman to take a part of that answer with him) that when some gentlemen on this floor can prove substantially the unwholesomeness of Mr. Phil. Armour's product called butterine or oleomargarine the gentleman's question will come in place, and I will answer it. I do not seek either to beg the question or to make a new problem for him. I started with the proposition that so far as I know this is a wholesome food product. I stay by that position; and if my assertion is not satisfactory, I will call in a little evidence on that question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I would like to put another question, if it does not annoy the gentleman.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It does not annoy me in the least; but please do not make your questions so long. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRUBLE. And do not make them so hard. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will accept that qualification, too.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Since the gentleman defends Mr. Armour's honesty (and I am willing the gentleman should defend his own position, I am not making the attack), I merely wish to say this: Suppose, for the sake of argument, that the article which Mr. Armour manufactures is perfectly wholesome, being made of lard or tallow or what you please, but that he manufactures it to be sold by other parties as dairy butter, the product of the cow; is that, in the opinion of the gentleman who hails from the land of honest men——

Mr. FARQUHAR. And bonnie lassies.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. An honest business for him to pursue, waiving any supposition that the article is poisonous, but assuming that it is made of lard or other such things, and is to be sold as the product of the cow?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will give my friend a fair answer. The great trouble that surrounds this question is the fact that middle-men and others, independently of the manufacturer himself, palm off this article on the public as butter itself.

Mr. PETTIBONE. And will always do it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Though a wholesome product, though a cheap food product, though entirely legitimate in its manufacture (because it is simply utilizing the fat of the animal in every way), yet there are men who, trading on the fact that it tastes like butter, smells like butter, and looks like butter, sell it for butter.

Mr. PETTIBONE. And are not those men ninety-nine in a hundred of those who deal in it?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Well, I do not intend to go into the arithmetic of that, because you or I would not know anything about it if we tried. [Laughter.] In this matter I do not pretend to be a defender of Mr. Armour or any other manufacturer. I wish to state why I take interest in this matter. My position in reference to it (and I ask no one to follow me) has been taken without consultation with any one in the committee or outside of it. Some time ago, before coming to Washington, I received a letter from Professor Baird in respect to carp and their production. I knew very little about fish-culture; but treating the question in the same way in which I have been disposed to treat this question, I decided to go to some scientific man and find out what use carp would be in my district. Casting about for a suitable person to whom to apply I decided to go to Professor Linden, of the Buffalo Academy of Sciences.

I showed him the letter I had received, and asked him whether he thought it worth while to introduce carp into that district at all. He looked at the letter and said, "Yes, order all you can; I will go round myself and find ponds to put them in; and I will write an article for the newspapers describing their culture. It is," said he, "one of the best things you can do for your district; and I will tell you why; it diversifies food, bringing into the market at almost a nominal cost cheap food for poor people." Now, in analogy with that matter, I have followed out this question. I am satisfied in my own mind that this butterine is nutritious food. I am satisfied that, however much you may legislate, some time in our lifetime this class of product will be produced from the fats of animals; and possibly another Congress will intelligently conclude that it is a food equal to second or third class butter. I claim no more for it.

I have nothing to say against the butter interest; I have nothing to say against the farmer's industry in any way, because I was born and raised on a farm, and, by the bye, it was one that possibly had the best herd of Ayrshires that Scotland ever produced, there being hardly a stall without a "first prize" displayed in it. I am the friend of the American farmer as much as is the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture or any other man on this floor; but I am at the same time just as much the friend of any cheap wholesome food that is the product of this country, let it be fish, oleomargarine, butterine, or whatever it may be. Put this product upon the market, properly branded, under suitable safeguards, and let those who wish it buy it at a cheap price; and if dear butter must go, let it go.

That is my fair position, without equivocation, too.

Now let me trace another analogy, and it comes nearest my own old handicraft. Right in the city of Baltimore to-day is being manufactured a printing-machine which will probably come in the market inside of twelve months, and that machine will do the work, with one man to handle it, of five of the most expert printers who can be found. Now, I stand just in this relationship to that invention, that no legislation on the part of all the printers' unions of America can stop it.

Mr. PARKER. Being the nearest to the gentleman speaking of any one, I insist upon the right to hear him.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. FARQUHAR. While this matter stands facing all the journeymen printers of America, and all the type-founders, too, because it abolishes nearly the whole line of "body" type, yet these unions, with all their power, are helpless to stop that invention, and they do not come to Congress to ask any legislation to prohibit it out of existence. They can not do it.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, we have got to accept the inevitable in such cases. Place around this manufacture all the safeguards which can be put there, so that whether imitated or made artificially to hoodwink the purchaser, in every way put the safeguard so strong it will be impossible to cheat the person who buys last. I am glad of the law so far as that will go.

But when an intelligent Congress puts a 10-cent tax upon a food-product, it is a kind of protection that were my party in that line I would leave it. I do not and can not believe in building up one industry, though it be the greatest in America, if it be at the expense of another legitimate one. My protection principles, when they touch the coast line of this land, obliterate every State line and make the poor man's smithy, with a capital or plant of a thousand dollars, as well protected and cared for as the South Chicago Rolling Mills, with millions of capital. [Applause.]

And I claim, sir, that this industry, this product, ought to be proved to be illegitimate in this House before you pass any bill to tax it out of existence.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the gentleman to take the position that the case of a new type-setting machine sold for just what it is is analogous to bogus butter made and sold for what it is not? Is that the gentleman's argument?

Mr. FARQUHAR. No, sir; I used it for the purpose of illustrating that all of the printers' unions of the United States petitioning Congress for the prohibition of that machine can not stop it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly that is true, but there is no analogy between the two cases.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I think there is. Now, I desire to know from the gentleman whether he regards oleomargarine made in accordance with these formulas and under the treatment I have stated, superintended by scientific experts, unwholesome as an article of food?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not prepared to say it is not.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am prepared to say there has been very unwholesome oleomargarine made.

A MEMBER. Yes; and there has been very unwholesome butter.

Mr. FARQUHAR. There is butter in the market which is not good and wholesome, and frequently very bad butter is placed upon the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. Everybody knows exactly what it is, and can avoid using it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. It can be detected at once.

Mr. GALLINGER. You need not take it if you do not want it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. There is one property in oleomargarine which has not been referred to, and that is its continual sweetness. It is shipped to Australia, and in fact it is carried all over the world in the holds of vessels, and yet never loses its sweetness of taste or purity of flavor. It is used by the British army.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is not that true of Fowler's solution of arsenic also?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Oh, yes; and many other things of the same kind might be named.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state in conclusion that if there is a question of conscience and of moral courage in voting on a measure like this it is apt to reach this House through all its present surroundings.

Every member has been deluged by reports, opinions of experts, and others, who know nothing whatever about it. Our committee has sat patiently for a long time listening to all these other parties, possibly all in one line, as I should judge, and yet it brings us here face to face with just two phases of this whole question.

Laying aside the constitutional idea and taking it simply as we find this bill, are we, as Representatives, with the light that we have here, able to bring our minds to that frame in which we will strike down an industry that utilizes for the farmer as well as for the butcher a part of the product of bovines, simply because middle-men, who are dishonest and tricky, impose upon the general public this oleomargarine under assumed names? Or shall we take the other line, and say that we will take in our hands corrective measures as far as lie in our power to save the public from these men who are extorting big prices, possibly, for the goods that can be sold for less, goods without brand, without conditions, but playing on the ignorance of our people, selling them that which would under other conditions be regarded as a fraud? That, I take it, is where we stand.

As a Representative I think that I have the moral courage to stand up and say: Frame and make all of the safeguards to save the public from harm, but do not unwisely begin by American legislation to wipe out of existence any legitimate industry, however simple, however great. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. May I ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that you are quite willing to levy such a tax upon oleomargarine as will give the General Government jurisdiction and control of its manufacture and sale?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Most certainly I am.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Whether that tax be 1 or 2 cents a pound, or whatever it may be?

Mr. FARQUHAR. And I hope every member of Congress feels as I do.

Mr. BRADY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Most certainly.

Mr. BRADY. I have been exceedingly interested in this discussion and particularly in the very able argument of the gentleman from New York, but I had hoped to hear an expression of opinion upon one point upon which I have not been able to obtain the information. I would like to know what expense will the execution of this law entail upon the Government. What officers are necessary to be created in order that this law may be executed? I undertake to say from my own experience and observation in the internal-revenue service, and after having been a collector for a long number of years, that it is impossible with the present force of revenue officers to execute this law, and it will be necessary in my judgment, therefore, to have a very large new force created in order to execute it properly.

It is proper that I should say in this connection that I favor the bill under consideration; but it is important that we should ascertain, and ascertain distinctly, what number of officers will be needed and what expense it will entail upon the Government for its proper enforcement before we do pass it.

Mr. GROUT. Does not the gentleman think that the tax of 10 cents is high enough to pay that? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRADY. I have no doubt that the tax is high enough; but how are you going to collect it without the officers? That is the question; and I was in hopes that that question would have been considered by some gentleman in this debate.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will state to the gentleman from Virginia that that is a proposition which has occurred to me within the last two or three days, and I must confess that I feel very much in the dark as to the answer. There will certainly be an inspector required both by day and night and a chemist in every factory wherever one is established throughout the country.

Mr. BRADY. And in addition will not a number of deputy collectors be required to go around and make these investigations and collect the taxes?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I should think so, certainly.

Mr. BRADY. Because it must be apparent that there will be more persons engaged in the sale of butter than are now engaged in the sale or manufacture of tobacco. Notwithstanding the vigilance of the force of inspectors and collectors at the present time there is no doubt that many frauds are constantly being perpetrated in the manufacture of cigars, &c.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But they will have to buy their stamps.

Mr. BRADY. Yes; but that is not all; there must be inspection, just as in distilleries and tobacco-manufacturing establishments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PRICE was recognized.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If I can be recognized I will yield ten minutes more to the gentleman from Virginia, if he desires it.

Mr. PRICE. You can not be recognized at this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will pardon me; I thought I was addressing the chairman of the committee, but I find I am mistaken.

Mr. PRICE. You certainly are mistaken if you suppose you can get the floor now. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Before the gentleman from Wisconsin proceeds I wish to make a single remark. It has been suggested that it would take a large force to enforce the law collecting a tax from oleomargarine, larger than to regulate the sale of whisky and tobacco. I want to call attention to this fact. Every consumer is interested in the enforcement of the law as against oleomargarine, while they are all in exactly the opposite position in reference to the enforcement of the law as to whisky and tobacco.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to produce revenue, to preserve the dairy interests of the country from annihilation, to take care of the public health, and discourage dishonest practices among the people. If I could have the kind of legislation that I want it would not be a source of revenue, as I would make the tax so high that the operation of the law would utterly destroy the manufacture of all counterfeit butter and cheese as I would destroy the manufacture of counterfeit coin or currency.

But we have no constitutional authority to do this, and therefore the primary object of this bill must be to raise revenue, and the three other purposes can only be attained so far as they are collateral to the first.

The cost of producing a pound of these villainous imitations is about 8 cents; the tax, as provided by this bill, is 10 cents per pound; the license of a wholesale dealer is $40 per month; and the license of a retail dealer $4 per month.

If a wholesale dealer should sell 4,000 pounds per month the license would cost him 1 cent per pound. If he sold 1,000 pounds the license would cost 4 cents per pound.

If he sold 10 tons per month, it would cost him about one-fourth of one cent per pound. The retailer who sold 400 pounds per month would have to pay 1 cent per pound; if he sold 800 pounds, it would cost him one-half of 1 cent per pound; if he sold 1,600 pounds per month, it would cost him one-fourth of 1 cent per pound.

Thus, 8 cents cost of making, 10 cents tax, 1 cent license to wholesale dealer, and 1 cent license to retail dealer, and the whole cost would be 20 cents per pound, 12 cents of which would go to the Government; and this, on 150,000,000 pounds, which is the estimated amount annually made, would produce a revenue of $18,000,000 annually.

Of course these figures can not be relied on as mathematically correct, but they may be regarded as near to a correct approximation to the actual conditions as it is possible to make on a subject of this character.

But independent of the revenue thus to be derived directly by the passage of this bill, a powerful argument in its favor is found in the fact that three-fourths of the people are interested in farming; they pay 75 per cent. of the taxes, and owe one-half of what they are assessed on.

As a class, they are poor and need protection from bogus-makers and bunko-men. They are being driven from their farms, and lands are rapidly falling into fewer hands.

The unequal distribution of wealth in other countries has destroyed all possibility of an equality of political rights, and is fast approaching that condition in America. The founders or fathers of our system builded as wisely as they could have done with the light they had; but it was a terrible omission that there was not set a bound to the acquirement of unnecessary and extraordinary wealth generally, and particularly to the possession of land. The only reason that ever existed for exclusive legal right over any part of the earth grew out of man's necessities.

The forests and streams once furnished the necessary food for the human family, and if that condition of things had remained there never would have been heard of one man owning a part of the earth to the exclusion of the balance of mankind. But the human family increased and the supply diminished, and the cultivation of the soil became a necessity to prevent suffering and starvation.

Man then, in the aggregate, which means society, declared that he who would cultivate a portion of the soil should be protected in the exclusive possession of so much as was thus cultivated during the lifetime of the occupant, and at his death it became the property of whoever first succeeded in gaining possession of it. This "life lease" of it was for a time sufficient inducement for the human family.

But in time this became insufficient, and still more perfect and enduring titles were guaranteed, because they were necessary for the support of the human family. No one holds or possesses exclusive rights of ownership over an inch of soil in the universe by any Divine right. The exclusive title was only vested in the individual, and society excluded therefrom, as a necessity growing out of the circumstance that the cultivation of the soil was necessary that man might live.

The recognition of this fundamental principle would lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the individual should only be permitted to exercise exclusive ownership over so much of the earth as he can and will cultivate. This principle has been lost sight of until to-day tracts of land large enough for an empire are held and owned by individual citizens, from which, of course, all others are excluded, in violation of good policy and sound economic principles.

This is in conflict with and destructive of the only principle that justifies vesting the exclusive ownership in land.

I know not how we may remedy the wrong so far as it exists without doing a greater wrong; but we may and should prevent the further adoption of this disastrous practice, and if we can not get back to the right place, we can at least avoid traveling further from it.

We have more land tenants to-day than has France, and while farmers are making a heroic fight for an existence, there approaches one of their principle means of support—the dairy interest—the scalpers of the cities, the men who have cornered pork, cornered lard, cornered wheat, oats and corn, cornered butter, who are now trying to get a corner on legislation, and who, if they succeed here, will next try to get a corner on the plan of salvation.

Every man who has sufficient intelligence to find his way to Washington after his election, knows that the dairy interest employs from six to eight millions of American citizens; that this dairy interest is a necessity to all other branches of agriculture, as the keeping of stock is necessary to create or continue the conditions of soil necessary to the production of other crops.

This fraud is young in years and yet it is so old that it has decreased the value of the milch cows of the country millions of dollars and decreased the number by many thousands, when they were increasing before its introduction in three years in Iowa alone from 300,000 to 1,250,000.

It has also so seriously affected our export trade that soon the nations of the world will treat American butter as Germany has already treated the American hog.

Already this cheat, this fraud, this counterfeit, has destroyed 20 or 25 per cent. of the dairy interests of the United States, and 300,000 milch cows were slaughtered last year in Chicago alone, and yet when we attempt to pass a bill to protect the people from a spurious and unhealthy substitute for butter; when we make an effort to protect the dairy interests of the country, we are gravely met with the statement of its doubtful constitutionality.

Mr. Chairman, if a hostile band of Indians was on its way to the capital and a measure was before the House to provide for the common defense, and you would appeal to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] for a plan of safety, he would study the Constitution to learn his duty, until our several scalps would be found gracefully dangling from their savage belts.

If a hostile fleet were to sail up the Potomac and open its batteries upon this capital, and we were to appeal for advice to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], he, too, would suddenly be seized with an unusual reverence for the Constitution, and this temple would tumble about our ears before he would adopt any defensive measures of doubtful constitutionality.

The Constitution was never intended and should never be invoked to shield a fraud. The Constitution was framed and adopted to define rights and secure them; to protect all legitimate industries; to punish all attempts to cheat and defraud; to stimulate and encourage honest commerce, honest living, and honest gains; and yet when we find that offal from the butcher shops, the decayed and decaying carcasses of the stock-yards, and dogs killed because suspected of being affected with rabies are being worked up into the oils and fats that go to make up the infernal compounds, or at least some of them, that are palmed off on the public as food, as butter; when we are confronted with the fact that a few men in our cities are amassing princely fortunes by this system of counterfeiting, while the legitimate manufacturers of butter are being starved and strangled; when there comes up to this Congress a united voice from the agriculturists of the entire country for legal protection from this system of piracy we find ourselves confronted with opposition because the opponents doubt its constitutionality.

I am not a constitutional lawyer, and I am rather glad that I am not, if its study should lead me only where it has led so many members of this House, to only invoke its aid by construing it to justify what I wanted indorsed and to prohibit only that which I wish condemned.

It is enough for me to know that these imitations of food are destructive of good health, that the traffic in them is destructive of good morals, and that their continuance will wipe out one of the most universal and most necessary industries of a class of our people who are sorely distressed financially already, and without whose prosperity the nation can not be prosperous.

It may be said, nay, is said, that some of these counterfeits are not unhealthy. For the sake of argument, let us concede this; but is there a man on this floor bold enough to assert that all of them are healthy, and that either of them may be taken into the human stomach without danger? And if some are safe and others dangerous; if some are healthy and others poisonous, will some one who is friendly to the continued manufacture of and traffic in these several compounds tell me, tell this House how the citizen can know which he can safely use, or which of them he must reject as possessing the seeds of disease and death? To do so with certainty he must be deeply learned as a chemist, and take with him to the table of the hotel, the restaurant, and the lunch-counter his microscope and other scientific appliances, with which to analyze before partaking of anything set before him in the semblance of butter.

But they who oppose this bill say that it is a "cheap substitute," the "poor man's butter," and that if its manufacture and sale are stricken down legitimate butter would demand so high a price as to be beyond the reach of men and families of small means.

The testimony before the committee was that one grocer in this city and one grocer in New York had fairly tried the experiment of selling it as an imitation, and had utterly failed to sell it as such; that no man in either city could be induced to buy it at all when he knew its true character, or rather its uncertain character; that no man could be found poor enough to buy this "poor man's butter."

It is a well-established fact that to sell it at all to the consumer the consumer must be deceived, must be cheated. True there may be, and is, a commerce kept up in it to a certain point without deception.

The maker and wholesale and retail dealer may deal in it in its true character, but when it is sold by the firkin, tub, or jar to the keeper of the hotel or eating-house, where is the security that they will not place it before their guests as butter? The fact that they purchased it is prima facie evidence that they meant to place it on their tables, and where will you find the type of man or woman who, being the guest, would touch the unclean thing knowing it to be other than butter?

It might be an imitation both palatable and healthy, but the possibility that it might be otherwise would cause it to be treated as a stranger of unsavory reputation.

Again, you are afraid that, this competition destroyed, the price of pure butter would become so high as to place it beyond the reach of the mass of our people.

I have before me a pamphlet sent me by the most extensive manufacturers of imitation butter in the country, sent to convert me to the support of their product, in which I find the statement:

As it is dishonestly claimed that butterine and other butter substitutes have unfavorably affected the value of dairy products, the official record of prices in New York, given below, sufficiently [explode] uphold that assertion.

Actual prices realized show that since butterine has been regularly sold natural butter has obtained better prices than before butterine became a competitor.

Read the comparative figures compiled from official records showing the New York wholesale prices for best butter in January and July for five years prior to the war, and for the five years beginning with 1877, when oleomargarine first came prominently before the public.

January	25	21	25	20	21
July	22	19	18	18	15
Average	23½	20	21½	19	18

Average for five years, 20⅞ cents.

	1877.	1878.	1879.	1880.	1881.
January	31	30	20	30	28
July	20	17	14	22	24
Average	25½	23½	17	26	26

Average for five years, 23⅜ cents, or about 16 per cent. higher during the five years in which oleomargarine was first known.

Follow the same line of investigation we find the prices for the last four years to have been as follows:

WHOLESALE PRICES FOR BEST BUTTER IN NEW YORK.

Average	32	30	29	25½

*To June 24.

Average for four years past 29½, or about 45 per cent. higher than before oleomargarine was known, and as compared with 1877 to 1881, inclusive, 6 cents per pound higher during 1882, 1883, 1884, and 1885, in which injury to dairy interests has been most loudly claimed.

Mr. WISE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WISE. You started out in this discussion by telling us this legislation is necessary for the protection of the farmer. Now, if it be true that since the introduction of oleomargarine butter the farmer gets a better price for his butter, will you please tell me where is the necessity of interposing for the protection of the farmer?

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman misstates me when he makes me say that the primary object is to protect the farmer. I have told you the primary object is to secure revenue.

Mr. WISE. I stated that you started out in this discussion by saying that this legislation is necessary for the protection of the farmer.

Mr. PRICE. I beg your pardon.

Mr. WISE. I certainly understood you to say so.

Mr. PRICE. Then you did not understand what I said, and that is not my fault.

Mr. WISE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said the primary object was for revenue but the incidental protection was for the farmer. Now, is the farmer incidentally protected?

Mr. PRICE. If the gentleman will not halloo too loud, so as to disturb my nervous system, I will answer him. [Laughter]. I will repeat what I said at the outset of my remarks, and I ask the gentleman to listen this time so he will not have to ask me the question again. I said:

The purpose of this bill is to produce revenue—

That was my first sentence—

to preserve the dairy interests of the country from annihilation, to take care of the public health, and discourage dishonest practices among the people.

Mr. WISE. How do you save the dairy interests of the country from annihilation?

Mr. PRICE. I will tell you if you will wait a while. The first step to secure it from annihilation is to place it out of the power of any miserable, soulless wretch who will take the offals of our stock-yards and make them into the semblance of butter to cheat the poor man whom the gentleman loves so dearly.

So that out of their own mouths are they condemned, so far as the pretense has been made or will be made that they are furnishing a cheaper article of food than straight butter.

But suppose, for the sake of the argument, that it is cheaper, is there a man reckless enough to assert the probability that it would remain cheaper, after it had destroyed utterly, as it has now materially, the legitimate dairy interests of the country?

After our cows had been killed, and thus the supply of meat destroyed, and after the whole industry had been throttled and our creameries and cheese factories should stand as silent monuments of our folly, and these men "should be masters of the situation," are they so immaculate, so unselfish, as not to take advantage of their power, unchecked by competition, as to furnish to the world their wares at the lowest possible price? Or would they not act like the rest of mankind, and charge all they could get? And where would be the bounds to that possibility with their competitors driven from the field?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PRICE. I have not much time left, and there is a better speaker than I am awaiting his opportunity to be heard.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I question if he is a better speaker than you are. I understand my friend to say the number of cattle has decreased.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does the gentleman speak of certain States? And does he speak of butter-making cattle or of the entire stock of cattle?

Mr. PRICE. Men who have made the subject a study tell us the number of milch cows throughout the States of the Union has decreased 25 to 40 per cent.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. You mean milch cattle?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand there has been a decrease of dairy cattle in certain States. I would ask the gentleman whether the reduction is not due, in a measure, to the fact that a much larger number of cattle have been produced farther west at a much less cost?

Mr. PRICE. The number of grazing cattle was increasing with gratifying rapidity. But since this thing struck that industry it has been decreasing in an alarming ratio. I have in a speech made by the honorable Commissioner of Agriculture a short time ago in Chicago this startling fact, that to-day within the limits of the United States there are fewer cattle per capita for the people of the United States than there were in 1870.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. When did the competition of this article become especially noticeable in this country?

Mr. PRICE. Oh, you would have me to go away back to the time of the Franco-German war, when this article originated as a military necessity.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But that was not my question. I did not ask when the process was invented, but I asked you when the competition of this article was materially felt in this country.

Mr. PRICE. It has been chiefly within the past three or four years.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As I understand, the reduction in the number of dairy cattle has gone on pari passu with the growth of this article.

Mr. PRICE. That is the view taken by every gentleman skilled in the subject who appeared before the committee, and I presume it is true. I have not personally examined the question.

I want to emphasize another fact which the Commissioner of Agriculture states to us; that while the number of cattle in the United States is such that if you were to put them into a herd beginning at Faneuil Hall, in Boston, they would make a line twelve abreast extending to San Francisco and back to New York, yet we have less beef in the United States per capita now than in 1870. So that, notwithstanding the increase of cattle in the West, the decrease of cattle production in the States east of the Mississippi and the increase of population has changed the relation of the meat supply to the demand in such a manner as to more than counterbalance the increase of cattle in the West. Therefore I say we can not afford to let this dairy industry be broken down, even if we regard it alone with reference to the future meat supply of the country.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend indulge me in one more question? I understand him to say that we are availing ourselves of a constitutional power to collect revenue and at the same time to do away with a great evil, the perpetration of a fraud upon the dairy interests of this country?

Mr. PRICE. To lessen it; I do not think we shall entirely do away with it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does my friend desire to have the ultimate object in this case—and I agree with him about the necessity of correcting this evil—does he desire to have the ultimate object the collection of revenue, or is his object to wipe out this trade?

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman was not in when I began my remarks. I then stated that the primary object was the revenue, but that incidentally there were these other objects. If I could do as I would we should get no revenue, because I would interdict the whole business, just as I would the manufacture and the traffic in counterfeit money.

But, as I can not do that constitutionally, I propose to take advantage of the constitutional power that I have to make this trade contribute to the revenues of the Government and at the same time to restrict it and lessen the evil.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am not raising the constitutional question at all. I am only seeking to get at the best way of doing away with this evil.

Mr. PRICE. I do not suppose it will ever be blotted out entirely. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] tells us that it never can be, and I presume it never will be.

We have been for eighteen hundred years making laws against counterfeiting and all the other crimes known to the calendar, and none of them are yet completely wiped out; yet that is no reason for failing to do what we can to stop a nefarious business—nefarious because it is deceptive in its character, nefarious because it is injurious to the human system, nefarious because it is destructive to the revenues and to the general prosperity of our country. I do not presume that we shall ever get it wiped out entirely, but in the name of common sense what are we here for but for the purpose of restricting and crippling all such evils to the extent that we have the power to do it under the Constitution?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am in favor of making it sail under its own flag.

Mr. PRICE. I would be content with that if it could be done, but no man in this House has ingenuity enough to cipher out a plan by which you can do that except under the police power of this nation.

Mr. BAYNE. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will allow me to suggest, I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] means to indicate that he would prefer a lower tax than 10 cents a pound.

Mr. PRICE. Undoubtedly. I do not doubt that many excellent gentlemen entertain that opinion, but in the opinion of the committee—their unanimous opinion with one exception—the taxes named in this bill are not too high, because we believe the manufacturers of this article can pay all the taxes enumerated in the bill and then put it on the market at 20 cents a pound, which is 10 cents less than good butter can be bought for. Gentlemen say to us, "Compromise! compromise! This is too severe." There can not be anything too severe in this business. Why should we throw away nine millions of revenue by taking a 5-per cent. tax instead of 10? Why should we favor this business? Take the half-dozen boards of trade that appear as its advocates. Are you going to put the views and interests of those few fat, sleek, kid-glove millionaires against the interests of the fifty thousand people who petition against this thing?

A dispatch has been read here from the Board of Trade of Pittsburgh, in which they state that this article is cheap. I have exploded that theory, I think, pretty effectually, but if it is going to be cheap, if these men who deal in it can still hoodwink the people and still put an indigestible and unpalatable article upon the market under the guise of butter or something else, selling it to the people under false pretenses, I would simply increase the tax up to the required point. But it is not cheap, if Plankinton and Armour's pamphlet tells the truth, and if the testimony before our committee is to be trusted. The fact is that the few men who deal in the article get all the benefit of it in money, and the consumers have simply the disadvantage of eating an impure article at a high price.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Judge KELLEY], opposes the bill because of the revenue it would produce, and this increased revenue might by some possibility lessen the reasons for protecting Pennsylvania iron.

I have always admired the gentleman as one of the nation's ablest defenders of our protective system. I have always honored him for his fidelity to the interests of his State; but the horizon of his vision is bounded by the iron and steel interest, to the utter neglect of the more important and equally honorable interests of agriculture.

To keep up a protective tariff he would release liquors and tobacco from their just contribution to our revenues, and having proceeded this far, it is not strange that he should antagonize this measure.

I have sat at his feet and taken lessons in political economy for a third of a century, but I must leave him here. When I say that protection to American industry is the only sound theory of government, I mean protection to all interests, and all our people—I mean not only protection against the cheaper productions of a cheaper people than Americans should be, but protection from counterfeit money, counterfeit food, and counterfeit pretensions. In short, protection against anything and everything that approaches our people the tendency of which is to make our whole people less self-supporting and self-respecting; and these considerations lead me irresistibly to the support of this bill, the effect of which would be to protect the toilers on the millions of farms of our land against the fat, sleek, kid-gloved gentry who manipulate boards of trade in the interest of the pig-sty dairymen of the cities.

Mr. KLEINER. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. PRICE. Certainly.

Mr. KLEINER. It is assumed, of course, that the interdiction of this product manufactured from lard or whatever it may be is for the benefit of the farmer. Now, on the other hand, it is claimed that by this manufacture the value of cattle is enhanced about $3 a head.

Mr. PRICE. Is there a man on earth who says that except the Chicago Board of Trade?

Mr. KLEINER. Now, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. PRICE. Permit me to answer your last remark. There are fifteen millions of milch cattle in the United States that have depreciated in value $10 apiece since this product came into use; and thirty thousand are being killed annually in Chicago.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let me say to the gentleman that nobody has better information in regard to this question than the Chicago Board of Trade——

Mr. PRICE. But what do they care about the interests of the farmer? I would as soon trust a Winnebago Indian with a jug of whisky as trust to the Chicago Board of Trade any question relating to the interests of the farmer. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. I will say to the gentleman that they have a pretty good idea of all business questions.

Mr. PRICE. Oh, I have no doubt of that; but it is their purposes and motives I object to. They would throttle all the interests of the farmer that they might live in luxury.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman talks about their "purposes." I would remind him that we had a riot in Chicago a few days ago, and our board of trade raised $15,000 for the benefit of the families of the policemen who were killed in the streets by the socialists.

Mr. PRICE. They could well afford to raise that sum to mitigate, in some degree, the injuries resulting from a bloody riot superinduced by the wide distinction made between the laboring classes on the one hand and those who would stand upon the necks of better men than themselves and grind them into powder. If those men had conducted themselves decently in the years of the past, recognizing their fellow-men as belonging to the great brotherhood of man, there would have been no riot there. There has been none in my own town, and none anywhere where men have been treated decently.

Mr. Chairman, I would protect the agricultural interest of the country generally, and the dairy interest in particular, against these pirates on the sea of commerce who find their principal supporters among gentlemen who represent sections of the country which are more distinguished for the amount of Cain and Democratic majorities that they raise than for their agricultural products.

Of the seven million farmers in the United States there comes to this Congress no protest against this bill.

But, on the contrary, we have been overwhelmed with petitions humbly but earnestly asking us to save them from the knife that is placed at their necks, who would poison our people, teach the rising generation to thrive by fraud and deception, decrease the meat supply, and destroy the dairy interests of the country. And opposing these comes only the boards of trade of some of our cities—to which the cities of Saint Paul and Saint Louis form honorable exceptions—and a half dozen manufacturers of bogus butter.

On which side will gentlemen array themselves? Their vote on this bill will show more plainly and emphatically than any professions made in their canvass for the right to vote on the subject.

I have before me the list of private petitions sent to us to pass this or a similar bill:

I take the liberty of appending to my remarks the report of the committee on this subject:

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6570) entitled "A bill to prevent the illegal sale of all imitations of dairy products, and for other purposes," beg leave to submit the following report to accompany the substitute therefor:

The subject-matter embraced in this bill is one of great magnitude and grave importance. The jurisdiction over it by this committee was conferred by a direct vote of the House, and imposes a responsibility fully appreciated, but which the committee have endeavored to discharge fully and conscientiously.

The power of the Federal Government to impose an internal-revenue tax upon the manufactured compounds sold as imitations and counterfeits of butter, as enumerated in the second section of the substitute bill reported by the committee, is too well established by a long line of precedents to require any argument; indeed, as far as your committee are advised, this power is unquestioned and universally conceded by those who deny the necessity or expediency of such a tax. This power to tax is not limited alone to the necessities of the Government for the amount of revenue derived. It has been invoked in more than one instance to provide for the general welfare and sustained by the highest judicial tribunal of the land. It is contended by some that the tax on oleomargarine, as defined in the bill, is excessive, and is advocated for the purpose of destroying or impairing its manufacture and sale, and is, therefore, beyond the constitutional power of Congress. It is a sufficient answer to this to say that, the power to tax being conceded, there is no limitation to its exercise except the discretion and wisdom of Congress.

"The power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons, but the responsibility of the Legislature is not to the courts, but to the people by whom its members are elected." (Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wallace, 533.)

The only remaining question is as to the propriety of this legislation at this time.

The Committee on Agriculture have given the subject a patient and, so far as practicable, an exhaustive examination, and in the course of that investigation have listened to arguments by representatives of the National Butter, Cheese, and Egg Association; the Iowa Butter and Cheese Association; the Baltimore Produce Exchange; American Agricultural Association; the New York Retail Grocers' Union; the American Agricultural and Dairy Association; Hon. Norman J. Colman, Commissioner of Agriculture, and Dr. Loring, ex-Commissioner of Agriculture, of the United States, as well as representatives of the manufacturers and dealers in oleomargarine.

They find that there are in the United States over 15,000,000 cows, producing annually over 1,000,000,000 pounds of butter and 300,000,000 pounds of cheese, and that the product is worth $250,000,000; that about an equal amount of milk is consumed as milk, so that the product of the dairy interest of the United States is worth $500,000,000 annually; that cows were worth on an average $40 per head until the introduction of counterfeit butter, and are now worth but $30 each, making a total loss of $150,000,000 in milch cattle alone; that during last year there were slaughtered in Chicago alone about 300,000 milch cows, or an average of about 1,000 per day; that there are from four to five million American citizens engaged in the dairy business, and that they must all abandon it and be driven into some other already overworked branch of industry unless they can be relieved from the present ruinous competition with cheap imitations of butter and cheese; that the dairy interest is a necessity to all other branches of agriculture, as it is the cheapest and most reliable means of producing or continuing the conditions of soil necessary to the production of crops of grain and grass; that the cost of producing the usual imitations of butter is from 7 to 8 cents a pound, and the cost to the consumer has been and is about equal with the price of genuine butter; that such imitations are not only disastrous to the dairy interest directly and to all branches of agriculture indirectly, but that they are detrimental to public health, being the fruitful cause of dyspepsia and other diseases; that among the articles and ingredients used in the manufacture of such imitations there are the following: Nitric acid, sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, butyric acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, curcumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry-blood albumen, saltpetre, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, caparic acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame (or benne), turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, cows' udders, sal-soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, bromochloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda.

From the best and most reliable information obtainable your committee believe that about 200,000,000 pounds of spurious and imitation compounds and mixtures are now being manufactured annually, which not only takes the place of so much butter, but stops the consumption of much more by the demoralization of the trade.

Your committee further believe that the unrestricted traffic in counterfeit butter is demoralizing in its effect upon the people; that the existence of such base counterfeits has already seriously impaired our export trade and will result in still greater damage if not checked.

It further appears, from all the information before your committee, that at least nine-tenths of the people of the United States demand this legislation.

In view of all these facts your committee respectfully report the accompanying bill as a substitute for House bill No. 6570, and recommend its passage; and also in lieu of all the bills and memorials relating to this subject which have been referred to the committee, and which are herewith reported back with the recommendation that they do lie upon the table.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] has seventeen minutes.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, in what I have to say upon the proposition contained in this bill to tax the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine I shall attempt to answer two questions. First, is such tax lawful; second, is it necessary?

The answers to these questions will run somewhat together. But, first—

IS IT LAWFUL?

The right of taxation is one of the essential powers of government. Section 8, Article I of the Constitution, designates how, under our system, this power shall be exercised. It reads:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts, provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

Under this explicit grant of authority Congress has dealt with the subject of taxation in all its branches as the public necessities and general welfare have demanded.

In the leading case of Hylon, plaintiff in error, vs. The United States (3 Dallas, 171), Mr. Justice Patterson quotes approvingly from Smith's Wealth of Nations (volume 3, page 341), as follows:

Consumable commodities, whether necessaries or luxuries, may be taxed in two different ways; the consumer may either pay an annual sum on account of his using or consuming goods of a certain kind, or the goods may be taxed while they remain in the hands of the dealer and before they are delivered to the consumer.

The tax here spoken of was an excise tax the same as that proposed by this bill. Note the language: "Consumable commodities, whether necessaries or luxuries, are taxable." Hence the fact that oleomargarine is an alleged article of food and may be classed with necessaries can in no way affect the power of Congress to tax it. It can only be a fact addressed to the discretion of Congress in the exercise of the power. But if Congress exercise the discretion and impose the tax it has only done that which a plain grant of the Constitution empowers it to do. Though the tax be unwisely imposed, it is, nevertheless, lawful. If the tax should prove a mistake, it would be a mistake of fact and not of law; and the remedy would be not with the courts but with the people. The courts would have no power to make correction; a subsequent Congress would.

The right to tax consumable commodities should not be confounded with the right to prohibit the production and sale of them. But the distinction between the two, which is a broad one, has evidently been lost sight of by those who deny or doubt the power of Congress to lay this tax on oleomargarine. This is to be inferred from the fact that they cite the case of The People vs. Marx, decided in June last in the New York court of appeals (54 Sickles, page 377), as an authority against the constitutionality of this bill. This case is upon the lips of every defender of bogus butter. It is confidently referred to as an authority against any rightful legislative control of the subject. Now, the only applicability of the Marx case to the bill before us is that both relate to oleomargarine.

The bill proposes to tax it. The Marx case says not one word about taxation. It contains no hint even upon the subject. It simply holds a statute in New York which prohibited the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine unconstitutional, in a case where it was not shown that it was unwholesome, and in which it was admitted that it was not sold for butter, but was sold for just what it was.

The head-note of the Marx case shows just what was decided. It is as follows:

A legislative enactment which absolutely prohibits an important branch of industry not shown to be injurious to the community and not fraudulently conducted, solely for the reason that it competes with another industry and may reduce the price of an article of food, is unconstitutional.

Now every good lawyer will agree that as the Marx case was made up the decision was a sound one. The difficulty in that case lay, in the first place, in the statute, which was one of absolute prohibition; and in the second place in the grounds upon which the prosecuting officer rested his case.

It will appear also from a careful examination of the full text of this case that had it been shown that oleomargarine is unwholesome, or that it is made in imitation of butter, and as a fraud upon butter, the court would have held even the prohibitory statute valid. Now, if upon these grounds a prohibitory statute would be valid, certainly there can be no objection to the bill before us, which only proposes, by a tax upon the article, to so identify it that this fraudulent product shall be sold for just what it is.

There can be no doubt but this tax, if imposed, will be "lawful." The only real question is, is it "expedient?"

IS IT NECESSARY?

In answering this question we must look just a little into the character of oleomargarine and of the fraudulent trade in it.

An ancient writer of high repute said: "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." Oleomargarine is one of them. It must have been the very one that crowded in ahead of all others upon Solomon's sorrowing vision as he bewailed the departure of man from the "upright." In all the crookedness of man, in both ancient and modern times, the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine must stand first among his false and deceptive works. It is in the first place a counterfeit. It is studiously made to resemble in all respects butter. And the resemblance is so close that only the microscope or a chemical analysis will detect the difference; and some assert that neither the microscope nor chemistry can tell the one from the other.

But this last is one of the falsehoods of this false business, to which is always added, "If science can not tell the difference, then what is the difference? Why is it not as good as butter?" But I repeat, this should be branded as a falsehood. Certainly Professor Taylor's microscope reveals even to the unpracticed eye an unmistakable difference, much like the difference between the green leaf of spring and the dead leaf of autumn. To this many gentlemen upon this floor can testify. But it is a counterfeit, a confesssd counterfeit, better calculated to deceive than the most skillful counterfeit of the current coin or paper money of the United States. Like the pirate, who displays a friendly flag, it sails under false colors; and like the pirate and the counterfeiter it takes from others without giving an equivalent in return. It is manufactured for 8 or 9 cents per pound and sold to the consumer for 20 or 30 cents per pound; not for what it is, but for pure butter; just as the counterfeit dollar is passed not for what it is, but for what it appears to be. But it is said that the manufacturer sells to the dealer for just what it is. In most instances very likely. So does the maker of counterfeit money supply the one who puts it into circulation for just what it is; but never at a fair profit only on what it cost him to make it. He would want at least about one-half the whole fruit of the fraud; just as he who steals a horse would be willing to pass it to the receiver at perhaps half its value, who in turn would have a margin left for his share. So it is with this oleomargarine trade. Between the first cost and the price paid by the consumer enormous profits cluster along the way. If these profits were legitimate no fault could be found; but they are won by fraud. They are made by selling oleomargarine for butter. Not one pound in a million of this counterfeit stuff is bought and eaten by the consumer for what it is. Like the counterfeiter's victim, who "took it for a dollar," one always buys butter, but in blissful ignorance he too often eats oleomargarine. The only way one can be certain is to establish a chemist's laboratory in his kitchen and plant a microscope by his plate.

The oleomargarine trade is by no means a small affair. It is simply immense. It is estimated that at least 150,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were made in the United States during the last year—7,500 tons. At 8 cents per pound it cost $12,000,000; sold as butter at 25 cents per pound the people paid for it $37,500,000—a downright swindle upon them of at least $25,000,000, allowing $500,000 for legitimate profit, if indeed there can be any such thing as legitimate profit in a fraudulent business like this. Can it be that a free people will let a fraud upon themselves of this magnitude go unwhipped of justice? Can it be that they will sit quietly by and let this counterfeit butter business fatten off their gullibility at the rate of $25,000,000 annually, in fact in a much larger sum in the future, for the business is rapidly increasing?

If oleomargarine be the poor man's blessing, as is claimed, it should be secured to him at the poor man's price. But this will never be till compelled, as proposed by this bill, to go upon the market in no guise but its own and under no name but its own. As oleomargarine it will pay the tax proposed by this bill, and then reach the poor man's table at much less cost than it now does; if indeed it be fit to eat, of which a word in a moment. But it now sells for the price of butter, from 20 to 30 cents per pound, and leaves the poor man without the blessing which it falsely promises him. It thus gathers in $25,000,000 ill-gotten gains annually, the very harvest of fraud itself, and at the same time strikes a staggering blow upon an honest industry in which millions of the working men and women of this country now gain only a hard-earned livelihood. Now this is oleomargarine, an acknowledged counterfeit, but deceitfully passed for the true; intrenched behind the millions it has filched from the people in the name of butter; false to its promises to the poor; the disturber of our industries; the very embodiment of falsehood and fraud. And yet this false-faced monster sits with us familiarly at table in the dress of an old friend, and makes his oily way into the very citadel of man's affections. Then, if in the silent watches of the night the stomach becomes suspicious that it may be "entertaining an angel unawares," and yearns—for information as to the character of this nocturnal visitor, which the friends of oleomargarine tell us comes as an angel laden with blessings for the race, it is respectfully referred to the Patent Office reports. [Laughter.]

Volume 5 is taken down and opened to page 329, and the poor benighted stomach asks if the angel was made under patent No. 148767, which is as follows: "This substitute for butter" "consists of a base of yolk of eggs, butter, and milk, agitated in a zinc vessel that has been coated with a solution of niter." But hearing no response, it takes down volume 22 and opens to page 1489, and reads in patent No. 266777 this formula for making a "substitute for butter" "consisting of cotton-seed oil or other vegetable oils treated with a solution of caustic soda in combination with farinaceous flour, which had previously been thoroughly cooked in salt water as described; incorporating and agitating the mass, working in the oil, milk, coloring, and flavoring as per process described." But still there is no response. There can be no certainty of the parentage of the child in this patent; and lest the wondering stomach may find some worse formula for the manufacture of angels, it takes down volume 28 and looks hopefully for the pedigree of its particular guest in patent No. 301782, found on page 173:

"The process consists in first forming a soap emulsion of the fats or fatty oils with caustic soda; then precipitate the lyes; then applying chlorinated alkaline lye, or chlorinated gas, to the soap emulsion, as described."

But this formula is found to be so full of lyes (lies) and sounds so much like a receipt for making soap that the bewildered stomach abandons the inquiry, declaring in tones of astonishment that oleomargarine is, indeed, the mystery of mysteries—a far profounder mystery than hash or sausage. [Laughter.]

Let not this sad tale of a child without a father divert attention from the fact—let it the rather fix the mind upon it—that so long as bastard butter is sold for the genuine no purchaser can be sure but that he is eating it, nor can he be sure either of what ingredients it may be composed. It presents the well-known condition of every illegitimate birth, namely, an uncertain paternity; and as a doubtful place in the pedigree may let in bad blood, so uncertainty as to the ingredients of counterfeit butter admits the possibility that they may be unclean and unwholesome. Who can look with entire composure upon this possibility? Who will say that the things we eat ought not like Cæsar's wife to be above suspicion?

It will not be pretended but that a substitute for butter made according to the formula of M. Mége, the French inventor, is a wholesome food product. But this can not be said of all the American devices in which lard and vegetable oils and tallow take the place of margarine oil and in which various acids and alkalies are used, some of which, as every one knows, are not only unwholesome but absolutely dangerous. The following are a few of the many articles named in the many patents granted for the manufacture of substitute butter: Bisulphate of lime, borax, salicylic acid, benzoic acid, orris root, cotton-seed oil, bicarbonate of soda, glycerine, capsylic acid, alum, capsic acid, sulphite of soda, cows' udders, sulphuric acid, pepsin, tallow, lard, salt, corn starch, butyric ether, caustic potash, castor oil, chalk, slippery-elm bark, caul, oil of sesame, oil of sunflower seed, olive oil, turnip-seed oil, bromo-chloralum, chlorate of potash, oil of sweet almonds, oil of peanuts, peroxide of magnesia, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calf, nitrate of soda, mustard-seed oil, nitric acid, dry-blood albumen, sugar, butyric acid, bicarbonate of potash, and caustic soda.

Of course it does not necessarily follow that all or any of these articles enter into the manufacture of the oleomargarine product of this country; but there is a strong probability that many of them do. The following extract from a letter to the newspaper press of this city by Mr. J. H. Crane, a reputable provision dealer here, contains facts worthy of consideration, and he stated the same in substance before the Committee on Agriculture:

It is notorious that what is called butterine is now generally made in soap factories. It is only a few days since that the undersigned had sent to him from a large soap factory at the West, a sample of soap and a sample of butterine. The two go hand in hand together. Why is butterine made in soap factories? The reason is evident. It is because it can be made cheaper there. If "the ham-fat man" brings in more grease than is wanted for soap the surplus can be made into butterine. If he brings in more than is wanted for butterine the surplus can be turned into soap. In this way the two play into each other's hands. The process of bleaching and deodorizing is said to be about the same in each, the same poisonous alkalies being used in each. If wrong in this I stand ready to be corrected. It is a mistaken idea that some have that butterine is never made of anything but the purest leaf lard add best creamery butter. It may be that soap manufacturers buy pure leaf lard to use in their business. If so I have never heard of it. Butterine can be made of soap-grease, and I believe it is made of soap-grease, and sometimes of the most disgusting kind. The bleaching and deodorizing process it is put through makes it impervious to taste or smell.

The price it is sold at, it being sold just as low when pure butter is at 40 cents per pound as when it is 20, proves that but little, if any, butter enters into its composition. It having no smell or taste of its own, all that is needed is that the little smell and flavor it has shall be that of butter, which is obtained by churning it in buttermilk or milk. It is then salted and colored to suit the eye and taste, christened by some fancy name, and put upon the market as butter. When the butterine men were buying up all the Elgin butter they could get at 40 cents per pound a drummer from a neighboring city tried to induce men to buy what he called his fancy brand of butterine at 12 cents per pound, agreeing to mark it "Snow Flake Creamery, Morning Star Creamery, Rising Sun Creamery," or by any other high sounding name I might select, telling me he was selling it all over Washington to dealers, who in turn sold it for butter, he marking it "Fresh Creamery Butter," or by any other name they chose to have put on it.

But the worst remains to be told of this disreputable business. Formerly dead animals were collected and buried at a heavy expense. Now they command a premium, even to the rabid dogs. What becomes of them? Let the boiling establishments and the butterine factories answer. Horses dying with glanders or pneumonia, and dogs dying with rabies are all gathered up and carted to the boiling establishment, where the fat is extracted, put up in barrels and shipped away. This diseased fat, after being put in shipping order, is said to look as clean and nice as any other. What becomes of it? Where does it go, and for what purpose is it used? Is it marked to distinguish it from any other fat? I am told not by one who has been in the business. What assurance have we that it does not find its way to the butterine factories? None.

But, says some one, it is by no means certain that any of these unclean and unwholesome articles go into the manufacture of bogus butter. No, it is not certain that they do; but is it certain that they do not? Perchance they do. "Perchance" soap-grease. "Ay, there's the rub;" and when upon the authority of a respectable gentleman like Mr. Crane, we find soap and butterine coming from the same factory it would seem to "rub" pretty close.

As bearing upon this point I will also give a brief extract from a recent letter of Mr. O. M. Tinkham, secretary of the Vermont Dairymen's Association, to the Woodstock (Vt.) Standard, in which among other things he says:

I have a friend living near Boston who keeps from six to eight hundred hogs. To feed them he has the wastes and swill from some of the large hotels in the city. All the meats, fish, flesh and fowl, sauces, gravies, and all grease are dumped into one tub and carried out to the farm. This was formerly fed to the hogs, but was thought to be unhealthy by reason of too much grease, so he had large tanks made into which the stuff was dumped on arrival from the city, and water added, the whole thoroughly steamed and left to cool, which left a good cake of the grease on top of the mass when cold. This was taken off and sold to the "venderer" in the city. The "venderer" is the person to whom all the dead hogs that come in on the trains, the dead cattle and horses from the street, are sent to be disposed of. Once when my friend was in there he saw I think it was fifty tubs, of 30 pounds each, new Vermont spruce tubs, and lifting the covers saw they were filled with this "neutral grease," and said he had no doubt some of the grease he sold was in those tubs, of which I have no doubt, and that it was far better than some of the rest which made up the shipment. These tubs were marked for shipment to a man in New England who was running a creamery.

Now, both Mr. Tinkham and Mr. Crane state facts which tend very strongly to show that the "neutral grease" of the "venderer" does find its way into counterfeit butter.

The man running a creamery in New England to whom those fifty tubs of "venderer's grease" were directed was doubtless running the same kind of creamery that the man was who offered to Mr. Crane his fancy brand of butterine at 12 cents per pound to be marked "Snow Flake Creamery," &c. This New England creamery man, however, may have made some pure butter.

The fact is, bogus butter can be more cheaply produced in connection with the manufacture of creamery butter than elsewhere, because of the plentiful supply of buttermilk in which to churn the compound, and thus give it the flavor of butter; just as the bouquet is given to wines by the use of some aromatic substance. Every variety of imitation butter product, and their name is legion, is churned either in milk or buttermilk else it would be without the butter flavor and would deceive no one. At the creamery the buttermilk is at hand for this purpose; whereas if the margarine factory be remote a supply must be brought from a distance.

gin creameries the buttermilk in which to baptise, in the name of butter, probably a thousand tons a year of this counterfeit product; and pay for it, if the statement of their agent now in charge of their goods in the Central Market in this city can be relied upon, for he made the statement to me, $100 per day. Now, this is almost equal to the wag's formula for making a first-class article of chicken soup for boarding-house consumption, namely, drive a hen through a dish of hot water. O tempora! O mores! [Laughter.]

But enough about the character of counterfeit butter. It may be that the cheap grease known in the market as "neutral grease" when subjected to treatment by the alkalies and acids named in the various imitation-butter formulas is not absolutely unwholesome; for chemistry works wonders in the transformation of physical substances. I say this may be, but suppose it is, who wants to eat it? That this "neutral grease" is to a great extent used in the manufacture of these imitation products no reasonable person will doubt. The different formulas themselves prove it by the chemical agents which they contain for the manifest purpose of deodorizing and correcting it. Besides, as every one knows, it is a counterfeit and a fraud; and who is verdant enough to suppose that the counterfeiter would be at all scrupulous as to the materials he used in his business? The object is to make the counterfeit article at the least possible expense for the sake of the greatest possible profit. And if "neutral grease" can be obtained at one-fourth or one-third the expense of tallow or lard, who for a moment doubts which the counterfeiter would use?

But this stuff, even if not absolutely unwholesome, is not fit for a self-respecting American citizen to eat. It might answer for a digger Indian, who lives on snakes, or for the Mexican peon, who in his poverty consumes with avidity every organic part of the animal, excepting only the horns, hoofs, hair, and bones. It might answer for these, but it does not comport with our American civilization. It is no credit to it. It has no proper place in it, and it could not exist for a moment except through fraud and imposition. The American people can be in better business. With "cattle upon a thousand hills," and many, many thousand hills scattered all over our vast domain, where now grows wild grass or stands "the forest primeval," but where hardy husbandmen might graze and milk their herds of kine, and thrifty housewives might emulate the virtue and valor of Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, who "brought forth butter in a lordly dish," does it not seem like small business, like the disreputable business it is, for an able-bodied American citizen to be trying to find out how chemistry can extract from "cow's udders" the oil that shall give to tallow and lard and the intestinal and offal fats and "neutral grease" and the vegetable oils the taste of butter, thereby enabling the unscrupulous to sell them, after they are washed in buttermilk, for butter, and thus put these cheap and nasty fats into competition with the golden issues of the housewife's churn?

And this brings me to the chief reason for the passage of this bill, namely, the ruinous effect of this dishonest competition upon the great, in fact the greatest, industry of this country—an industry which while it gives employment to millions of capital and millions of men and women is yet made up from an aggregation of humble interests which, when treated fairly, only afford very small profits in return for much hard work.

Dairying is the largest single branch of American agriculture. The butter, milk, and cheese produced for the last year, as estimated by reliable experts, amounted to the enormous sum of $564,959,500. This is more than four times the value of the entire oat crop of the country; more than five times the value of the pig-iron product; more than twice the value of the iron and steel product; about four and one-half times the value of the cotton crop, and about $150,000,000 more than the entire wheat crop of the country. The amount invested in milch cows is about $700,000,000—more than the entire capital stock of all the national banks of the country.

Not only is dairying the great leading branch of our agriculture but it is so related to every other branch of that great industry that when it suffers the whole feels the depressing effect. Especially is this true in our older States where the soil, well-nigh exhausted by long-continued cropping, is arrested from further deterioration and brought back to a high degree of fertility by dairy farming, and thus worn-out lands are restored and more of every kind of agricultural product is produced, more forage for animals and more food for man. It is estimated that in dairying at least four millions of our population are employed, while agriculture in all its branches gives employment to almost one-half of our entire population who therefrom feed and clothe themselves and feed and clothe the other half.

Without agriculture we should go both hungry and cold. We should relapse into barbarism, should go back to the skins of beasts for clothing and hunt again the wild boar for food. A thrifty agriculture makes every other work of civilization possible. Without it the earth, the source of all wealth, would fail to yield her fruits and every other enterprise and industry would languish. We have already seen that the dairy interest is the very soul itself of our agriculture. Now, shall this interest be preserved, or shall it be sacrificed, not to a fair competition—if the competition were fair no fault would be found—but to a downright fraud, to a filthy counterfeit, masquerading in the stolen livery of the very industry it is seeking to overthrow? [Applause.]

Even if the competition were fair it would still present a serious question of public policy; one not only involving public health but the public intelligence and morals also, namely, whether we should kill out the dairy industry and cease to be a butter-eating people and feed upon the coarser and more cloying animal fats, thus taking a step back toward the raw tallow and lard which were the delight of our Saxon ancestors in the forests of Germany. It involves also another question which takes strong hold upon the labor problem, which has long vexed the governments of Europe, and now threatens the peace and prosperity of this Republic. It is this: Whether a few capitalists giving employment to a few thousand men shall be allowed to overwhelm with a fraudulent business an honest industry which gives employment to millions, and which is the very cream of that grand pursuit which, through the common mother of the race, provides for us all.

You have just passed a labor-arbitration bill and sent out a special committee to collect data for the adjustment of the delicate relations between capital and labor. But right here, in the disposition of this bill, is an opportunity to deal with the labor question from the very foundation, and in a way to dispense with arbitration bills and special committees, or make them a standing necessity. It has been said that "an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure." Enactments preventive of threatening evils are always wiser than the wisest provisions for the correction of those evils after they are developed. It is always the highest achievement of legislation to formulate laws which in their practical operation shall reconcile antagonisms and bring all interests into harmony. This can only be done by giving all men and all honest enterprises a fair chance.

Now, pass this bill and you take an important step in both remedial and preventive legislation. You at once relieve the dairy industry of the killing fraud which now completely paralyzes it. And as one of the immediate results the milch-cows, which as shown by the last report of the Commissioner of Agriculture were depreciated during the last year to the amount of $32,751,392, will be restored and doubtless somewhat advanced. This vast sum will thus be added to the exchangeable value of property not belonging to capitalists but to the millions of hard-working men who own those cows and are struggling to pay with the income from them the mortgages which capital holds upon their farms. Not only this, but the number of cows will be greatly increased. There will not be slaughtered 30,000 of them for beef in the city of Chicago for the year to come, as your committee reported there was in the year that is past. They will be wanted for the dairy. To this extent certainly there will be an increased demand upon those who breed cattle for beef; and that branch of agriculture, now sadly discouraged, will take a fresh start. More hay and grain must be provided for the support of this increased number of animals, both for beef and the dairy, and more men found to feed and care for them. A corresponding demand for labor on the farm will surely follow and will draw off from the employ of the great corporations, to which all surplus labor tends, the discontented ones who are now the leaders in labor disturbances, but who would find in the great, open field of agriculture, every department of which would feel the impulse of a restored dairy industry, an opportunity to gain for themselves and their families a subsistence, nay, more, a competence; and this is how the passage of this bill would begin to solve the labor problem. It would begin at the right end of it. [Applause.]

It would be far more to the point than arbitration bills and investigating committees. A restored dairy industry would surely occupy, with valuable improvements, new areas of land, and as surely restore to fertility the old, much of which now lies fallow, thus adding millions to the productive and taxable wealth of the country. Nor is this all. A return to the production of honest butter would restore our export trade. For the last five years, since false butter has usurped the place of the true, there has been a steady decline in the annual export of American butter. That which was bought and shipped for genuine too often turned out to be spurious. As the result no dealer would risk the sale of American dairy products in foreign markets, and the trade fell off. The extent of this decline is shown by the fact that in 1881 the total amount of American dairy exports was $22,636,272. In 1885 it was but $14,086,055, a decrease in four years of $8,548,220. Instead of this there should have been an equal or greater increase. There is still another humiliating fact in this connection. It is this: much of the butter which we exported in 1885 was not handled by American merchants, but by Canadian merchants, who first bought in our markets and shipped to Canada. Then, when reshipped from Canadian ports, it would go upon the European markets as Canadian butter, which is not yet under suspicion like our own. But let this same butter, perhaps perfectly pure, be shipped from an American port or by an American merchant, and it could be sold only at a reduced price.

Thus, because of these fraudulent imitations is the commerce of this the foremost people in all the earth driven like a culprit to the use of an alias in order to make its way into foreign markets; thus also are American merchants deprived of the profits of handling this merchandise in those markets; thus is an annual outlet for nearly $9,000,000 worth of dairy products closed and the business to that extent depressed; and thus as a people are we that amount poorer than we should be if that trade were not interrupted. We have that amount less annually of circulating medium, that amount less of gold and silver; for remember that our foreign exchange is always in gold and silver. Now pass this bill and give to American dairy products a reputable entrance into foreign markets and you will bring into the United States within the next ten years of foreign gold and silver $85,000,000 at least, and probably more. But this is a larger sum than proposed by the Blair bill for education at which so many upon this floor stand aghast. Pass this bill and you correct all the evils arising from counterfeit butter and put not only the dairy industry but the whole vast industry of agriculture upon a career of prosperity; and in its train shall follow all the other industries and the arts and the best culture of a progressive civilization. Refuse it, and you perpetuate all the evils above enumerated and engender others which in turn shall "become the hatch and brood of time." You deliberately protect a fraud which is sapping the very foundations of the farmer's success and crippling his every effort to get on in the world. You help capital, which holds the mortgage on his farm and owns also the oleomargarine factory, to destroy the butter market and thus deprive him of his last opportunity to keep down the interest on that mortgage, and then take from him the farm itself and turn him into the street a vagabond and a tramp; and when next you hear from him he is in the front rank of some labor agitation. Then to tide over the troubles produced by your unwise legislation a Congressional investigating committee will be in order.

By refusing this bill you continue a policy calculated to destroy the hope of the husbandman and drive not a few only but thousands from agriculture into other departments of labor already overcrowded. Can you afford to do this? Can you afford to break down and disperse into other pursuits the hardy tillers of the soil, thus lessening the number of producers and increasing the number of consumers? A sound public policy lies in just the opposite direction—in developing and fostering every department of our agriculture, whereby enough may be gathered of the products of the earth to feed and clothe and preserve from distress and agitation all other departments of industry, and at the same time contribute in the most effectual manner possible to the national wealth. But enough. The general wisdom of this bill will not be disputed. Its justice to the farmer must be admitted. The salutary effect it will have upon our industries is apparent. The general demand of the American people for wholesome articles of food calls for it.

But, say certain eminent lawyers upon this floor, it is unconstitutional. Of course, if it contravene the Constitution, however desirable it may be from every point of view, it should not receive the sanction of this body. But let us see.

We have already seen that the power of Congress to tax whatever article it will is limited only by its discretion.

But, says the objector, while Congress may tax, it can tax only for the purpose of revenue; and since the professed purpose of this bill is not to raise revenue but to regulate the sale of an article of commerce, it follows, says the objector, that there is no constitutional authority for it. But the bill proposes to raise, and if it becomes a law it will raise, revenue. Now, is not this fact alone a full answer to the objection? But, says the objector, though it may raise revenue that is not the motive in passing the bill. To this it is sufficient reply to say, that if Congress has power to levy the tax, and does levy it in legal form, the particular motive from which this is done is of no legal consequence whatever. It would fall within the rule laid down by Jacob Collamer, who died the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate, while a representative in that body from the little State of Vermont, and whose statue the State has since put in Memorial Hall as a fair type of the Vermonter and of Senatorial dignity and learning.

Now, when upon the bench of the supreme court of Vermont he said:

> Improper motives can never alter the character of a legal act. Whatever a man has a legal right to do he may do with impunity. (11 Vt., 22.)

So a legislative act which is in itself constitutional will not be made unconstitutional because it was passed from an improper motive.

The motive can not be reviewed judicially. It may be reviewed by the constituencies represented in this body but not by the courts.

Again, a legislative act such as the Constitution allows, which serves a constitutional purpose, does not become unconstitutional because it at the same time serves another purpose, which of itself would not bring the act within the purview of the Constitution.

Here the familiar principle governing the jurisdiction of cases before courts in chancery would apply. If the bill in equity present a single point where relief can not be had under the strict rules of law, and several points where the law would afford relief and thus defeat equity jurisdiction, yet a court of equity will always take jurisdiction upon the single point, and will then do equity upon all the matters presented by the bill, even though the principal points decided be those which the court could not have taken jurisdiction of alone.

In like manner if Congress have constitutional authority to tax imitation butter and pass a law to that effect the law is not unconstitutional because at the same time it may incidentally prevent the sale of it for genuine butter. This bill contains no provisions except such as lay the tax and provide for its collection. If those provisions are such as to prevent at the same time the fraudulent sale of oleomargarine, that can create no constitutional or other objection to the law. It should the rather be accepted as high proof of its wisdom. A law which will cut two ways and cut all the time for the right will not be held in disfavor by either the courts or the people.

Another objection by these left-handed defenders of the Constitution is, that this bill takes from the States the police power which the Constitution leaves to them.

They also say, even if Congress have the power it is too small business for the National Legislature, and as matter of policy should be left to the States.

But taxation can not be effective without complete police power over the article taxed; and as to the policy of Congress in dealing with this subject a precedent may be found in section 3328 of the Revised Statutes, which has been on the statute-book eighteen years, and which is for the protection of the wine industry of this country against imitation wines, and if some gentleman will tell us the difference between this section and the bill before us I will yield to him now.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is referring now to the Federal statutes?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And do I understand him to say that provision is made for levying this tax upon imitation wine?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir; in section 3328, which I would read had I the time and will do so if the gentleman will see that my time is extended.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No. I am not disputing the statement; but it has escaped my observation, and I only asked for information. It is a subject that I shall look into with interest.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What machinery is provided for collecting the tax?

Mr. GROUT. It is quite meager; but it is provided. How operative it is I do not know. But the statute is there, and the National Congress is committed to the policy. The statute puts the collection of this wine tax under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the same as this bill proposes to put this bogus-butter tax.

Now, who will say that a tax of 10 cents per pound on imitation butter is not as defensible on every ground as a tax of 10 cents per pint on imitation wines? And who will say it is any smaller or less worthy business to protect the dairy interest, which employs 4,000,000 laborers, with an annual product of $564,959,500, than the wine industry, whose exact annual product I am unable to ascertain; for, strange as it may seem, the Tenth Census gives no information upon the subject, nor can any be obtained at any of the Government Departments. But that product is probably only of a few hundred thousand dollars' value, and in the production of it probably only a few thousand laborers are employed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If it be insisted that it was not competent to tax an industry out of existence, let me ask if it is not nevertheless true that we have taxed out of existence the State banks?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And further, I would ask if the decisions of the Supreme Court that States can not tax the Government bonds were not founded upon the principle that if that power was granted to them they might tax the bonds to their full amount, their full par value, and therefore tax them out of existence?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly, and you will see before I close that the States have not the power to give adequate relief from these fraudulent butter imitations. That Congress alone has the power to do it. Moreover, if you will look at section 3272, Revised Statutes, you will find Congress has imposed heavy penalties against the introduction into distilled spirits of any ingredient or substance calculated to give fictitious proof. Now, shall it be said that the members of this House have made laws to preserve the proof of the whisky they drink and keep from adulteration the wine they drink, but think it too small business to provide against the adulteration of the butter which their wives and children eat?

But in closing, while it is apparent that Congress has full power over this fraudulent butter question as an incident of taxation, and while we also find Congress has already committed itself to that control in precisely the manner proposed by this bill, yet if other authority were wanting it may be found in that distinct grant of power by the Constitution to regulate commerce among the States. The clause is as follows:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

It is true that the only exercise of this power by Congress thus far over interstate commerce has been confined to the navigable waters of the United States. But the day is not far distant when Congress will pass a law—as it ought long before this to have done—regulating transportation between the States by land. Nor is this power limited to the subject of transportation merely. It also extends to the status of merchandise taken from one State into the markets of another. In no provision of the Constitution was there a display of higher wisdom than in this grant to the National Legislature of full control over commerce between the States, nor is any constitutional grant plainer. Though Congress has not yet entered upon the full exercise of this power, yet every attempted exercise of it by the States, no matter in what form, whether by an attempted control of navigable waters or by a tax upon freight carried from one State into another, or upon freight carried across a State, or by the imposition of a tax upon articles manufactured in one State and sold in another, the Supreme Court has invariably held that it was the attempted exercise of a power which the States do not possess, but that the power is lodged by the Constitution in Congress alone. (See Gibbons vs. Ogden, 9 Wheat, 1; R. R. Co. vs. Fuller, 17 Wall., 560; Delaware R. R. tax, 18 Wall., 206; R. R. Co. vs. Richmond, 19 Wall., 584; R. R. Co. vs. Maryland, 21 Wall., 456; Downhall vs. City of Alexandria, 7 Howard, 283.)

In commerce with the Indian tribes it was held in United States vs. Forty-three gallons of whisky (93 U. S., 188), that Congress may prohibit the transportation or sale in the Indian country of intoxicating liquors. And remember that Congress has no greater power over commerce with the Indian tribes than it has over that between the States, but precisely the same.

Thus do we see that control of this whole subject of commerce among the States, and every phase of it, not only relating to the transportation of merchandise but the sale of it also, belongs not to the States but to Congress. Now to apply this principle to the bill before us.

Take for illustration two States. Massachusetts, with about five and one-half times the population of Vermont, makes about one-third as much butter. As the result Vermont butter finds its way into Massachusetts markets, and there encounters these imitation products, which the laws of Massachusetts fail to prevent being sold as butter, thus putting Vermont butter at a very serious disadvantage.

We have seen that if Massachusetts were to pass a law putting Vermont products under some disadvantage, whether in transportation or sale in her market, it would be an invasion of the power of Congress over this subject, and would be set aside by the Supreme Court. Now, if instead of this positive act, Massachusetts were to neglect to give Vermont products suitable protection against these fraudulent imitations, and thus do Vermont a negative injustice, would it be any less an injustice? And where but in Congress is the power of correction? And what would a law like that proposed by this bill, which would relieve Vermont butter in Massachusetts from these fraudulent imitations, be but a regulation of commerce among the States? Where but to Congress can the Vermont farmer go for relief? Certainly not to the Massachusetts Legislature, for he is not represented there, and perhaps for the sake of cheap butter Massachusetts may wink at the fraud.

But, inasmuch as the Massachusetts delegation is believed to be a unit for this bill, let us suppose what is far more probable, that Massachusetts really wants to be rid of these imitation products; and accordingly resolves that as inasmuch as no oleomargarine is manufactured in Massachusetts—which I hope is true, but have my fears—that none shall be brought into the State from other States. But we have already seen, upon the authority of the Supreme Court, that Massachusetts has no power to do this. She can not prevent oleomargarine being shipped into her jurisdiction from New York and Chicago, were she to try ever so hard, which would leave Massachusetts powerless to do justice to Vermont if she would; and Vermont would be powerless, whatever course Massachusetts might take. This illustration will apply not to Vermont and Massachusetts alone, nor to butter alone, but to all the States of the Union and to every other article of merchandise that may be produced in one State and consumed in another. Now, who fails to see that the only power to relieve in this matter is vested in Congress?

Who fails to see how utterly chaotic is the doctrine declared by the learned Judiciary Committee of this House, that there is no power in Congress over this subject and that "legislation, if proper, must be sought from the States," thus placing the authority of the States in this matter above that of Congress, when the States have no power whatever and Congress has full power? What a bedlam of conflicting interests between the States would this doctrine of the Judiciary Committee foster? It is withal an anti-national doctrine, a dangerous doctrine, and leads to anarchy. It is born of that now exploded philosophy which a quarter of a century ago so bewildered a certain well-meaning but weak "public functionary" that he was not able to find any power in the Constitution to coerce a State. But the American people found a way to coerce a State; and they will find a way to relieve themselves from fraudulent butter products which are at once a scandal to the country and a glaring wrong to an honest industry. They will find a way, because the Constitution, by a plain provision, gives Congress power over this subject; and the people are here in Congress in the persons of their representatives.

This absolute power over commerce between the States given by the Constitution to the National Government is one of the principal badges of the national sovereignty. It is an important, far-reaching power, and should be duly magnified. The future will bring it into exercise more than the past has done. The rapidly increasing commerce between the States will require from Congress constant supervision, and new rules will be required as new emergencies arise. In interstate commerce, which will increase with our increasing numbers and better facilities for intercommunication, shall be found the strongest future bond of union between these States. A free and fair interchange of commodities between the remote sections of the country will to our political and social relations add the ties of trade, than which between peoples and States none are stronger; and thus, in a vast domestic commerce, so regulated by Congress as to be mutually beneficial to all sections and all industries, shall be heard—the richest music of the Union.

In the rushing wheels
Of trade's tumultuous jar—

Down the future, as our population becomes denser and our commercial rivalries sharper and our accumulated wealth greater, who can tell how this paternal authority of the National Government may be used to allay those rivalries, to check the greed of monopolies, to protect one State against the fraudulent products of another, and bring all departments of our domestic commerce, which is but the sum of our domestic industries, into such relations with each other as that each part shall contribute to the vigor of every other part, and thus create a harmonious system in which labor shall find employment, capital shall have its own, and every honest industry a fair chance? Now this will be the problem for the future statesmen of this country to solve. This problem is, in fact, crowding upon us to-day. We have seen how this measure before us reaches out into all these questions. We have also seen that Congress has a double power over the subject. Let us then rise to the occasion and pass this bill. [Applause.]

[During the delivery of Mr. GROUT'S remarks, when seventeen minutes had expired—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

Mr. GROUT. The Chair will remember that thirty minutes were granted to me by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HIRES], a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. But in the mean time the Chair will be compelled to recognize some member on the other side.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the gentleman who has control of the next hour on the other side to let the gentleman from Vermont occupy now the whole time which has been allotted to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], whom the Chair does not now see in his seat, is entitled to the next hour.

Mr. HATCH. As he is not here to be recognized, I suggest that the gentleman from Vermont be permitted to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GROUT resumed and concluded his remarks.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, there were forty-five minutes of time yielded to me, and I yield ten minutes of it to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, representing a part of that magnificent valley of the Shenandoah for which my friend from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] claimed to speak this evening, I entertain views on the pending bill very different from those which he has so earnestly advocated, but views which I strongly believe to be far more promotive of the true interests of the farmers of that valley and of the other rich agricultural sections with whose representation I am intrusted in this House.

The advocates of this measure, when asked for the ground on which they claim Congressional legislation, are compelled to assume the attitude of the oarsman, who looks in one direction while he moves in the other. They introduce this bill and urge its passage as a revenue measure; yet the slightest examination of the provisions of the bill and of the arguments by which it has been supported in the two days' debate in this House discloses that it is not intended and is not expected to produce revenue, but to destroy and suppress a particular industry which has recently sprung up in this country. That industry, Mr. Chairman, is one which by common consent, sustained, as I am informed, by highest scientific authority, may be carried on in an honest and proper manner; but, possessing unusual facilities for fraud, like all other industries having such facilities, it is often carried on in a dishonest and improper manner.

Able to produce and supply for the public consumption an article of food that is cheap, palatable, and not unwholesome, it is contended—and so far as my argument goes I am not called upon to dispute this contention—that it frequently palms upon the public, under false names and false brands, an article which is neither palatable, wholesome, nor cheap. Hence Congress is called upon in this bill reported from the Committee on Agriculture to interpose the power of the Federal Government and lay upon the manufacture and sale of this article a tax which is designed to be prohibitory and to bring this product under the operation of our inquisitorial internal-revenue system.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. WILSON. I have but ten minutes, but of course will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The question is this: If the article is produced, as stated here—and it has not been disputed—at 8 cents a pound, and sells for at least 25 cents a pound, how is a tax of 10 cents a pound going to be prohibitory or preventive of its manufacture?

Mr. WILSON. There is not only a tax of 10 cents a pound, but there is a license-tax as well. There is a tax upon the manufacturer, a tax upon the wholesale dealer, and a tax upon the retail dealer, also.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And all combined would not amount to 12 cents a pound.

Mr. WILSON. Nevertheless scarcely an argument has been made upon this floor in advocacy of this bill that has not maintained it as a measure whose true design is to prohibit and suppress this manufacture. But as it comes in, Mr. Chairman, under the guise of a revenue bill, I shall consider it first and very briefly in that light. I admit that if there is any need for revenue, this would be a constitutional method of gathering taxes, but I deny that there is a constitutional right to levy taxes of any kind unless they are absolutely necessary for the demands of the public Treasury.

There are very many other legitimate sources of revenue than those to which the Government to-day resorts, sources which no man would challenge as unconstitutional, but it would be an unwarrantable exercise of the powers with which we are clothed, not justified by the Constitution and totally destructive of the very idea of free government, to resort to any of them for a single dollar that is not needed for the actual expenses of government. When you have levied on the people all the taxes which the public service requires your constitutional authority to levy taxes ceases, although many lawful sources of income may still be unexplored. Has any gentleman in this debate ventured to contend that we need additional revenue? Could any gentleman so contend in the face of the appeals that have been coming down to Congress year after year from the Executive urging some action by which a surplus revenue may be kept out of the Treasury? Has not the Democratic policy been uniformly declared as in favor of decreasing the burdens of taxation until they are cut down to the needs of an economical government instead of exploring and searching for new sources of taxation by which to take money from the people?

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that question in three words?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; in three words.

Mr. PRICE. We have not 25 cents on the dollar of our floating debt that we owe outside of the bonded indebtedness.

Mr. WILSON. The reports of the fiscal officers of the Treasury convey to us the information that the revenue of the Government exceeds its necessary expenditures; that there is a surplus revenue; so I shall not stop to argue that question.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I can not support this bill as one to raise taxes and to increase the revenue. Hence I turn to consider the real reasons which, after introducing it in the thin and deceptive guise of a revenue bill, its advocates allege for its passage by this House.

They bring it forward, sir, also as a measure of protection to the dairy farmer, with whose genuine butter it is claimed that oleomargarine and butterine come into competition in the food markets of the country. This is a specious argument, but as dangerous as it is fallacious. Every intelligent legislator who has examined into the working of our system of taxation must see that its burdens rest very unequally and very unjustly upon the farmers of this country. So many trades and occupations have been fastened as parasites upon the public Treasury and have their profits increased out of taxes imposed upon other trades and occupations, and particularly upon the occupation of agriculture, that it seems both plausible and just, at first view, that the farmer also should be allowed a dividend from the Treasury.

But, Mr. Chairman, aside from his rights and his interests as the citizen of a free government and a government of equal laws, no man by virtue of his occupation is so deeply interested in resistance under all circumstances to class legislation as is the American farmer. This resistance is his only safety as a citizen, his only safety as a farmer. Once establish the principle that the sovereign power of taxation with which the people intrust their servants can be perverted from its only honest purpose of raising taxes, and be used to oppress, to suppress, or to destroy the industry of any class of our citizens in order to increase the profits of the industry of any other class of our citizens, and this ceases to be a government of equal laws and becomes at once a government of privileged classes and occupations.

That class which for the moment may be able to influence and control the legislative power will be able to enrich itself by the spoliation of other classes; and all the experience of the past and all the probabilities of the future assure us that the occupation which will suffer most will be that of the tillers of the soil, because they are without efficient organization and without the power of concentrating their influence or of keeping their watchful attention upon those that make the laws. If the farmer ever concedes the principle of class legislation, especially if he is so blind as to concede it by accepting some petty and inconsiderable advantage under it, he has lost his shield, he has stripped himself of the power of resistance to a wrong that will bear with grievous and constant burden upon him. Let him but voluntarily enter into such a partnership as is held out to him in this bill and he will find that he has but reproduced the old fable of the ass who went hunting with the lion and was destroyed when he claimed his share of the feast which their mutual efforts had secured. If his false friends persuade him to call on the Government to destroy or to cripple any industry that comes into competition with a branch of his pursuit, he must prepare himself to expect that other occupations will be calling upon the Government to suppress or to cripple some of his industries in order that they may flourish the more.

Mr. Chairman, I lift up my voice most earnestly against this whole theory and practice of class legislation. It is a form of tyranny as unjust as any that can be devised. I plant myself upon the absolute equality of every citizen before the law. I protest against any system which invites and encourages any class of citizens, in any calling, to demand dividends out of the public Treasury, out of the proceeds of taxation upon their fellow-citizens, as a favor or privilege to their class or calling to be granted by those in control of the Government. It has been said that the Roman citizen grew to prize his franchise as a partnership that entitled him to share in the spoils of the world. Shall the American citizen be trained to regard his particular occupation or calling as one that entitles him to share in the spoils of taxation imposed upon his fellow-citizens? The Roman despoiled the foreigner. Are we to see different classes and different occupations in this Republic engaged in a contest for mutual plunder and mutual spoliation?

But, Mr. Chairman, this pretended advantage to the farmer, even if it were a substantial one, would apply only to the small class, small as compared with the millions engaged in the pursuits of agriculture, that are specially interested in the dairy business. The immense majority of farmers are not dairymen. The bill could not in any view inure to their benefit, and even the small temporary benefit which the dairy farmers are expected to receive is to some extent neutralized by the decline in the value of cattle which the suppression of the manufacture of these substitutes for butter is calculated to produce. But, Mr. Chairman, I must hasten to glance at the other reason upon which we are urged to legislate on this subject, and that is in the interest of public health. It is argued, and by no one more fully than the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] who has just spoken, that oleomargarine and butterine and like products are frequently vile and spurious compounds, sold in the market as genuine butter and therefore calculated to spread disease and sickness among the people.

This does not affect the argument I am making. I do not understand it to be true to the extent claimed in this debate. On the contrary, it seems to be pretty well established here that much of these articles is made of healthy and proper materials, and stamped and sold for exactly what it is; but be that as it may, concede the whole indictment against oleomargarine, and I still answer you have not made a case for legislation by Congress. To protect the health of the people by saving them from frauds and impositions in the purchase of food is peculiarly and exclusively within the province of legislation conceded to the States. They can and they do deal with this matter constantly and efficiently. Grant all that the gentleman from Vermont has said, and I ask him, can not the State of Vermont regulate and control both the manufacture and sale of this so-called bogus compound within her limits? It is a matter of police regulation, and that, by the solemn decision of our highest court and by the cheerful concession of this law-making body, has hitherto been committed to the States.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has read to us the law of that State with respect to substitutes for butter, and assured us that it has proved thoroughly effective in that State. Congress can enact that law or a similar one for the District of Columbia and the Territories. The States can enact similar laws each for itself, and thus the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine or of any other article easily counterfeited or supposed to be deleterious can be regulated, controlled, and even, if necessary, suppressed. Why, Mr. Chairman, our municipal corporations deal daily and deal effectively with just such matters. They regulate the sale of meat and fruits and vegetables in their markets, the sale and keeping of inflammable and explosive substances in their limits. They have a police system which comes into immediate contact with such transactions, police courts where penalties and forfeitures are readily enforced. In the municipal corporation or in the State the machinery needed to correct all the abuses and to repress all the evils connected with the making and selling of food products is at hand, accessible, easily and cheaply set in motion. In every neighborhood are the needed officers—in every county are the courts, the constabulary, and a grand jury.

In a word, Mr. Chairman, there is no excuse or justification for this appeal to Congress to exercise disputed and forbidden power; to do that which in all our past history has been done and well done by the States. To bring this manufacture under the internal-revenue system is to take a step backward. That system never has been a popular one. We have now reduced it to such limits as to strip it of many of the opportunies for abuse heretofore belonging to it. Will you now enlarge its sphere, add greatly to its expenses, greatly increase its officials, set up an additional system of espionage, a new line of petty persecutions in the Federal courts, bring back upon us all this brood of evils in an attempt to do that which can be done, and done better, by the States in their undoubted field of legislation?

No, Mr. Chairman, I can not consent to support any such legislation.

I believe my own State can and ought to protect her citizens from fraud and imposition in the sale of butter or any substitute or counterfeit of butter, just as she protects them from imposition in the sale of fertilizers, and just as she deals promptly and effectively with other crimes and wrongs within her limits. In her name, and in the name of her farming interest, I protest against this new departure in legislation, which begins a policy of Federal interference that will not be long in extending itself in many other directions than that now proposed. I am, Mr. Chairman, as much opposed to the manufacture and sale of counterfeit and bogus butter as the gentleman from Vermont, or any other member of this House, but I am not willing to use the power of the Federal Government in what will prove a bungling and vexatious method of dealing with a question so entirely and so exclusively in the domain of State legislation.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. I desire permission to ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. But the time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DUNHAM. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. If the gentleman from Illinois can not give me more than five minutes I will rather take time to-morrow.

Mr. DUNHAM. Well, I will yield the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am aware none of the people whom I have the honor to represent upon this floor are engaged in the manufacture of oleomargarine, and a very limited number of them are interested in it as an article of commerce. Therefore I do not care much about and will say but little concerning it. I am unable to state whether or not it is unwholesome as an article of food. There is abundant testimony from respectable sources on both sides of that question. Some have characterized it as a villainous compound, unfit to be taken into the human stomach, and as certain to produce diseases and death. On the other hand, gentlemen of learning and repute, after a thorough examination of the whole process of manipulation and manufacture of butterine and oleomargarine, testify that they find them to be cleanly, palatable, and wholesome food products, containing nothing injurious or detrimental to health, but, on the contrary, to be cheap and desirable substitutes for the medium grades of dairy butter.

There are various grades of oleomargarine, and I suspect the truth to be that some may be used with impunity, while others are impure and deleterious.

I certainly am not in favor of permitting cheats and frauds to be put upon the markets of the country, and will go as far as any gentleman here to protect consumers against these and to throw safeguards around the health and morals of the people. I do not object that the dealers in this and kindred substances shall be required to disclose the nature and character of the articles they may offer for sale. I am not here to oppose the proposition that oleomargarine shall be marked, stamped, and branded as such. I agree that the dealers in it should not be permitted to palm it upon the public as pure and genuine butter.

The power to accomplish these objects resides with the States, and it is plenary for the purpose. But I deny the right of Congress to use the taxing power for the purpose of destroying any industry in the country, and equally the right to use it for the purpose of protecting one against the fair competition of another.

It is manifest that the originators of this measure had no other object in view, and in the course of this discussion some have been frank enough to avow it. The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], speaking of the necessity of legislation of this character, said:

> If we permit the products of the dairy to be driven from our home and foreign markets through unfair competition, the milk of the cow can not be utilized for other purposes.

In this and similar expressions by other gentlemen who have engaged in this debate, the object sought to be accomplished by this bill and the motives by which its advocates are inspired are plainly disclosed.

This measure was framed for the protection of dairymen and not for revenue. There is no danger that the products of the dairy will be driven by competition from our home or foreign markets, but even if that stared us in the face I should not deem it to be a justification for the abuse of a constitutional power. I can never consent to the principle of protection embodied in this bill.

The power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises is given by the Constitution to enable Congress to procure the means with which to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. In the clause of the Constitution in which that power is given the objects for which it is to be exercised are clearly and distinctly specified. If this were bona fide a bill for revenue, then no question could be raised as to the power to place a tax upon this substance, and there would be little or no opposition to so doing.

But I feel sure if revenue had been the object sought by this bill it would never have been referred to the Committee on Agriculture. It happens that we have before us now, and soon will be called upon to consider, a measure reported from the Committee on Ways and Means to reduce taxes, and it is estimated that if this shall become a law the revenues of the Government will be diminished to the extent of at least twenty millions.

The truth is, that the necessity does not exist for new sources of revenue. We have enough for all the purposes of the Government. During the last Presidential election the cry was that the Treasury was too full, and that the country must be relieved from the burden of taxation.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me one question? When the matter was investigated by the Secretary of the Treasury was it not found that instead of $475,000,000 lying idle in the Treasury, as our Democratic friends had stated there was only $22,000,000?

Mr. WISE. I do not propose to be carried off from the purpose I have in view. I say that the cry in this country has been that we have been taxed too much, and yet, while there comes from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill to reduce taxes, there comes from another committee a bill to increase them. The truth is that the bill under consideration bears upon its face a false pretense. It is a sham and a fraud.

As has been said by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], we have enough for the support of the Government economically administered. The purpose here is, in the interest of one industry, to strike down another. The gentleman from Virginia to-day (I allude to my friend and colleague, Mr. O'FERRALL) speaking, as he said, for the valley of Virginia, declared in favor of this bill.

I do not believe that the people of Virginia will sanction the use of the power to tax to prevent the production of oleomargarine or of any other substance. I know that they are almost unanimous in favor of the repeal of the whole internal-revenue system, and I do not believe that they will approve of any vote in favor of its extension or perpetuation.

Eminent physicians have given it as their opinion, based upon large and extensive experience, that tobacco is deleterious, and that the use of it will greatly impair the vital energies. A large and respectable number of the people of the country entertain the opinion that the sale of intoxicating liquors should be suppressed and prohibited, except for medicinal purposes, believing that they have produced more misery and crime than all other agents combined. If the taxing power may be used to destroy any industry the time may come when it will be employed for the suppression of these as destructive of health and good morals.

Mr. CANNON. Is there not a heavier tax now upon tobacco than is proposed to be laid upon oleomargarine? Whisky is taxed now ten times its cost.

Mr. WISE. But you tax them for revenue. They are in the markets without rivals, and therefore able to bear heavier burdens.

My friend and colleague [Mr. TUCKER] stated this morning in reference to whisky that when you laid the tax on it at $2 you reached the point where production was prevented.

Certainly you may place the tax so high as to force small farmers to abandon distillation from fruits, and men with limited capital from engaging in the business of manufacturing tobacco. You have not succeeded in destroying the whisky and tobacco interests, but you can do so if the power to tax for revenue may be employed for the extinction of any industry. We have been told by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that urgent appeals have been made to induce Congress to do that very thing. He has told us that a deputation appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means during a previous Congress, when he was its chairman, to protest against permitting the manufacture of sugar from corn or sorghum.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill on another ground. It looks in the direction of the perpetuation and extension of the odious internal-revenue system, by which certain employments and avocations are placed under the surveillance of officers and agents of the Government. As before said, instead of applying it to new objects, I am in favor of its repeal so soon as that can be done without detriment to the public service. The people of my State, with singular unanimity, are and have been loud in their demands for its extinction, and I shall avail myself of every opportunity to protest against its continuance.

Blackstone in his Commentaries says "that the rigor and arbitrary proceeding of excise laws seem hardly compatible with the temper of a free people. It is necessary to give the officer power of entering and searching the houses of such as deal in excisable commodities at any hour of the day, and (in many cases) of the night also." In a word the whole business of the citizen must be placed under the supervision of the officers of the Government.

In this connection I will quote the language which I used on a former occasion:

> This method of raising revenue was resorted to, prior to our civil war, only on one or two occasions, when the exigencies of the public service seemed to require it, and was continued no longer than the necessity existed. Mr. Madison, in a speech delivered in the beginning of the First Congress, when addressing himself to the subject of a national revenue, said that "the system must be such a one that, while it secures the object of revenue, it shall not be oppressive to our constituents. Happy it is for us that such a system is within our power; for I apprehend that both these objects may be obtained from an impost on articles imported into the United States." Presidents Jefferson and Monroe, in messages to Congress upon the same subject, made recommendations in harmony with this suggestion of Mr. Madison, declaring that sound principles do not justify the imposition of taxes upon the industries of our people. I might multiply quotations to the same effect from other distinguished writers and statesmen, who expended much thought upon the methods of taxation, but time will not permit and it is unnecessary. Thus it appears that this system is in opposition to our past policy and to the teachings of the fathers of the Republic. It was made necessary by the exigencies of our civil war, and was submitted to as a necessity and because the public safety seemed to require it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to give the gentleman additional time if I had it to spare, but I have promised to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if I occupied such a position with reference to this bill that I could consistently vote for it without uttering a syllable, because I have no disposition to discuss it. Without an explanation my vote might be regarded as inconsistent. I am decidedly opposed to all frauds, but I prefer to get rid of frauds, if I can, in an honest way. I hate oleomargarine, and my principal reason for hating it is because it is an imitation, a counterfeit. I dislike this bill in its present shape because it is a fraud. It is just as much of a fraud as oleomargarine. It professes to be one thing and is another. It is simply fighting fraud with a fraud.

Very few of the men who have defended it on this floor have had the assurance to stand in this presence and claim that it is a bill for revenue. That is not its purpose. No matter what those few may say, every man knows it has another purpose and another end. That end I am in favor of, provided it intends to do no more than to expose whatever there is of fraud in oleomargarine. I am in favor of having oleomargarine so marked and designated, if possible, that every one from the wholesale dealer down to the consumer may know it when he sees it.

But when the attempt is made to tax this product so that he who would buy it, knowing what it is, must pay a tax of 10 cents, it becomes a question whether we do not injure B more than we benefit A. When we tax one commodity to help another we make a power which becomes thereby revolting to every instinct of fair play. Why, sir, in Pennsylvania we can produce better iron than can be produced anywhere else on the globe, because we have gas as a fuel, and it is the best fuel yet discovered for smelting or reducing iron to any and all of its uses.

If it were proposed to levy a tax upon the iron produced by coal in Tennessee, you would have an exact parallel to the present case, because the iron produced by gas as a fuel is better than the iron produced by coal. If Tennessee or Alabama or English iron cannot compete with Pennsylvania iron in quality, shall it therefore be burdened with a tax?

I am in favor, therefore, of taxing this commodity only so far as may be necessary to get jurisdiction and control of it, so we can brand it for what it is; and for that purpose a penny of tax is as good as 10 cents. Everything beyond that is in the end a burden upon the consumer.

But it is proposed by this bill to tax oleomargarine so as to raise the price of butter. Now, there are two sides to this question—there is the side of the consumer and there is the side of the producer. The consumer, if he desires to buy cheap food, whether oleomargarine or butter, should have that privilege, provided he knows what he is buying, and this right should not be taken from him by Congress. Therefore I say the true method is to fix your taxation as low as you can and at the same time reach the end desired, so that he who prefers oleomargarine, knowing it to be such and because it is cheap, may have that privilege without paying a duty of 10 cents a pound to the Government of the United States.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, so desirous am I of having this fraud, this imitation, stamped by the United States Government so that it may be known and read of all men, I may yet feel constrained to vote for the bill, encumbered as it is with the manifestly unjust burden, and much as I dislike the method proposed for getting at this difficulty.

I shall, however, before the final vote is taken, do all that lays in my power to so amend the bill as to eliminate the objections to which I have referred. I want to support a measure that shall unmask the deception that oleomargarine inflicts upon society, without laying a burden upon those whose necessities force them to buy the cheapest wholesome food they can find in the market.

When butter goes to 40 or 50 cents a pound, it is necessarily beyond the reach (and I know whereof I speak) of a vast number of the men who work for daily wages; and they have rights that should be respected. In consideration of their rights no oppressive taxation should be imposed on this product, for nothing is more certain than that whatever tax may be imposed is borne in the end by the consumer.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the bill is not liable to this further objection, that it taxes upon the same footing all grades of oleomargarine, whether wholesome or unwholesome, so that the effect will be to put the bad article on the market and suppress the good?

Mr. MILLIKEN. And I would like to ask whether the same principle does not apply to the taxation of whisky and tobacco?

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am not in the habit of making speeches; and so much time has already been occupied by debate on this question that I am very reluctant to detain the committee; but as I represent a district in which there are twenty creameries, and as my people therefore have some considerable interest in this matter, I wish to say a word or two about it.

The bill under consideration is a bill defining butter, and seeks to regulate the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. Now, oleomargarine, as first made in this country under the French formula, was, perhaps, as wholesome as lard or beef-fat, and had it continued to be so made, and had it always worn its own name, and always been sold for what it was, there could have been no war upon it; but it has been mixed with butter, it has been colored and made to imitate butter; and if the manufacturer has sold it honestly, his "wicked partner," the retail dealer, has sold it for butter invariably; and if it was a wholesome article of food, as its friends claim, it was a counterfeit, a fraud on the consumer, and a fraud on the dairy, in that it has been sold for butter.

Now as to the assertion of its friends that it is wholesome, let us see whether that is true.

There are recorded in the Patent Office of the United States more than one hundred and fifty patents for the manufacture of imitation butter or oleomargarine, and the ingredients used will give a good idea of the wholesomeness of the product.

I ask to have read what I send to the Clerk's desk, on pages 10, 11, and 12 of the pamphlet, which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

INGREDIENTS USED IN OLEOMARGARINE.

The following is a list, taken from the patents recorded in the Patent Office at Washington, of the ingredients claimed to be used in the manufacture of this article. Manufacturers deny that they use all the ingredients named in these patents, but it is certainly not unfair to assume that when they mention a certain ingredient in their application for a patent, as necessary for its making, they actually use it. This list was obtained officially from the Patent Office by Assistant State Dairy Commissioner Van Valkenburgh, of New York:

Nitric acid, sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, butyric acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, curcumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry-blood albumen, saltpeter, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, caparic acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame (or benne), turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, cows' udders, sal-soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, bromo-chloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda.

It is not sought to show that all these ingredients are used in a single process, but the fact is established that nitric acid is used in all, and it is probable that the other acids named are employed when the most powerful agents are necessary for deodorizing putrid or diseased fats.

* * * * * * *

Professor Clark, of Albany, made a specialty of the physiological features of his subject, making experiments in digestion and microscopical investigations, and in other ways showing the importance to public health of a thorough knowledge of what enters into any food product. As a result of his researches, he arrived at the conclusion that oleomargarine is unwholsome and dangerous to health for four reasons: First, because it is indigestible; second, because it is insoluble when made from animal fats; third, that it is liable to carry the germs of disease into the human system; and fourth, that in the cagerness of manufacturers to produce their spurious compounds cheaply, they are tempted to use ingredients which are detrimental to the health of the consumer.

When Dr. H. A. Pooler, president of the board of health in Goshen, Orange County, was examined he was asked what nitric acid was, and how it affected the human system. This question was suggested by previous testimony as to the use of nitric acid in the manufacture of oleomargarine. Dr. Pooler replied:

"Nitric acid is produced by the action of sulphuric acid upon nitrate of potassa, about equal parts; it is a powerful caustic; it destroys animal tissue rapidly and almost irreparably when it comes in contact with it; upon animal fat it destroys the tissue, and deodorizes it by destroying its smell. It is also a preservative, in a measure. Undoubtedly substances submitted to the action of nitric acid would not be decomposed so rapidly as those which had not been submitted to it; but the acid would affect the digestive organs very seriously. Upon the human stomach it is a deadly poison when taken in overdoses. When taken in a diluted form not sufficient to cause death, and, taken for any length of time, it produces similar effects to that of mercury. The teeth at first become whiter, afterward decay, and then become loose; it stimulates the excessive flow of secretion and poisons the system generally. Its caustic properties are so great that it destroys the tissue and impairs the circulation. Where a person loses a nail from it it is generally because of the accumulation of the acid around the root of the nail; it cuts off the circulation which supplies the nail, consequently the nail will slough off for want of proper nourishment. The acid has to be diluted in order to be safe in any degree as a remedy. In its pure form it is deadly."

This testimony was given subsequent to that of Charles Moses, a laborer employed in a Grove street butterine factory, whose duty it was to pack the finished product in the tubs. He swore that in the performance of that duty one of his finger nails was eaten off, and that the stuff eat through his clothing and into his boots.

"Would it be wholesome or unwholesome to treat any dairy product with nitric acid?" Dr. Pooler was asked.

He replied: "I think it would be injurious, especially so if applied by a person who was not acquainted with the acid; in fact, I think it would be very dangerous. No matter how minute the quantity is, continued for any length of time it produces an irritation of the mucous membrane of the stomach, which is only alleviated by stopping the use of it, and then sometimes the recovery is very slow. I do not think this man Moses will ever entirely recover from the effects of it. It will be years, in any event, before he gets it out of his system."

Dr. Elias H. Bailley, inspector and chemist of the Brooklyn board of health, being asked whether manufacturers were liable to get impure fat or lard, replied:

"Yes, especially as it seems to me one great danger of this whole manufacture lies in the fact that I have known farmers having the hog-cholera in a flock of hogs, and the moment a hog is attacked with the cholera the farmer kills it, or if it dies he tries out the fat and sends the lard to market. I have seen that done myself. Of course, to all appearance, the lard is just as good as fresh lard, and if deodorized could be used without detection. The pro cess of deodorizing would not kill the disease.

"The principal reason why nitric acid is used by the manufacturers," this witness said, "was to remove the peculiar odor of the lard, which distinguishes one fat from another, that is decomposed by the nitric acid, which also bleaches the article to a certain extent. I hold that nitric acid is a powerful poison. Used in the most minute quanties, I believe it will produce serious irritation."

Inasmuch as prominent manufacturers of oleomargarine admitted before the committee that they used nitric acid in the processes employed by them, and as nitric acid appears in most of the formulas for manufacture filed in the Patent Office at Washington, it is fair to assume that this deadly poison enters, at least in some instances, into the composition of counterfeit butter.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Chairman, this counterfeit is not to-day what it used to be, and the new article of commerce called neutral is produced in all the large cities, and is the basis of oleomargarine, or largely so of much of it. This neutral is the fat of any animal which has fat in it, and is rendered at rendering-works from hogs which die on the way to market in cars, as many do die; and it may be the fat of a mule, horse, or dog, and if tainted, is treated with acids and rendered both tasteless and odorless, and is to-day worth about 5 cents per pound, and by churning it with milk or cream makes oleomargarine or butterine.

To show how cheap oleomargarine pans out and to what depths of infamy man will go to make money, I ask that what I send to the Clerk's desk be read. It is a report of what Professor Nachtrieb, of the State University of Minnesota, found by an analysis of what was sold for butter in Minneapolis at retail this year.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROFESSOR NACHTRIEB'S REPORT.

The following is an extract from the illustrated report of Professor Nachtrieb, of the State University, to the dairy commission, of the samples of butterine given him for microscopical examination:

"The examination of these samples was by no means exhaustive, and they would probably yield much more than the accompanying figures indicate. The best and cleanest looking sample had a butter odor and taste, and would readily pass for butter. It had a very small variety of living organisms, but a great many spores, which, under favorable conditions, I have no doubt would have germinated. It also contained masses of dead mold, bits of cellulous wood, various colored particles, shreds of hair, bristles, &c. The other two samples teemed with life, and yielded microscopic preparations of the molds and bacteria that would have gladdened the heart of the student of biology. The microscope revealed the fact that the greatest variety of life existed in the inner portion of these samples, and that the outer portions contained the greatest quantity of active bacteria. The animals found in the butterine belong to the type of protozoa. Doubtful portions of worms were also noticed. Many of the protozoa, under favorable conditions, pass into an encysted stage or develop spores within protected capsules, and in these conditions lie dormant till the environment is again favorable; and it can hardly be doubted that some of the many spores found in these butterines were merely in a dormant state. The great number and variety of organisms found in the samples indicate the use of foul water and a criminal filthy process in making it. There can not be the slightest doubt that the person who eats so promiscuous and so lively a mixture as the butterine examined is running great risk, morally as well as physically. The peace and happiness of future generations is greatly involved in the life of the present generation. By indulging in our homes articles of food filled with spores and seeds of the various classes of the lower organisms we are increasing the dangers of parasitism. Spores that now are harmless may, by gradual adaption, through more or less circuitous routes, become inimical to the health and happiness of countless millions."

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if such vile compounds as described by Professor Nachtrieb are sold for human food, is it not time for us to act? And as commerce is world-wide and State laws fail to cure such evils, I do think that for the sake of the general health some regulation should be made at once concerning this greatest of all frauds.

By fraud alone it flourishes, and by fraud alone it is sustained.

Again, we have a dairy plant including fifteen millions of cows, the land on which to keep them, the buildings and machinery used in the industry worth $2,000,000,000, and an oleo plant worth perhaps $2,000,000,000, the former employing one-tenth of the people of this whole country, the latter a few thousand.

The dairy and stock-growing industry together is worth more than any other interest in the United States, unless it be real estate, and produces more income than any other industry, not excepting mining with its $400,000,000 per annum, and the dairy interest must die if this fraud goes on as it has in the past. The bill seeks to place the manufacture of oleomargarine under the Internal Revenue Department, and I see no other way to do justice to both that and the dairy interest. You must remember that the farmer or dairyman can buy neutral, and churn with his milk or cream, and in self-protection will do so (and it was stated before our committee is doing so now), and if no restraint is placed upon the sale of the product, pure butter will be unknown if we go on as we have been doing for the past two years, in which time this infamous fraud has more than doubled, and from all sides comes the demand for this legislation—not less than three-fourths of all the people ask for it.

Our State was forced into stock-raising and dairying by the failure of wheat, and in my section of the State, with our pure water and excellent grasses, we began to prosper, and we make as fine butter as is made anywhere. We took the highest prize at New Orleans, but last year with the finest of creamery butter at 17 cents in New York we found our business unprofitable. And it is from 12 to 16 cents now in New York.

We do not deny the fact that the farmers expect better prices if this bill passes, and we see no reason why the agricultural class, which comprises 51 per cent. of the whole population, may not come to us for protection as other classes have come in the past and secured it. Did we not tax the circulation of State banks 10 per cent. when 5 per cent. would have retired every dollar of it? Was not this taxing one business out of existence, and a business which did not seek to furnish unwholesome food to the people?

The average dairyman can not come here to represent his interests. If he could we should have two millions here to-day urging the adoption of measures for relief, for from one end of the country to the other they are aroused as no class of farmers were ever stirred up before. They see their lands and homes going to ruin, and if their prayer for relief is not granted their industry is doomed.

They would come here in person and voice their sentiments, but a trip to Washington would cost more than the profits that a majority realized last year. They must remain at home and toil and struggle to keep from bankruptcy.

They have kept away from Congress for ten years, trying all other means, only to find the evil growing daily and the dairy business declining, until now we must have relief or the nation loses an important industry.

Our creameries in the West can take the cream from the farm, make the butter, using a plant worth $5,000 and a capital of $5,000 more, employ one skilled man and other help, and place the butter pure and unadulterated in Eastern markets for 6 to 7 cents above the price of the cream; but with butter at 15 cents, as to-day, cream is worth 8 cents in the Northwest, and that price makes cows worth $20 or less, and the farmer's fifteen hours' hard work worth 50 cents. We do not expect high prices, nor ask it; we can live with butter at 20 to 25 cents in New York.

Now as to a war on low-priced food, the fraud has not been retailed at lower prices than ordinary butter, and has not been sold to any extent to the consumer only as butter.

And right here let me say that this bill does not prevent the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, nor does it lay a tax upon that article if made with its natural color, but simply taxes the article when colored and made in semblance of butter or mixed with butter; leaving the market open for the sale of the uncolored grease, and the cheap food can be sold untaxed, the poor man and the rich can buy it and use it and mix it in his own way, with his own butter, for his own use, but not for sale.

This bill strips the article of its fraudulent character, prevents counterfeiting, and leaves the article to stand on its own merits, and lets it invade all markets under its own name—"deodorized" or "refined grease." It is not the product of our dairy, and shall not wear our name.

We have in the bill even left the name butterine, which is so dear to those Chicago gentlemen and which covers a great majority of their goods and a multitude of sins; but while they can use that name for their goods, they are prohibited from mixing butter or coloring matter with it without paying a tax. Now, is this an unjust act? I believe we have no more right to allow this fraud than we have to allow counterfeiting of money. In both cases the innocent suffer. If it is unjust to prevent counterfeiting, then this may be unjust.

This is no local question; the cow is cosmopolitan; pure butter ought to be so; and while I think that the uncolored neutral, which may still be sold under the name of butterine or other names which may be invented, ought to be inspected by competent chemists and microscopists before being sold, yet we are now dealing with this one question, and it is a step in the right direction, and I hope the bill will pass. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. WISE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration House bill No. 8328, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. HATCH (at 11 o'clock p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND: Petition of C. C. Haggard for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE: Papers relating to the claim of William Watts, of Boone County, Kentucky—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. COMSTOCK: Petition of officers, ex-officers, and leading citizens, of Grand Rapids, Mich., asking for the adoption of a resolution by Congress to amend the Constitution so as to prohibit communistic emigrants from coming within the limits of the United States; and other amendments—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of Board of Trade of Elgin, Ill., and of Armour & Co. and others, against the proposed oleomargarine legislation—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, memorial of A. C. Beals, hospital steward United States Army, in favor of raising salaries of hospital stewards—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorial of the municipal authorities of Norfolk, Va., praying for the establishment of a ship-yard at that point—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. EVERHART: Petition of 1,124 citizens interested in railroads, praying for an appropriation to carry out the plans for the organization of section of steam transportation in the United States National Museum to perpetuate the history of steam transportation—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of Allen Morse and 36 others, citizens of Calais, Vt., for a tax on oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HEWITT: Petition in the matter of William C. Phelan—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KELLEY: Petition of citizens of Wellsborough, Pa., praying for an increase of duties on wool, worsted, and woolen goods and yarns—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MARTIN: Petition of S. D. J. Moon, of Jefferson County, Alabama, on the subject of taxation—to the same committee.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petitions on behalf of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association and 1,760 dairy farmers in the States of Illinois, Missouri, Vermont, Indiana, Maine, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Iowa, New York, Nebraska, Colorado, California, Kansas, Maryland, Ohio, and Michigan, praying for the passage of House bill 8328, placing the manufacture and sale of imitations of butter under the control of the United States Department of Internal Revenue and taxing them 10 cents a pound—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. RIGGS: Petition of C. B. Wells, of Adams, Ill., for taxation of oleomargarine—to the same committee.

By Mr. ROMEIS: Petition of Ellen Scranton and Hannah Scranton Stoner, heirs of Elizabeth Whitaker, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of Albert Buskirk and 161 others, citizens of Seneca County, Ohio, for taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, affidavit in support of House bill 9103, for the relief of Mary A. Huffman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEBER: Petition for the establishment of postal-savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Joel R. Love; of Mollie Beaver, administratrix of William Beaver, deceased; and of John Smith, asking that claims, with accompanying papers, be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions, praying Congress for the enactment of a law requiring scientific temperance instruction in the public schools of the District of Columbia, in the Territories, and in the Military and Naval Academies, the Indian and colored schools supported wholly or in part by money from the national Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Education:

By Mr. J. S. HENDERSON: Of citizens of Randolph County, North Carolina.

By Mr. SENEY: Of citizens of Wood County, Ohio.

By Mr. VOORHEES: Of citizens of Tacoma and Whatcom, Wash.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 26, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JOHN D. HAM—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 1998, entitled "An act for the relief of John D. Ham," which grants a pension to the party named.

The claiment alleges that he enrolled in the Army in January, 1862, and was "sworn in at his own home;" that the next day he started on horseback to go to the regiment he was to join, and that on the way his horse fell upon his left ankle, whereby he sustained an injury which entitles him to a pension.

His name is not borne upon any of the rolls of the regiment he alleges he was on his way to join.

He filed his application for pension in the Pension Bureau October 17, 1879 (seventeen years after his alleged injury), which was rejected apparently on the ground that he was not in the military service when the disability claimed was incurred. He was drafted in 1863 and served until he was mustered out in 1865.

It is entirely clear that this claimant was not in the military service at the time he claims to have been injured; and his conduct in remaining at home until he was drafted, nearly two years afterward, furnishes proof that he did not regard himself as in the mean time owing any military duty.

These considerations and the further facts that upon being drafted he was accepted as physically qualified for service, that he actually thereafter served a year and eight months, and that he waited seventeen years before claiming pension for his injury, in my mind present a case upon which the claimant is entitled to no relief even if charity, instead of just liberality, is invoked.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 25, 1886.

DAVID W. HAMILTON—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 1290, entitled "An act granting a pension to David W. Hamilton."

A claim for pension filed by him in November, 1879, was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that his alleged disability existed prior to his enlistment.

An examination of the records in the Adjutant-General's Office and a statement from the Pension Bureau derived from the claimant's application there for pension, with a reference to the report of the committee to whom this bill was referred, disclose the following facts:

The claimant was mustered in the service as first lieutenant in September, 1861, and as captain June 12, 1862. He is reported as present with his company until the 30th of that month. For the six months immediately following the latter date he is reported as "absent sick," and for the ten months next succeeding and until October 27, 1863, as "absent on detached service." On the day last mentioned he tendered his resignation at Camp Morton, in the State of Indiana, to enable him to accept an appointment as captain in the Invalid Corps. He was thereupon so appointed upon account of "chronic enlargement of the spermatic cord, of several years' standing, consequent upon hydrocele." He remained in the Invalid Corps until July 12, 1864, when upon the tender of his resignation he was discharged.

Less than four months afterward, and on the 6th day of November, 1864, he was mustered in the service as a captain in another regiment of volunteers, and on the 17th day of November, 1865, again tendered his resignation, and was finally discharged.

Upon his application for pension under the general law, fourteen years thereafter, he admitted that he suffered from hydrocele as early as 1856, but claimed that an operation then performed for the same had given him permanent relief.

It will be seen that the claimant's term of service was liberally interspersed with sick leave, detached service, resignations, and membership in the Invalid Corps. He admits having the trouble which would naturally result in his alleged disability long before he entered the service; the surgeon upon whose certificate he was appointed to the Invalid Corps must have stated to him the character of his difficulty and that it was chronic; no application for pension was made until fourteen years after his discharge and just prior to the expiration of the time within which large arrearages might have been claimed. There is no hint of any medical testimony at all contradicting the certificate of the Army surgeon made in 1863; but it is stated in the report of the committee that he can not procure medical testimony as to his soundness before entering the service because his family physician is dead. If he had filed his application earlier it would have appeared in better faith, and it may be that he could have secured the evidence of his family physician if it was of the character he desired.

After the Pension Bureau has been in operation for a score of years since the late civil war, equipped with thousands of employés charged with no other duty except the ascertainment and adjustment of the claims of our discharged soldiers and their surviving relatives, it seems to me that a stronger case than this should be presented to justify the passage of a special act, twenty-three years after an alleged disability, granting a pension which has been refused by the bureau especially organized for the purpose of allowing the same under just and liberal laws.

I am by no means insensible to that influence which leads the judgment toward the allowance of every claim alleged to be founded upon patriotic service in the nation's cause. And yet I neither believe it to be a duty nor a kindness to the worthy citizens for whose benefit our scheme of pensions was provided to permit the diversion of the nation's bounty to objects not within its scope and purpose.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 25, 1886.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 8, 1886, reports of engineer officers, with maps, &c., as to providing the water supply of the capital with filters and other appliances for cleansing and purifying the water; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication from the Secretary of War will be printed, and the question of printing the maps, &c., will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BUTLER. The communication should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. VEST presented resolutions adopted by the Fruit and Produce Exchange of Kansas City, Mo., in favor of the passage of the bill placing a tax of 10 cents per pound upon oleomargarine and butterine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HALE. I present a petition of the East Maine Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, composed of eighty-six ministers and representing eight thousand eight hundred and one church members, praying for legislation by Congress providing measures of protection which shall enable the officers of the law to suppress efforts to drive out Chinese residents and to secure to such residents life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition signed by a number of attorneys of Saint Louis, Mo., petitioning Congress to provide a Federal code of procedure, and to invite each State and Territory to aid in its preparation, &c. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary, before which the bill for that purpose is pending.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of citizens of Marion County, Florida, praying for an extension of the railroad grant to the State of Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER. I present a petition of Local Assembly No. 6157, Knights of Labor, of Schaghticoke, and District Association No. 68, Knights of Labor, of Troy, in the State of New York, praying for the defeat of the so-called Morrison tariff bill, and that the tariff be increased to protect the agricultural, mechanical, mining, and manufacturing industries of the United States. The petition is properly certified by the officers of the two assemblies. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of William J. Uhler, of Lebanon, Pa., praying for additional legislation in his favor upon his pension certificate; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of M. L. Childs and 25 other citizens of Bakersfield, Vt., praying for legislation taxing oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present two petitions, one from William H. Bliss, United States attorney, eastern district of Missouri, and E. Smith, assistant, and another from Mr. John F. Phillips, presiding judge of the court of appeals of Kansas City, Mo., praying Congress to provide a Federal code of procedure. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 17 physicians of Albany, N. Y., praying for the passage of a bill re-establishing the National Board of Health; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. EVARTS. I present the petition of Margaret Madden, widow of Christopher Madden, late a private in Company B, Eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for the passage of a special act of Congress granting her a pension. As the bill has been reported favorably, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRAY presented the petition of L. P. Bush, M. D., and other citizens of New Castle County, Delaware, praying for the re-establishment of the National Board of Health; which was referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2478) granting a pension to John Wines;

A bill (H. R. 7162) granting a pension to Martha McIlwain;

A bill (H. R. 6250) to increase the pension of Thomas A. Rowley;

A bill (H. R. 8111) granting a pension to Rebecca Roberts;

A bill (H. R. 2242) restoring to the pension-roll the name of K. G. Billings;

A bill (H. R. 1142) granting a pension to Lydia Hadlock;

A bill (H. R. 7703) granting a pension to Anna A. Probert;

A bill (H. R. 7931) increasing the pension of Clark Boon; and

A bill (H. R. 7914) to increase the pension of David M. Rennoc.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 2207) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868," respecting the Benjamin Weil business, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask leave on behalf of the committee and for the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is on account of illness in his family necessarily absent, and who prepared the report on this bill, to submit that report as and for Mr. MORGAN from the committee at a later day, when it shall have been put in shape.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and leave will be granted as requested to file the report hereafter, there being no objection.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 559) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers and others, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1865) to pay J. C. Hamner, as administrator of George M. Hamner, deceased, the proceeds of certain cotton, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FAIR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 749) for the relief of R. G. Huston & Co., moved its indefinite postponement, which was agreed to; and he submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 2529) for the relief of R. G. Huston & Co.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2155) for the relief of John Wightman, moved its indefinite postponement, which was agreed to; and he submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 2530) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Wightman, deceased; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 546) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow without levees, heretofore reported by him.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MILLER introduced a bill (S. 2531) granting a pension to Sarah C. Camly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2532) for the relief of Mrs. M. R. Casler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2533) for the relief of E. Remington & Sons; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 2534) granting a pension to John H. Austin;

A bill (S. 2535) granting a pension to K. T. Hammond;

A bill (S. 2536) granting a pension to Thomas Brooks;

A bill (S. 2537) granting a pension to Shelton Flannigan;

A bill (S. 2538) granting an increase of pension to W. H. Morton; and

A bill (S. 2539) granting a pension to R. B. Powell.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 2540) for the relief of D. E. Downing; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 2541) to authorize the establishment of export tobacco manufactories, and for drawback upon imported articles used in manufacturing exported tobacco; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPOONER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2542) to pay John Pope Hodnett for services rendered as counsel to the Government in the investigation into affairs of the District of Columbia, acting as such counsel by order of a resolution of the House of Representatives; also for acting as counsel for the workingmen of the District of Columbia for fifteen years last past; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2543) granting a pension to Jacob Mix and repealing the existing law; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2544) to increase the pension of Adrian C. Dodge; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I introduce a bill to provide for the confinement of inebriates in the Government Hospital for the Insane, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I hope the committee will give it early attention.

It appears on examination, strangely enough, that under the laws in force in this District there is no power even to appoint a guardian of an inebriate and no power to restrain him against his will. Such power is limited to insane persons. I therefore hope the committee will give the bill early attention.

The bill (S. 2545) to provide for the confinement of inebriates in the Government Hospital for the Insane was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2546) granting a pension to Elijah E. Smedley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RENT OF BUILDINGS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. VAN WYCK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate what buildings are rented in the city of Washington for the use of the United States, and the annual rent of each.

RESTORATION OF NAVAL CADETS.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of private unobjected pension cases.

Mr. BUTLER. Before that is done I should be very glad to give notice of my intention to call up the bill (S. 371) limiting a portion of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes." The bill was reached on the Calendar and passed over on account of the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. He is in his seat now, and I shall ask the Senate after the routine morning business on Friday morning to take the bill up and dispose of it.

Mr. PLATT. What is the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. It is the bill restoring those cadets to the Navy who were legislated out of the Navy.

Mr. SAWYER. Is the bill likely to require much discussion?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not intend to call it up this morning. I give notice that on Friday morning I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill.

RECONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. Before that is done, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for an order regarding three pension bills—the bill (H. R. 6039) for the relief of Greenville R. Hale, the bill (H. R. 6045) granting a pension to Adam Feltner, and the bill (H. R. 6457) granting a pension to Alfred Pickelsimer. These bills were reported adversely and indefinitely postponed. I ask that the order of indefinite postponement may be set aside and that the bills be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] made the reports; and one of my colleagues in the other House who reported the bills there thinks he has some additional proof. I believe there will be no objection to the bills going back to the committee. I ask that that order be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves to reconsider the action of the Senate by which the pension bills named by him were indefinitely postponed, and that they be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. If there be no objection the several orders will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 356) granting a pension to Samuel Hanson.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 91) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes;"

A bill (S. 2136) for the relief of Edward Fenlon;

A bill (S. 767) for the relief of John Leathers;

A bill (S. 327) granting a pension to James E. O'Shea;

A bill (S. 788) granting a pension to John L. Bruce;

A bill (S. 789) granting a pension to John S. Williams;

A bill (S. 895) granting a pension to Rachel Fleming Cellar;

A bill (S. 1124) granting a pension to William Bethuren;

A bill (S. 1169) granting a pension to John S. Bridges;

A bill (S. 1235) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Rinehalt;

A bill (S. 1257) granting a pension to Henry Shively;

A bill (S. 1348) granting a pension to Sarah E. Henry;

A bill (S. 1726) granting a pension to Augustus Field Stevens;

A bill (S. 1770) granting a pension to J. H. Thornbury;

A bill (S. 2022) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Hattie A. Burnett; and

A bill (S. 1357) granting a pension to Sarah A. Thomas.

JOHN W. FARRIS.

Mr. SAWYER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of private pension bills unobjected to.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar of this class will be announced.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1053, Senate bill 2045——

Mr. COCKRELL. The case just before that, the bill (H. R. 6136) granting an increase of pension to John W. Farris, was laid over the other day at the instance of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I ask that that bill be now taken up. I wish to make an explanation in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill indicated by the Senator from Missouri will be first considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to increase the pension of John W. Farris, late first lieutenant and adjutant of the Forty-eighth Illinois Volunteers, for disease of eyes, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question was, and I thought the Senator from Connecticut was right at the time, that there ought to be some amount specified as to the increase; but I have examined the matter and conferred with the Pension Office, and I find that the bill is right. If the bill is passed, the Pension Office will rate the pension for sore eyes according to the degree of the disability resulting from the sore eyes, and they can increase or decrease it, just as the evidence may show the disability to exist.

Therefore the bill is right, and it will simply give the Pension Office the power to grant the claimant a rating for sore eyes, the Pension Office having declined to grant a pension on that score, but granted it for another matter.

Mr. PLATT. I had no objection whatever to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that.

Mr. PLATT. But I feared that it would not accomplish the object which was intended. However, if the Senator, having examined it, thinks it will, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I agreed fully with the Senator at the time and thought he was right, but on ascertaining the rule in the Pension Office I find that he was not.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SARAH HAMILTON.

The bill (S. 2045) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Hamilton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Sarah Hamilton, widow of Thomas Hamilton, deceased, late a private in Company G, Thirty-seventh Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ABBIE B. HEATH.

The bill (S. 1997) granting a pension to Mrs. Abbie B. Heath was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Abbie B. Heath, widow of John T. Heath, late of Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1997) granting a pension to Abbie B. Heath, have examined the same, and report:

That the records in this case show that claimant is the widow of John T. Heath, late a corporal in Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and who was wounded in battle May 16, 1863, for which the soldier was pensioned July 30, 1864.

The records show also that from the date of the wound until the date of the soldier's death (October 20, 1880) the disabilities of the soldier steadily increased, which is testified to by the attending physician, and that the soldier's death was "caused by the wound and exhaustion of his system resulting from the military service."

Taking into consideration all the evidence on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of the bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM DICKENS.

The bill (S. 2269) granting a pension to William Dickens was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Dickens, late of Company A, Twenty-fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA J. TODD.

The bill (S. 2215) granting a pension to Mary G. Todd, widow of Dr. R. N. Todd, late of Indianapolis, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 6, to change the name "Mary G. Todd" to "Martha J. Todd;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martha J. Todd, widow of Dr. R. N. Todd, late a surgeon in the United States Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Martha J. Todd, widow of Dr. R. N. Todd, late of Indianapolis, Ind."

LAURINDA G. CUMMINGS.

The bill (S. 2267) granting an increase of pension to Laurinda G. Cummings was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Laurinda G. Cummings, widow of Bvt. Brig. Gen. Gilbert W. Cummings, at $50 per month, instead of the pension she now receives; but nothing in the act is to entitle her to arrears of pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH CROWLEY.

The bill (H. R. 5332) granting a pension to Elizabeth Crowley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Crowley, widow of Thomas Crowley, late of Company G, Ninth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HUNTER.

The bill (H. R. 1990) granting a pension to John Hunter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Hunter, late of Company H, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA M. SHINER.

The bill (H. R. 5331) granting a pension to Emma M. Shiner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emma M. Shiner, widow of Robert T. Shiner, late a private in Company B, Third Regiment New Jersey Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH E. VAN HORN.

The bill (H. R. 4723) granting a pension to Joseph E. Van Horn was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph E. Van Horn, late veterinary surgeon of Company B, Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN S. WOLVERTON.

The bill (H. R. 5336) granting a pension to Benjamin S. Wolverton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Benjamin S. Wolverton, late a private in Company A, Fifteenth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PHILIP DEREMER.

The bill (H. R. 5335) granting a pension to Philip Deremer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Philip Deremer, late a private in Company B, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5335) granting a pension to Philip Deremer, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The committee find from the papers in this case that this soldier was a private in Company B, Thirty-first Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

He claims pension upon disabilities resulting from sun-stroke while on duty at Falmouth, Va., in 1863.

The claim was rejected on the ground that there was no record of such disabilities.

Dr. P. G. Creveling, his family physician, makes affidavit that at the time of enlistment he was a sound, healthy man, and was in no way subject to nervous or chronic disease. There are nine affidavits made by as many of his neighbors, intimate with him before his enlistment, who, from personal knowledge, testify that he had never been troubled with sun-stroke or epileptic convulsions therefrom previous to entering the service, and they had known him as a strong and robust man.

Three comrades of the soldier swear that they saw him when attacked by sunstroke on dress parade, and that of their own knowledge he suffered from epileptic fits and convulsions while he remained in the service, and was treated therefor by Dr. Jennings, one of the regimental surgeons, and another comrade heard the surgeon say it was sun-stroke, as the claimant was being carried away. These comrades were all present at the time, as is shown by the Adjutant-General's reports, and from the pension inquiries are shown to be men of truth and veracity.

The testimony since the soldier's discharge is abundant as showing him to be continuously subject to epileptic convulsions, nine of his neighbors and employers making affidavits to that effect; and further, that they are so frequent as to render him unfit for any but the lightest labor and that at infrequent periods. Dr. S. A. McCash treated him for these convulsions, and states in his evidence that he was disabled from continuous work, and upon examination could find nothing to show hereditary troubles of this nature. The testimony of other physicians verifies these statements.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENET L. JOHNSON.

The bill (H. R. 5702) granting a pension to Jenet L. Johnson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jenet L. Johnson, widow of John Johnson, late a private in Company K, Fifteenth Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DARIUS M. SEAMAN.

The bill (H. R. 1279) granting a pension to Darius M. Seaman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Darius M. Seaman, late of Company C, One hundred and fiftieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEWIS TYUS.

The bill (H. R. 247) granting a pension to Lewis Tyus was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Lewis Tyus, late a private in Company D, Santa Fé Battalion (mounted), Mexican war, on the pension-roll at the rate of $40 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case. The bill gives a very large amount.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. COLQUITT May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 247) granting a pension to Lewis Tyus, have carefully examined the same, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The subjoined House report, which the committee adopt, is a correct statement of the facts:

Lewis Tyus enlisted as a private in Company A, Captain Augney's Battalion of Missouri Volunteers, on the 15th day of June, 1846, at Fort Leavenworth, to serve in the Mexican war. He was honorably discharged at Santa Fé, June 14, 1847. He re-enlisted for the war at Santa Fé, July 13, 1847, and was honorably discharged at Independence, Mo., on the 27th of October, 1848, as a private in Company D, Santa Fé Battalion Missouri Volunteers.

Mr. Tyus while in the service contracted scurvy, and from the effects of the disease lost his teeth and lost almost the sight of both his eyes. He is nearly totally blind. He has not been able to find any surviving comrade or commissioned officer or surgeon by whom he could prove the foregoing facts. No record can be found showing his treatment for this disease; but none can be found contradicting in any particular his sworn statement. He is supported in all other respects by the records in the Adjutant-General's Office. His present condition of blindness, now nearly complete, is fully established. A large number of reputable citizens, his neighbors, who have known him for periods ranging from ten to twenty-five years, certify to his good character and trustworthiness, and state they have always found him honorable, upright, and truthful. Mr. Turner, a member of the House, knows him and believes his statements. Mr. Tyus was also a soldier in the Seminole war of 1836.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY MARTIN.

The bill (S. 2232) granting a pension to Mary Martin was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Martin, widow of Thomas Martin, late a private in Company C, Second Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMOS C. WEEDEN.

The bill (H. R. 8085) granting a pension to Amos C. Weeden was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Amos C. Weeden, on account of disabilities contracted while serving under a commission as a captain in the Sixth Regiment of Rhode Island Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. ALDRICH May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8085) granting a pension to Amos C. Weeden, have examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, No. 1785, of the present Congress:

[House Report No. 1785, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions have received from the Commissioner of Pensions a letter dated February 3, 1886, of which the following is a copy:

"Under the joint resolution approved May 29, 1830, which provides that meritorious cases for which there is no provision of the general law be transmitted to Congress, I have the honor to transmit herewith the papers in the case of Amos C. Weeden, late second lieutenant and captain and acting assistant quartermaster, artillery brigade and First Division, Fifth Army Corps, application No. 209047, to consider the propriety of placing his name on the pension-roll. It appears from the evidence in the case that he rendered service in good faith from April 22, 1862, and November 15, 1862, respectively, under commissions from the governor of Rhode Island, and was recognized as of those grades at the time by the duly constituted authorities of the United States. It also appears that while he was thus engaged he became disabled, and was discharged March 3, 1863, upon surgeon's certificate of disability because of subacute inflammation of the neck of the bladder, and has been troubled with his urinary organs continuously since his discharge. The claimant filed an application for pension October 12, 1875, alleging injury to back, resulting in spasmodic rheumatism, and in a subsequent declaration filed October 15, 1885, he alleges that the aforesaid injury also resulted in inflammation of the bladder and kidneys, and the claim was rejected January 29, 1886, upon the ground that claimant is not recognized as having been an officer of the United States Army, as shown by the report of the Adjutant-General, United States Army, in this case, under date of January 14, 1886.

"In view of the fact that the soldier did perform good and valuable services, and became disabled while in the said service, and is still suffering from disabilities, the result of his said military service, it seems to be a case worthy of the consideration of Congress with a view to special legislation to give title."

Accompanying the letter above quoted came the original papers filed in this case in the Pension Office, including the commissions issued by the governor of Rhode Island and other original papers relating to claimant since. The Adjutant-General reports that—

"Amos C. Weeden enlisted as a private in Company A, First Rhode Island Artillery, June 6, 1861, and discharged April 22, 1862, to accept promotion to second lieutenant in Sixth Rhode Island Volunteers. Can not be recognized as a commissioned officer of Sixth Rhode Island Volunteers, said regiment having failed of organization. He appears to have entered on duty without muster, and is first borne on muster-roll of Company D, Fifth United States Artillery, for March and April, 1862, as second lieutenant Sixth Rhode Island Volunteers, by order of governor of Rhode Island, April 22, 1863. Assistant quartermaster division of artillery by special order No. 147, Porter's division, April 25, 1862. Drew pay as second lieutenant Sixth Rhode Island Volunteers on muster and pay roll of Company D, United States Artillery, to September 30, 1862. Was relieved from duty with the division artillery and assigned to duty as acting assistant quartermaster, Griffin's brigade, July 27, 1862. He first appears as captain in orders from division headquarters, announcing him as assistant quartermaster of First Division Fifth Army Corps, November 15, 1862. There is no record of his having been paid as captain. The following order also appears of record:

"[Special Orders No. 46.—Extract.]

"HEADQUARTERS FIFTH ARMY CORPS,
"Camp near Falmouth, Va., March 3, 1863.

"The following-named officers, having tendered their resignations, are honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on surgeon's certificate of disability:

"Capt. Amos C. Weeden, Sixth Rhode Island Volunteers.

* * * * * * *

"By command of Maj. Gen. G. G. Meade.

"——— ———."

Notwithstanding all this evidence of service in his possession, the Adjutant-General, under date of January 14, 1886, positively refuses to recognize Weeden as an officer in the service for the reason that the Sixth Rhode Island Volunteers failed to complete its organization, and that he declined his appointment as captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers.

The declination of this appointment was due, however, to disability contracted prior thereto.

Medical examinations show claimant greatly disabled by reason of disease of kidneys and rheumatism, disabilities shown to have been contracted in the service and line of duty.

Your committee concur in the opinion of the Commissioner of Pensions that the case is worthy of the consideration of Congress, and that, inasmuch as the technical ruling of the Adjutant-General would defeat a meritorious claim, relief should be afforded to the claimant, and therefore beg leave to submit the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRACE F. EDES.

The bill (S. 2144) granting an increase of pension to Grace F. Edes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Grace F. Edes, widow of Benjamin Long Edes, late a lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT BEARD.

The bill (H. R. 5899) to place the name ot Robert Beard on the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Robert Beard, late of Company B, One hundred and first Regiment United States Colored Troops, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN CRYMBLE.

The bill (H. R. 1548) for the relief of Ellen Crymble was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ellen Crymble, widow of Stephen Crymble, formerly a member of Company E, Seventy-ninth Regiment New York State Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOEL D. MONROE.

The bill (H. R. 4058) for the relief of Joel D. Monroe was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joel D. Monroe, late a private in Company C, One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY HIPPLE, JR.

The bill (H. R. 6897) granting a pension to Henry Hipple, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Henry Hipple, jr., late a musician in Company H, One hundred and twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read, that we may see why the musician should draw a pension.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6897) granting a pension to Henry Hipple, jr., have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have carefully considered the facts of this case, and adopt the statement of them as set forth in the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives (House Report No. 1501) hereto annexed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Henry Hipple enlisted in Company H, One hundred and twenty-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers, as a musician, August 6, 1862, and was discharged May 29, 1863.

He claims a pension on account of rheumatism, alleged to have been contracted at or near Port Tobacco, Md., about November 29, 1862.

The Pension Office rejected the claim on the ground that there is no record of treatment, in service or since, or other satisfactory evidence of incurrence.

The records of the Adjutant-General's office furnish no evidence of alleged disability.

The board of examining surgeons at Harrisburg, Pa., certify, in their report dated August 21, 1881, as follows:

"In our opinion the said Henry Hipple is three-fourths totally incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from rheumatism. Judging from his present condition and from the evidence before us, it is our belief that the said disability did originate in the service aforesaid, in the line of duty. The disability is permanent. Applicant has aortic valvular disease of the heart, due, probably, to rheumatic endocarditis; blowing sound well marked. He states that he suffers pain in limbs, and especially in lumbar region, during damp weather."

Before service.—Dr. George F. Mish testifies, August 13, 1882, that he was family physician of claimant's father prior and up to 1857, and that claimant was sound; that from 1857 to 1860 the family was attended by Dr. James Lowe, who is now dead; that claimant was a sound man at enlistment, and that if he had been otherwise he would have known it.

David Hyde and Samuel F. Treley, in affidavit filed August 13, 1882, testify that they knew claimant from boyhood, and that he was a stout, hearty young man, and free from rheumatism at enlistment.

In service.—Claimant states that he was not treated while in service.

Lieut. Isaiah Willis testifies that claimant contracted rheumatism at or near Port Tobacco, Md., about November 29, 1862, while in line of duty. Knowledge from having been first lieutenant of the company, and being present in command at the time.

Since service.—Claimant testifies that he has not had medical treatment since discharge.

Lieut. Isaiah Willis, August 13, 1882, testifies that at different periods of the year since discharge claimant has had attacks of rheumatism so bad as to disable him from following his occupation.

David Hyde and Samuel F. Treley testify substantially the same as Lieutenant Willis.

It thus appears that this claimant was well when he entered the service; that he contracted rheumatism while in it, which disease still continues, and resulted in valvular disease of the heart. The board of examining surgeons find that the "apex of the heart is below the seventh rib and that the left heart is hypertrophied, and rate his disability as three-fourths total."

There remains no doubt in the minds of your committee that this soldier is now suffering from disability, the result of disease contracted in the Army. They therefore report favorably and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES SEBRING.

The bill (H. R. 3135) granting an increase of pension to Charles Sebring was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Charles Sebring, late a private in Company F of the Forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, to $40 per month, in lieu of the pension now received.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3135) granting a pension to Charles Sebring, have examined the same, and report:

The facts upon which the increase asked by the above bill are detailed in the full report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto appended (House report No. 1205), which your committee adopt, and recommend that the bill do pass:

That Mr. Sebring is now receiving a pension of $30 per month on account of loss of his left arm above the elbow by a gunshot wound received in battle while he was a private in Company F, Forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

He filed an application for increase of pension on account of additional disability produced by two other wounds, one of the right forearm and the other the left thigh, received in battle at the same time and place as the wound for which he is now pensioned.

This claim for increase was rejected on the ground that his injuries had not resulted in permanent total helplessness, and that he is now receiving the highest rate authorized by law for a disability not requiring the regular aid and attendance of another person.

The board of surgeons at Kalamazoo, Mich., in their certificates dated September 28, 1883, state that the examination of the applicant reveals the following conditions:

"(1) His physical condition is poor; his left arm is off at junction of the upper and middle third; the cicatrix is adherent to a large neuroma, which is very sensitive and painful.

"(2) A ball entered over the head of the right ulna, fracturing it and making its exit on the inner side of the forearm over the ulna, at the junction of the middle with the lower third, injuring the ulna nerve. The index finger of the right hand can be straightened and the thumb is useful; the other fingers are flexed on the palm of the hand, but can be opened a little. He can carry a pail and can feed himself. Supination and pronation of the forearm fair. The forearm is a little shrunken and numb.

"(3) Gunshot wound of left thigh; the ball entered the upper portion of the middle third on its outer aspect, fractured or splintered the thigh bone and passed downward and inward, and came out on the inner aspect of the lower third. The upper portion of the left thigh is three-fourths of an inch smaller than the right. He complains of weakness of the thigh and pain in walking."

The wound of the left thigh has caused a disability which is rated by the board of surgeons at one-half.

The condition of the right forearm and hand contributes very largely to his disability; and while he is not in a condition of total helplessness entitling him to $50 a month, your committee think he is fairly entitled to some increase, and therefore recommend the bill be amended giving him $40 per month in lieu of the pension now received, and that the bill so amended do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAIAH H. MITCHELL.

The bill (H. R. 3144) granting a pension to Isaiah H. Mitchell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Isaiah H. Mitchell, late a private in Company C, Twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISS MARGARET STAFFORD WORTH.

The bill (S. 2030) granting a pension to Miss Margaret Stafford Worth was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Miss Margaret Stafford Worth, dependent daughter of Maj. Gen. William J. Worth, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2030) granting a pension to Miss Margaret Stafford Worth, have examined the same and report:

The claimant, Miss Margaret Stafford Worth, is the only surviving unmarried daughter of the distinguished Maj. Gen. William J. Worth. She is now living in the city of Washington, with seven of her father's grandchildren to support, in great poverty and without adequate means of subsistence. She has until now managed to support herself and these children, with some assistance, but is now confined to her bed and dangerously ill, so that she will henceforth be dependent on charity. It is a shame that the daughter of one of the most distinguished generals who ever served this Government, and who gave his life to her support, should be reduced to such an extremity in her old age. Congress has granted such relief in many cases of far less merit than this, and your committee think that it would be a fitting tribute to the memory of one of our bravest soldiers.

The following papers show the principal facts of this case, and your committee report back the bill and recommend that it do pass:

Petition of Margaret S. Worth to the United States Senate and House of Representatives for a pension.

William Worth, great-grandfather of Maj. Gen. W. J. Worth, United States Army, left Devonshire, England, on account of religious persecution, landed on the New England coast in 1640. Having protected and sheltered a Quaker, he, with two others, took refuge in a small boat, put to sea without chart or compass, and drifted to the island of Nantucket. There they soon became land owners, and resorted to the sea as a profession. Thomas Worth, his grandson, in time became an owner of ships, and moved to Hudson, N. Y., where he married, and there William J. Worth was born.

At an early age William J. Worth placed himself in the large mercantile house of Starr & Sheldon, in Albany, N. Y., where he served as clerk until, the war of 1812 breaking out, he was offered and accepted the position of private secretary to General Morgan Lewis.

Desiring more active service, he sought and received a commission as lieutenant in the United States Army, serving in every grade and always receiving the commendation of his superior officers and of his countrymen.

At the battle of Lundy's Lane he received a wound from which he never entirely recovered, and twice within your petitioner's memory the opened wound, after exposure in the field, produced inflammation and danger to life.

At the close of the war of 1812, with the brevet rank of major, he was ordered to West Point, where, for nine years, he bent all his energies to raising the standard of the institution to a point never before attained. While at West Point Major Worth married the daughter of Mr. John Stafford, whose ancestors came to America in 1605, a descendant of the family of Stafford, of Warwick, England.

Col. Joab Stafford, Mrs. Worth's grandfather, was severely wounded in the Revolutionary war, and his son was in the battles of Crown Point and Bennington.

Major Worth's next post was Fortress Monroe, where he was instructor in artillery. While there he was sent with the Black Hawk expedition to quell the Indian troubles in the Northwest.

From Fortress Monroe he was transferred to the Ordnance Corps, and made inspector, which duty gave him an annual ride over the Alleghanies, at a period when such a journey was attended with peril. He was then ordered to arrange for the transfer of the Cherokee Nation to its new home on the Arkansas River.

In 1837 he was made colonel of the new regiment, the Eighth Infantry.

The patriot war breaking out on the Canada border, he was instrumental in effecting an amicable settlement of the disturbance.

He was then ordered to Florida, placed in command, conducted the campaigns against the hostile Seminoles, and after many perils, from the climate as well as the military operations, in which he had five engagements with the Indians, he effected a peace, which had until that time been fruitlessly sought by his predecessors, and removed the Indians from the territory to their new home west of the Arkansas.

While on this duty the little fortune which he had hoped to leave for the support of his family had, by the dishonesty of his attorney, been swept away. After the peace he desired to return to the North and endeavor to reclaim something out of the wreck, but being ordered to Mexico, he was prevented from executing his intention, and his family never recovered a cent.

In Mexico he led his division in the battles of Monterey, Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, the advance on Puebla, Molino del Rey, Chapultepec, Churubusco, the Garita of San Cosme, and was the only general officer who slept within the city gate on that memorable night.

He was the first to land at Vera Cruz and the last to leave Mexican soil.

After the close of the war he was ordered to Texas, where the cholera was raging; and there he died, at the post of duty.

I, Margaret Stafford Worth, the only unmarried daughter, having seven of my father's grandchildren almost entirely dependent upon me for support, petition the gentlemen of the United States Senate and House of Representatives to grant me a pension of $50 a month.

BATTLES IN WHICH GENERAL WORTH WAS ENGAGED.

Chippewa, Niagara, Fort Erie, Lundy's Lane; five battles in Florida—Monterey, Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Puebla, Churubusco, Chapultepec, Molino del Rey, battle of the City of Mexico, San Antonio, Garita of San Cosme.

Received the thanks of Congress, State of New York, State of Louisiana, State of Texas, State of Florida.

He received a sword from Congress, from the State of New York, the State of Louisiana, city of Hudson.

A monument worthy of the city of New York was erected to his memory by its citizens.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 15, 1886.

[Statement of the military service of William J. Worth, late of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office.]

He was appointed first-lieutenant Twenty-third Infantry, March 19, 1813; promoted captain, August 19, 1814; retained as captain, Second Infantry, May 17, 1815, in the reorganization under the act of March 3, 1815, and as captain of the First Artillery, June 1, 1821, in the reorganization under the act of March 2, 1821; appointed major of ordnance, May 30, 1832, and colonel Eighth Infantry, July 7, 1838.

He was brevetted captain, July 5, 1814, "for his gallant and distinguished conduct on the said 5th of July, in the battle of Chippewa;" major, July 25, 1814, "being the day of the battle of Niagara, in which Captain Worth was distinguished by his gallantry and good conduct;" lieutenant-colonel, July 25, 1824, "for ten years' faithful service in the grade of brevet major;" brigadier-general, March 1, 1842, for gallantry and highly distinguished services as commander of the forces in the war against the Florida Indians," and major-general, September 23, 1846, "for gallant and meritorious conduct in the several conflicts at Monterey, Mexico."

On May 2, 1847, he was presented by Congress with a sword of honor, "in testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallantry and good conduct in storming Monterey."

He served in the war of 1812-'15 with Great Britain as aid-de-camp to Major-General Lewis from some time in 1813 to April 6, 1814, and as aid-de-camp to Brig. Gen. Winfield Scott, also acting brigade major in the campaign on the northern frontier until severely wounded in the battle of Niagara July 25, 1814; absent wounded to December, 1814; aid-de-camp to Maj. Gen. Winfield Scott, commanding the tenth military district to April 6, 1815; on leave to August, 1815; with regiment in garrison at Sacket's Harbor, Greenbush, Plattsburg, N. Y., to August, 1819; on recruiting service to March 16, 1820; commandant of cadets and instructor of infantry tactics at the United States Military Academy to December 2, 1828; with regiment at Fort Monroe, Va., and on detached duty at that post, as director of the Artillery School of Practice, to May, 1832; commanding Fort Monroe arsenal, Virginia, Frankford arsenal, Pennsylvania, and Watervliet arsenal, New York, to June, 1838; commanding his regiment at Madison barracks, Albany and Ogdensburg, N. Y. (also from January to December, 1889, the Northern Department), to May, 1840; in Wisconsin Territory to July, 1840; en route and in the Florida war against the Seminole Indians (being also in command of the district of Tampa from January to May, 1841; of the army of Florida from May, 1841, to July 25, 1842, and of the Ninth Military Department embracing Florida, to August 22, 1842, and from October 31, 1842, to September 14, 1845; was absent with leave from August 22 to October 30, 1842), to September 26, 1845; commanding the first brigade of the army of occupation in the war with Mexico, to April 8, 1846; on leave to May 27, 1846; commanding the first brigade of the army of occupation, to July 27, 1846, the second division of that army to February 23, 1847, the first brigade, first division of regulars in the army of invasion, to April 1, 1847, the first division to June 21, 1848, being engaged in the battle of Monterey, September 21-23, 1846; siege of Vera Cruz, March 9-29, 1847; battle of Cerro Gordo, April 17, 18, 1847; capture of San Antonio, August 19, 20, 1847; battle of Churubusco, August 20, 1847; of Molino del Rey, September 8, 1847; of Tacubaya, September 12, 1847, and of Chapultepec and San Cosme, September 13, 1847, also in the assault and capture of the City of Mexico, September 13, 14, 1847.

He commanded the army in Mexico from June 21 to July 15, 1848, and the Eighth and Ninth Military Departments, comprising Texas and New Mexico, from November, 1848, to May 7, 1849, upon which date he died at San Antonio, Tex.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1886.

The petitioner, Miss Margaret S. Worth, the daughter of Major-General Worth, who for many years was one of the senior officers of our Army, is now advancing in years, is in failing health, and is no longer able to earn sufficient for her support.

Being now thrown upon her own resources she is at present in almost destitute circumstances.

If Congress, in view of the distinguished services of General Worth, should deem it proper to extend the charity for which Miss Worth petitions they could not find a more worthy object.

P. H. SHERIDAN, Lieutenant-General.

SAINT LOUIS, April 24, 1886.

I commend the foregoing petition to all generous men who love their country and its heroes.

General Worth was one of the most brilliant and conspicuous officers in the war of 1812, Mexican war, and Florida war. He died in the military service on the frontier. I know the petitioner to be his daughter, the only one, I believe, who never married, who has been toiling for years to support herself and help her sister's children. She is now old and feeble, and it will be a graceful act for Congress to recognize her as the orphan of the nation.

W. T. SHERMAN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: I have learned with pleasure that a bill has been introduced into the Senate conferring a pension on Miss Margaret S. Worth.

The services of her distinguished father are a part of the history of the country. Miss Worth has been my friend and patient for a long time. I know that her means are narrow, and that her health is much impaired. She is suffering under profound nervous exhaustion, from which there is little or no probability of her recovery. Therefore she is not likely to ever be able to carry on the clerical work on which she has depended for a livelihood.

Trusting that Miss Worth's case may receive your favorable action,

I remain, your obedient servant,

R. M. O'REILLY, M. D., U. S. A., Attending Surgeon.

The COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS, United States Senate.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: I desire to say that I have known Miss Margaret Worth, daughter of the late General Worth, United States Army, for some years, and have, upon several occasions, been called upon to prescribe for her, and know that her present state of health is very precarious; in my opinion, she is physically unfitted to discharge the duties of her office, and that a due regard for her health demands, for some time or permanently, absolution from those duties.

She is of a delicate, nervous organization, and confinement to business has been and must be injurious to her.

In view of the distinguished services of her father, and her present enfeebled condition preventing her from earning a proper livelihood, I think the granting of a pension would be most meritorious and deserved.

I am, very respectfully,

D. L. HUNTINGTON,
Surgeon, United States Army.

To the COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS,
United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 22, 1886.

To the Committee on Pensions, United States Senate:

I take the liberty of addressing you in advocacy of the application for pension made for Miss Margaret Worth, eldest daughter of the late Maj. Gen. W. S. Worth, United States Army.

I have known Miss Worth over thirty years, and know that her life has been devoted to the care and support of dependent descendants of General Worth, her sisters, nieces, and nephews. For some years she has labored as a clerk in a public office. Her health is now very much impaired, and she is almost incapacitated for further work.

I would most respectfully urge that a pension may be granted her.

I have the honor to be, very truly and respectfully,

R. MURRAY,
Surgeon-General, United States Army.

It seems like presumption in me to bear testimony to the services of Major-General Worth, to whom the Congress of the United States and the Legislatures of four States have voted their thanks and presented swords of honor, and to whose memory the great city of New York has erected a stately monument inscribed with the principal events in his distinguished career—his wounds, his battles, his commands—from the war of 1812, as a mere lad, to his death nearly forty years after from cholera, at his post, as much a martyr to duty as if he had been shot on the field of battle.

His successful termination of the Florida war as a general-in-chief, his brilliant services as a general of division in Mexico, are matters of history; but there were incidents with which history does not deal and which are known to me. He was habitually at the point of danger. This characteristic enabled him to snatch victory from three times his force at Molino del Rey, when a disastrous defeat seemed imminent from mere force of numbers. He was the first general and one of the first persons in the City of Mexico when the gates of that town were carried by assault, and he was not only the last general but the last person in the Army to leave it at the end of the war. There were signs of serious disturbance and riot among the "leperos," the lowest order of the inhabitants, and he saw every soldier, woman, and child safely out of the gates before he himself left the city.

If it is possible for any man to establish such a claim on the gratitude of his country as to entitle a daughter to aid in her distress, then General Worth has established such a claim.

HENRY I. HUNT,
Brevet Major-General, U. S. Army.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1886.

It was not my privilege to know General Worth personally, as he died in the year in which I entered the Army. He died at his post of duty from a disease to the fatal effects of which the requirements of the public service compelled him to expose himself. Every officer who entered the Army about my own time can testify to the marks of high tone and elevated soldierly ideas which were impressed upon our small Army by his instruction, and his bearing as commandant of cadets, and by his distinguished conduct on many fields of battle in the interest of our country. He was a type of a soldier on which the heroes of the Mexican war and those of our later struggle on either side tried to model themselves. If we were asked to grant a pension to the daughter of Andrew Jackson, I do not think there would be a dissenting voice in the nation, and I do not think there ought to be one to granting to the daughter of General Worth, who is in need of a slight tribute in recognition of the distinguished services of her father.

A. BAIRD,
Brevet Major-General.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31, 1886.

The honorable Committee on Pensions, United States Senate:

I do not know well enough the pension laws to know whether Miss Worth is under them entitled to any pension arising out of her father's (General Worth) very distinguished and well-known services. I presume that it can be granted only by a special law.

When I went to West Point, fifty years ago, as a cadet, no name, except General Scott's, was more often spoken of by officers of the Army. I grew up in admiration of his eminent qualities and high deeds as a soldier in the war of 1812 on the Niagara frontier, when he excited the admiration of his comrades, many of whom I learned to know.

He served with equal distinction through the war with Mexico, and died full of honors, and left little, I think, to his family except name and reputation. I shall be glad to learn that if Miss Worth, his daughter, needs it, she succeeds in obtaining a pension from the country he served so well in its and in his youth and manhood.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,
Quartermaster-General retired, Brevet Major-General, United States Army.

The late General William Worth was a very distinguished officer in the Army of the United States, as his record will show. His eldest daughter, Miss Margaret Worth, now of this city, who is in feeble health, is applying for a pension, which I sincerely hope may be granted her.

D. H. RUCKER,
Brigadier-General, United States Army, retired.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1886.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSIE H. BABB.

The bill (H. R. 7330) granting a pension to Josie H. Babb was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Josie H. Babb, widow of John W. Babb, late a musician in Company I, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPHINE DA COSTA THOMAS.

The bill (H. R. 4688) granting a pension to Josephine Da Costa Thomas was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $40 a month, the name of Josephine Da Costa Thomas, widow of Evan Thomas, late of the Fourth Regiment of Artillery, United States Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us know the reason for striking out "thirty" and inserting "forty" by having the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4688) granting a pension to Josephine Da Costa Thomas, have examined the same, and report:

That this case was considered by your committee and reported upon favorably (see Senate Report No. 729) at the present session. Since said report was made additional evidence has been laid before us which has induced us to ask that the bill be recommitted to us for further action.

It appears that the claimant is an educated lady, a native of a foreign country, but left in this city poor and without means of earning money to support either herself or her small children. She has two children, both girls, under the age of sixteen, and of course helpless and dependent upon their mother for their maintenance and education. One of these children is also in delicate health, while the mother, by reason of her want of American associations, is in a comparatively helpless and friendless situation. General Grant, General Sherman, and other officers of the Army acquainted with the circumstances of the death of this brave officer, have manifested a deep interest in her case as one of unusual merit.

Your committee, after a careful consideration of all the facts of this case, report back this bill with a recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendment: Strike out the word "thirty," in the fifth line, and insert the word "forty" in lieu thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MANHATTAN PICKETT.

The bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett, late a sergeant of Company B, One hundred and twelfth Regiment New York Volunteers, to $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to say simply for myself that I think the bill which has just been passed for Josephine Da Costa Thomas, increasing the allowance as made by the House from $30 to $40, and this proposal in the case of Manhattan Pickett to increase the pension from $36 to $50, are both extravagant. I think they are both unjust—unjust in the fact that they do injustice to many other equally worthy and deserving soldiers who can not get relief. I think the amount allowed in the House bills is large and liberal. I am opposed to the increase in these cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish the reports in both cases to be printed. I care to make no other reply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report in this case will be printed in the RECORD. In the Thomas case the report was read.

The report submitted by Mr. BLAIR from the Committee on Pensions May 4, 1886, is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have carefully examined the facts in this case, the main points of which are briefly set forth in the following report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives (H. R. Report No. 1797):

"The soldier is now in receipt of a pension for gunshot wound, described as follows by J. L. Stewart, president board of examining surgeons:

"'Gunshot wound of posterior surface of left leg, leaving an ulcerated discharging wound 3½ inches long over the lower part of the gastrocnemius muscle, the lower third of which muscle has been removed by inflammatory action and discharges, producing pain and weakness of the leg and ankle, and impairing his ability for manual labor, causing a disability equal to the loss of a hand or foot.'

"Dr. Pickett has appeared personally before your committee, and having examined him carefully, they find the leg atrophied, with a large ulceration, which is evidently incurable.

"The leg requires bandaging to be constantly renewed, and is offensive to the smell. This has impaired his general health and reduced it to so low an ebb that an amputation of the leg, though very much to be desired, would now be exceedingly dangerous and probably fatal.

"Taking all things into consideration, your committee think that this pensioner would be better off had his leg been amputated."

In addition to the above, the following affidavit has been filed in support of the claim for increase, as follows:

CITY OF WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, ss:

Alexander M. Lowry, after being duly sworn, deposes and says that he was late adjutant of the One hundred and twelfth Regiment New York State Volunteers: that he was attached to said regiment from August, 1862, until about September, 1864; that he was well acquainted with Manhattan Pickett, late a sergeant of Company B, of said regiment, who is now an applicant for a pension by special act of Congress by bill H. R. No. 7165; that he has known him since August, 1862.

Affiant further states that said Pickett was wounded at Cold Harbor in the line of duty; that he was immediately afterward taken to the hospital, where he remained until discharged and sent home. Said Pickett has never recovered from the effects of said wound, but is now entirely disabled and rendered utterly helpless and unable to do anything to support himself or family in consequence thereof. This wound has never healed, but on the contrary has continually grown worse until at the present time it is in such an offensive condition that it is necessary to dress the same at least twice every day. The soldier is himself an eminent physician and surgeon, one of the best in Western Pennsylvania, and has therefore been able thus far to prescribe for his own case; were he required to employ medical assistance it would take a much larger amount of money to pay for the same than his present pension.

He now requires constant care, attendance, and treatment on account of the offensive and dangerous character of this wound and its discharges. Under its influence his health is rapidly declining, owing to the constant and severe drain upon his physical system; this is greatly enhanced by the continuous pain which he suffers on account of this wound, which has shattered his nervous system, and requires large quantities of opiates to be persistently administered in order to relieve the same, the effect of which has necessarily been very injurious. The said wound is several inches in length, from the knee down, and the flesh is gradually sloughing off, the result of which is of the most disagreeable character. He long ago would have submitted to amputation of the leg above the knee were it not for the fact that he has been assured by the best medical authorities in that section that such amputation would probably result in death. The claimant has therefore continued to drag out a miserable existence, which it is the belief of your affiant can not probably be continued but a short time, and which it is very probable may even be numbered by months.

Affiant further states that the claimant has a wife and one young child depending upon him for support; that he is entirely without property or means; that he is an eminent physician and would be capable, if physically able to attend to his profession, of securing a large and lucrative practice; that he has been surgeon of the Philadelphia and Erie Railway Company, but, not being able to attend to the duties of that position, must resign the same.

Affiant further states that the wife of said claimant has been his constant attendant and has given and is now giving a large portion of her time, strength, and energy to his care, and that but for her assistance he would be compelled to procure the constant aid and attendance of another person, which he is now unable to do by reason of poverty.

Affiant further states that he has no interest in the prosecution of the above claim.

ALEX. M. LOWRY.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 4th day of May, 1886.
[SEAL.] R. B. NIXON, Notary Public.

Your committee think that the evidence shows a condition of this soldier which will fully warrant the pension of $50 per month, as it would seem that he requires the aid and attendance of another, besides constant medical attendance. The bill is therefore reported back with a recommendation that it do pass, with the following amendment: Strike out the word "thirty-six" in the sixth line, and insert the word "fifty."

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ANN E. COONEY.

The bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ann E. Cooney, who served as a hospital nurse during the late rebellion, at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

H. P. M'FARLIN.

The bill (H. R. 3848) for the relief of H. P. McFarlin was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 4, after the words "directed to," to strike out "restore to" and insert "reinstate upon;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to reinstate upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of H. P. McFarlin, late of Company I, Seventh Regiment Michigan Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 4, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3848) for the relief of H. P. McFarlin, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have carefully examined the facts in this case, and concur in the findings of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, which we append hereto (House Report No. 748), and report back the bill with a favorable recommendation, with the following amendment: Strike out the words "restore to," in the fourth line, and insert the words "reinstate upon."

The claimant in this case, Hewlitt P. McFarlin, was a sergeant in Company I, Seventh Regiment Michigan Infantry, and was pensioned on the 11th day of May, 1871, at the rate of $6 per month, commencing January 5, 1863, for injury to leg received in the service and in line of duty. Some charge having been made against the claimant's right to a pension, stating that he had varicose veins before entering the service, and that his present disability comes from that cause and not from any injury received in the service, a special examination was ordered, which resulted in his being dropped from the rolls in May, 1878. Thereupon he made application to be restored, and the case underwent a thorough examination by a special agent, with a view of determining whether the present disability was attributable to varicose veins or the result of an injury received in the service. The special examiner examined twenty witnesses upon these points, and continued the investigation for more than two weeks, which resulted in a recommendation on the part of the special examiner that the claimant be restored to the rolls. The Pension Office rejected the claim for restoration.

The report of the special examiner covers all the points in controversy, and closes as follows:

"I deemed it necessary that the claimant be examined by a board of examining surgeons to determine definitely whether he is suffering or has suffered from any injury of left leg other than varicose veins. I accordingly took him before the examining surgeons of this city (Kalamazoo). That the claimant did have varicose veins upon his left leg at the time and prior to his enlistment there can be not a particle of doubt; but I do not believe from the testimony adduced that he was disabled by reason of them. I am of the opinion that an injustice has been done the claimant in dropping him from the rolls—not that he is entitled to a pension by reason of varicose veins, but by reason of the injury of the knee and bone of his left leg. I also believe that that injury greatly aggravated the varicose veins. I therefore recommend that he be restored to the rolls by reason of injury of left leg."

The board of surgeons, after describing the condition of the injured leg, say:

"The whole length of the left tibia is thickened, and a portion of the bone was removed while in hospital. The leg is badly injured, independent of the varicose veins, and the injury has caused and greatly aggravated the varicose veins, in our opinion. From the condition which we now find, it is our judgment that he is disabled by the same causes for which he was originally pensioned, and that his disability has not been aggravated or prolonged by vicious habits. He is, in our opinion, entitled to restoration, and we recommend a three-fourths rating for injury of leg, independent of varicose veins."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR. In connection with the case just passed, I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that on that evidence the Pension Office refused to restore that man to the roll, and it is necessary to come to Congress to get relief.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from New Hampshire refers to the case of McFarlin. That pensioner, it is true, was ordered to be dropped in 1878. Very soon afterward he was ordered before an examining board, and the special examiners made recommendations in regard to him, and he was then examined before a board of examining surgeons in Kalamazoo. He was dropped because it was not believed that he was entitled to a pension for varicose veins, and the examining surgeons and the special examiner found that he was not entitled to it upon that ground, but that he was entitled to a pension upon a different ground.

Mr. BLAIR. The report shows——

Mr. COCKRELL. And accordingly they reported as they did.

Mr. BLAIR. I merely call attention to the report. The facts are stated there somewhat more fully than the Senator has stated them.

WILLIAM C. WAIT.

The bill (S. 1078) granting a pension to William C. Wirt, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported to amend the bill, in line 5, to change the name "Wirt" to "Wait;" after the word "Company," at the end of the same line, to insert "C;" and in line 6, before "Vermont," to insert "Fifth;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of William C. Wait, late a private in Company C of the Fifth Vermont Volunteers, at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to William C. Wait."

THOMAS BENSON.

The bill (S. 2336) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Benson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Benson, late a private in Company A, Thirty-second Regiment Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $35 per month, in lieu of the amount he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY M. GALLEYAN.

The bill (H. R. 3941) granting a pension to Mary M. Galleyan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary M. Galleyan, widow of Joseph S. Galleyan, late of Company G, Fifty-ninth Indiana Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED J. LEESE.

The bill (H. R. 3624) granting a pension to Fred J. Leese was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Fred J. Leese, late of Company M, One hundred and ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COL. JAMES H. BLOOD.

The bill (S. 2263) granting a pension to Col. James H. Blood was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Col. James H. Blood, late colonel of the Sixth Regiment Missouri Infantry, at $70 per month, in lieu of the pension now received.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE LANIGAN.

The bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catharine Lanigan, mother of John Lanigan, late of Company K, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers, in the late war, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN JACOBY.

The bill (H. R. 4699) granting a pension to Martin Jacoby was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martin Jacoby, of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, for the loss of his two sons, David Jacoby, of Company C, Seventeenth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, and Martin Jacoby, jr., of the Seventy-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVALINE A. WHITE.

The bill (H. R. 1560) for the relief of Evaline A. White was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Evaline A. White, widow of George C. White, deceased, late a second-class fireman in the United States Navy, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIJAH P. HENSLEY.

The bill (H. R. 1707) granting a pension to Elijah P. Hensley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elijah P. Hensley, late of Company K, Third Regiment North Carolina Mounted Infantry.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 5, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1707) granting a pension to Elijah P. Hensley, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have carefully considered the facts in this case, and adopt the report hereto annexed of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives (House Report No. 890), and recommend the passage of the bill.

The claimant was admitted to a pension of $4 per month on the rolls of the Raleigh, N. C., agency, December 17, 1868, commencing August 8, 1865, and paid to include March 3, 1877; was dropped from the roll August 3, 1877, on the ground that the pensioner was not in the service and line of duty when wounded, as shown by the report of Special Agent Ragsdale, dated May 31, 1877.

Claimant was a member of Company K, Third North Carolina Mounted Volunteers, having enlisted in said company in February, 1865, and was wounded at Indian Creek, Yancey County, North Carolina, March, 1865, having been cut off from his command in Tennessee, on House Creek, near Greeneville, Tenn. At the time claimant was wounded he was detailed by Colonel Kirk to join T. O. and J. W. Guthrie and others to get rations for themselves; that they returned within one hour and a half, but found that the command had left. The claimant with others then started for a point of safety in North Carolina, and to join their command, when overtaken and shot by the enemy, and wounded as alleged.

It appears that some time in 1877, owing to causes not material to this report, information was furnished the Pension Office that said claimant was not wounded in the line of duty. On this point there is a conflict of testimony on the time of claimant reaching his command, but none as to his being shot by rebels while in search of provisions for his command as he was detailed to do.

Your committee are of the opinion that claimant is entitled to a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call the attention of the Senate to this case. Here was a pensioner who was dropped from the rolls in 1877, nine years ago. There is nothing in the record here to show that he ever applied to the Pension Office for restoration to the roll. As I understand, the Pension Office when they drop a pensioner from the roll will at any time consider proper and legitimate testimony which shows that the office was in error in dropping him from the roll, and will restore him to the roll. I notice in the report of the Commissioner of Pensions a number of cases that are dropped, restored, and reconsidered and all that. Ought not this claimant to have applied to the Pension Office during the last nine years for restoration? Or is this one of a class of cases where if he had applied, under the technical rules of the office the office could not have restored him?

Mr. BLAIR. There is no evidence that he has not applied, nor is there any reason to say that he should have applied unless he might be in the possession of new evidence calculated to establish his pension. He once had established his pension and had drawn it from the office for a considerable time. It seems that upon some information the nature of which is not developed, perhaps from some personal enemy or some busybody—and there are a great many such—who from general principles of malevolence may have given information anonymously, he was dropped from the roll, as was then the custom of the office very largely, without evidence, without reason, and in the perpetuation of the rankest injustice without investigation. He was dropped. This man, if I recollect aright, is a colored man, and Mr. O'HARA, of the House, is familiar with the circumstances of the case. I am confident that is the case he spoke to me about. Upon the evidence as it was upon the files as brought to us, and from other sources, it appeared proper that he should be restored to the roll.

I am not able to answer the Senator's question as to whether he made application and filed evidence to prove that he ought to have been restored by a tribunal that had once dropped him without proper investigation. There seems to be no reason why he should not be restored to the roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOAH HOFFMAN.

The bill (H. R. 5328) granting a pension to Noah Hoffman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Noah Hoffman, late a corporal of Company C, Ninetieth Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVY OR MARINE CORPS PENSIONS.

Mr. COCKRELL. My attention has been called to Senate bill 1526, Order of Business 588. I am not sure but that it may have been passed over. Let it be read and the Senate will understand what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not sure, but I think that when that was called I asked some explanation of it, and it was passed over at the time. I have looked at the report in that case, and I simply ask that the bill be now considered, if there be no objection.

Mr. SAWYER. There is no objection; it is a just bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 4756 and section 4757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States by inserting the words "or as an appointed petty officer, or both," after the words "as an enlisted person" in the former section, and after the words "as an enlisted man" in the latter section.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read. It is very short and it gives the reasons for the bill.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER April 13, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps, have examined the same, and report:

Section 4756 provides for the payment of a pension out of the naval pension fund to persons who "served as an enlisted person in the Navy or Marine Corps," &c., and section 4757 provides for aid from that fund to "every disabled person who has served in the Navy or Marine Corps as an enlisted man," &c. This bill is designed to cover the cases of those who actually rendered the same service as appointed petty officers, although not actually enlisted.

Your committee are in receipt of the following letter from the Navy Department in regard to this bill, recommending it to the favorable consideration of Congress:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 6, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to Senate bill No. 1526, and to recommend it to the favorable consideration of the Committee on Pensions of the United States Senate.

Under existing laws enlisted persons performing certain duties are entitled to service pensions when they become disabled, while persons performing the same duties under appointments are deprived the benefits of such service.

This bill has my heartiest commendation, as it will not only afford justice to a large class of very deserving persons, but will have the tendency to induce men of experience to remain in the service, which will be of great advantage, particularly in view of the contemplated increase in the number and efficiency of vessels of war.

I would earnestly invite the early consideration of the bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. I. MITCHELL,
Chairman of Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

The following letter also shows the necessity for this action, and the inequalities of the present law:

UNITED STATES NAVAL HOSPITAL, Norfolk, Va., April 1, 1886.

SIR: Senate bill 1526, referred to the Committee on Pensions, is one in which I with other unfortunates take a very keen interest. Should its provisions become law a long-delayed justice would be done the "appointed petty officers" in the Navy apothecaries and pay yeomen, who, owing to the vacillating policy of the Navy Department in changing their status at frequent intervals, are entirely debarred from all benefits for long service.

I have served as an apothecary in the Navy a great many years, before, during, and since the late war, and yet have no claim now that I have grown old. There are many others similarly situated and to whom the passage of the above bill, 1526, would afford relief.

For myself and others, I most respectfully ask your favorable consideration and support when the bill is before you for action.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. S. BARRY,
Apothecary, United States Navy.

The amendment proposed in this bill will cover but a comparatively small number of cases, but it will save your committee the trouble of considering special bills in their behalf, and as it seems to be in the line of previous legislation, as well as but an act of simple justice to old servants of the Government, we report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. As additional information I ask that a letter from the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting in the Navy Department, which I send to the desk may be read. It gives the exact number, and this bill has to go to the House.

The Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING,
Washington, April 28, 1886.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 27th instant, requesting information as to the number of men that would be benefited by House bill No. 4702, the Bureau respectfully states that at present there are one hundred and twenty-seven appointed men in the service out of eight thousand two hundred and fifty, the authorized quota. This percentage will not materially increase or decrease, unless the number of men allowed the Navy is changed by act of Congress.

Very respectfully,

W. S. SCHLEY,
Chief of Bureau.

Mr. DAVID S. BARRY, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CONGER. Objections were made to this bill because it was not known how many it would affect, and the letter from the chief of the bureau shows the number.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR. The letter gives the whole number of appointed men. Of course those who will be beneficiaries under the act will never be anything like that number.

LOUISE ARMBRECHT.

The bill (S. 1201) granting a pension to Louise Armbrecht was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in lines 6 and 7, to strike out the name "Ambrecht" and insert "Armbrecht;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louise Armbrecht, the widow of Augustus L. Armbrecht, late a sergeant in the Army of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Louise Armbrecht."

CAROLINE SEES.

The bill (S. 1207) granting a pension to Caroline Sees was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, after the word "Sees," in line 6, to strike out the words:

Who was chief of transportation and telegraphy on the staff of Major-General D. N. Couch, commanding the Department of the Susquehanna during the invasion of Pennsylvania by the confederate army, in the month of June, A. D. 1863.

And after the word "volunteers," in line 11, strike out:

To date from the 30th of September, 1863, the day of his death.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline Sees, of Harrisburg, Pa., widow of Maj. Oliver W. Sees, at the rate allowed to a widow of a major of volunteers.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SALLIE ANCRUM.

The bill (H. R. 7168) for the relief of Mrs. Sallie Ancrum was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Sallie Ancrum, widow of Aaron Ancrum, late of Company G, Thirty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEMUEL ADAMS.

The bill (H. R. 7468) granting a pension to Lemuel Adams was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lemuel Adams, a private in Captain John Tremble's company, Major Russell's battalion, war of 1812.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 6, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7468) granting a pension to Lemuel Adams, have examined the same, and report that after examination they have adopted the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives, hereto annexed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Lemuel Adams was born in the year 1797, and in the year 1814 was a resident of the State of Tennessee. On or about the 1st of January, 1815, said Lemuel Adams entered the military service of the United States as a substitute for Alexander Hanner, in Capt. John Tremble's company, Major Russell's battalion, and served in said company until some time in March, 1815. His name, it seems, does not appear on the rolls of said company, for the reason that he served only a portion of the time of Alexander Hanner, Hanner's name only being carried on the list and receiving the discharge. As the applicant is aged, infirm, poor, and helpless, and rendered military service for his country, although in the form of a substitute, yet he should receive a pension for the few remaining years he may survive.

They therefore recommend the passage of the bill herewith submitted in lieu of 4752, offered with his memorial to the Forty-seventh Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN TAYLOR.

The bill (H. R. 3826) for the relief of John Taylor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of John Taylor, formerly a member of Battery M, Third Regiment New York Light Artillery Volunteers, from $12 to $16 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. SWARTZ.

The bill (H. R. 6725) granting a pension to William M. Swartz was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William M. Swartz, late of Company F, Forty-sixth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SANFORD C. WILLHOITE.

The bill (H. R. 3972) granting a pension to Sanford C. Willhoite was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sanford C. Willhoite, late a private in Company E, Thirtieth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 6, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3972) granting a pension to Sanford C. Willhoite, have examined the same, and report that after examination they have adopted the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto annexed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Sanford C. Willhoite enlisted as sergeant in Company E, Thirtieth Regiment Kentucky Mounted Volunteers, on the 12th day of December, 1863; discharged therefrom April 18, 1865.

Filed claim for pension December 4, 1874, based on rheumatism and injury to right eye contracted in service in line of duty. Claim was rejected August 25, 1882, on the ground of no disability from rheumatism and no record, and claimant unable to furnish competent testimony showing existence of disease of eye in service or at discharge.

It is fully shown by testimony that claimant was sound and free from disease at enlistment. The proof is strong and amply sufficient that claimant contracted rheumatism while in the service in line of duty at Frankfort, Ky., in March 1864. The case was submitted by Special Examiner Bond, July 31, 1882, for admission for disability for rheumatism, and on this point the claim was rejected on certificate of examining surgeon, who certified that disability for rheumatism did not exist in a pensionable degree. On the question of injury to eye it is shown by several of claimant's comrades, certified by examiner to be of good moral character, and whose presence at time of alleged incurrence of injury to right eye is verified by report of the Adjutant-General, that they were present with claimant in battle at Saltville, Va., October 3, 1864, and that they each saw claimant receive a severe injury to his right eye from the discharge of a gun in the hands of one of his comrades, who was standing immediately in his rear and shooting over his shoulder at the enemy.

That the regimental surgeon who treated him for said injury is now dead; that the assistant regimental surgeon was not present at the time and did not treat him; that his captain was not present, having a short time previous received a severe wound, on account of which he had been carried to the rear; that the second lieutenant of his company was at the time absent on detached duty; that the first lieutenant, who was present and in command, is now dead; that he was not treated in hospital because of the fact that his regiment was forced to retreat, and that claimant was forced to retreat with his command or fall into the hands of the enemy. The injury to his eye continued till his discharge, but not in a sufficient degree to entirely disable him after his first partial recovery; subsequent to his discharge it is shown by abundant reliable medical and lay testimony to have increased and now exists in a pensionable degree, both eyes being affected as a result of the said injury in battle. Claimant's habits are shown to be good. Dr. C. A. Cox, the assistant surgeon of his regiment, under date November 23, 1864, issued medical certificate of disability to claimant on account of rheumatism.

Your committee are of the opinion that claimant's right to pension is as clearly established as it is possible to establish a claim by lay testimony. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. This claimant filed his application in 1874, and it was rejected on the 25th of August, 1882, four years ago nearly. It does not seem that there has been any effort made to have the case reopened and reconsidered in the Pension Office.

As I understand the rules of the Department, any applicant can file an application for a reconsideration of his case and can present additional testimony, and if the testimony which is here recited in this report is competent under the law to establish the disability, it does seem to me that this is a case which the Pension Office would now favorably consider. It may be, however—the report does not specify particularly—that the technical evidence of the surgeon of the regiment and the commissioned officers of the company may not be obtainable, as the report says some of them are dead. As a matter of course, when a regiment is on retreat it very often happens that a wounded soldier will not lag back and be captured by the enemy, and as this man was retreating with his command there would be no hospital treatment and the officers who could show that may be dead; but it seems to me this is a case that the Pension Office would allow if the testimony here referred to is not only competent under the law but establishes the facts required.

Mr. BLAIR. There is a general misapprehension as to what evidence is competent to be considered by the Commissioner of Pensions. There are absolutely no limitations, excepting such as grow up under the acute, metaphysical, and technical constructions of the various Commissioners in their administration from time to time in connection with the rulings of the Secretary of the Interior, which during these years have come to constitute as intricate and complicated chancery practice as exists on the face of the earth, without any reason in the world why it should be so, except that it has grown up. There is no evidence that would be admissible in a common law court that might not well be entertained there. But these rigid rules have from time to time been relaxed by successive Commissioners; and I think the tendency is to greater liberality as years pass on.

I think the present Commissioner has made several rulings that are very favorable to the prosecution of claims; and yet it is the fact that still it very often comes to be the case that evidence which the Senator himself or anybody would say bears on the case and has weight, tends to convince men in their own important affairs, is excluded, and oftentimes claims are therefore rejected when in courts of law even, as I think from an investigation of a great many of them, the verdicts of juries and the judgments of the courts would have been favorable to the applicant.

In this case the man prosecuted his claim from 1874 to 1882 and it was rejected. He has gone through all the forms that are necessary or that are held in any case to be proper in order to give him a standing in an application for special relief to Congress.

I do not know whether this additional testimony—for I was not observing—is such as would have been considered under their rules in the Pension Office or not; but certainly there was no reason why the man should have gone there after his eight years' effort in that office for relief. He had not very good success there.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unless he obtains additional evidence.

Mr. BLAIR. Even with additional evidence. If he had done so and should have been able to maintain his claim he would have been entitled to arrears, because the application was made in 1874. But he did not do it, and a great many cases come to us where I have no doubt if they were tried by juries the claimants would maintain their cause and get their arrears; but they have given it up. Six or eight or ten years' experience in such a place satisfies a man to go somewhere else if possible. The facts are sufficient to convince the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, the requirements are that there shall be the evidence of the surgeon of the regiment or of two commissioned officers or of two of the comrades of the company or regiment in the service. Those requirements are only regulations of the Department, and not statutory enactments.

Mr. BLAIR. There are only regulations; there are no statutory rules of evidence. Of course that, in the nature of things, it is proper to require in the first instance.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET E. COCHRAN.

The bill (H. R. 908) granting a pension to Margaret E. Cochran was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret E. Cochran, widow of Thomas B. Cochran, late lieutenant-colonel of the Second Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH WARNER.

The bill (H. R. 5729) granting a pension to Elizabeth Warner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Elizabeth Warner, widow of Harrison Warner, late a corporal of Company G, One hundred and eighty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CARTER W. TILLER.

The bill (H. R. 4002) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Carter W. Tiller, dependent father of G. W. Tiller, late a private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. BRIDGET SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 4070) for the relief of Mrs. Bridget Smith, mother of Patrick J. Smith, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Bridget Smith, mother of Patrick J. Smith, deceased, late of Company H, Tenth Minnesota Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PARMELIA SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 6092) granting a pension to Parmelia Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Parmelia Smith, the invalid daughter of the late Joseph R. Smith, a brevet brigadier-general in the United States Army, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT C. M'KEE.

The bill (H. R. 525) to restore Robert C. McKee to the pension-roll was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Robert C. McKee, late a private in Com. G, Twentieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 6, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 525) granting a pension to Robert C. McKee, have examined the same, and report that they have adopted the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto annexed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

This committee of the Forty-eighth Congress having reported a bill favorably for the relief of this claimant, the same passed the House, but failed of consideration in the Senate. Therefore your committee adopt the printed report of this committee of the Forty-eighth Congress, as follows:

"That Robert C. McKee enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company C, Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, July 6, 1861, and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability January 14, 1864, for total loss of vision of left eye and partial loss of the right; also disability of left arm from a fracture producing partial anchylosis of the elbow-joint, existing before enlistment.

"December 1, 1866, he was pensioned at the rate of $6 per month for loss of sight of left eye and partial loss of right, which was increased to $8 per month July 23, 1870.

"June, 1880, claimant was dropped from the pension-roll, by order of the Secretary of the Interior, on the charge that the disability for which the soldier was pensioned existed prior to and at the time of his enlistment in the military service of the United States.

"The evidence taken by a special examiner of the Pension Office in support of this charge was ex parte, the claimant having no notice of the taking of such testimony, as is shown by the examiner's report to the honorable Commissioner of Pensions.

"November 20, 1880, the claimant was indicted by a grand jury of the United States court at Indianapolis, under section 5438, Revised Statutes, for presenting false vouchers, &c., and on May 21, 1881, was tried by a jury of said court, and a verdict of 'not guilty' rendered.

"Hon. Charles L. Halstein, United States attorney at Indianapolis, in a letter to Attorney-General MacVeagh, says of the trial in this case: 'The evidence was very conflicting, and on the evidence the verdict can not be complained of.'

"General J. J. Reynolds, a distinguished citizen of Indiana and a resident of La Fayette, Ind., during and since the war, in a statement before this committee, May 26, 1884, in support of the restoration of this soldier to the pension-roll, says that he mustered the Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers into the United States service, and that from seeing the condition of this soldier at the time of his trial in the district court at Indianapolis, he is satisfied he would not have mustered a man in such a condition into the military service, and expressed the emphatic opinion that the disability of this soldier could not have existed at the time of his enlistment and muster into the service.

"From an examination of all the evidence in this case, and the statement of General Reynolds to your committee, we are of opinion that a clear preponderance of the evidence is in favor of the restoration of this soldier to the pension-roll, and therefore report the accompanying bill to the House and recommend its passage."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEWTON DAY.

The bill (H. R. 448) granting a pension to Newton Day was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Newton Day, late a private in Company B of the One hundred and fortieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. STOUT.

The bill (H. R. 1841) granting a pension to George W. Stout was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of George W. Stout, late a private in Company K, Seventieth Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH LUCE.

The bill (H. R. 5997) granting a pension to Elizabeth Luce was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Luce, widow of John W. Luce, late a private in Company E of the First Ohio Light Artillery.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER May 6, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5997) granting a pension to Elizabeth Luce, have examined the same, and report that they have adopted the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto annexed, and recommend the passage of the bill.

That Elizabeth Luce is the widow of John W. Luce, deceased, late a private of Company E, First Ohio Light Artillery, who died at Grand Junction, Iowa, November 17, 1883. Cause of death as reported by Dr. J. D. Kirby, the attending physician, "gastritis, chronic; relapse, complications; general debility, kidney difficulty."

At the time of his death said John W. Luce had on file an undetermined application for pension for an alleged stricture of the urethra, caused by being thrown upon the pommel of his saddle about August 16, 1863, while in the service. The widow continued to prosecute the claim, which was finally rejected January 7, 1885, on the ground that "alleged stricture of the urethra was not due to soldier's military service." The papers in this case from the Pension Office, which are very voluminous, have been very carefully examined, and the only ground for the conclusion arrived at by the Pension Office is to be found in the following statement made by the surgeon in soldier's certificate of discharge, namely:

"Organic stricture of the urethra, which, from his statement, existed at the time of enrollment."

Luce explains in a letter that he made this statement at the time to prevent his transfer to the invalid corps. They had administered chloroform, and he was still upon the operating table. That he was free from the disability before and at time of his enlistment is proven by many affidavits of neighbors and friends, among which James Brown, of Berea, Ohio, testifies that he became acquainted with claimant in 1857, who then worked for his brother, John Brown, manufacturing grindstones, and he worked with him nearly all the time for three years prior to his enlistment, and knew him to be a sound, able-bodied man, commanding the best wages for his labor.

Dr. A. S. Allen, of Berea, Ohio, testifies that he attended claimant's family, and met him often while he was engaged in work about the quarries prior to his enlistment, and he has no knowledge of his ever being sick or in any way disabled during that time; he believes he should have known if he had been unsound. After his discharge, in 1864, he (Luce) applied to him for aid for some urinary trouble, he thinks inability to pass urine, and he was troubled thereby until he moved away in 1866.

Andrew Berwick, lieutenant of Company E, First Ohio Light Artillery, testifies that when claimant entered the service he was a sound, healthy man, and so continued until August 15, 1863, when at Battle Creek, Tenn., he was injured in his urinary organs by the ring on the pommel of his saddle while he was driving one of the teams attached to a gun of his battery. This is further proven by affidavits of comrades; and the continuance of disability to date of death is proven by abundant and credible testimony.

Dr. G. Low testified April 22, 1867, that he examined claimant and found him suffering from enlarged prostate gland and stricture, irremediable, except through surgical operation, which would endanger his life, and would not be advisable except as a last resort.

While the diagnosis of death-cause by the physician who attended him in his last illness does not name stricture of urethra as the cause of death, yet it is a reasonable presumption that it contributed largely to produce the general debility, kidney, and other troubles which did culminate in death.

Your committee are of the opinion that the soldier's death is clearly traceable to the disability received in the service, and believe his widow should be pensioned; therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM ANTES.

The bill (H. R. 5329) granting a pension to William Antes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William Antes, late of Company C, First Regiment United States Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLOTTE ALGIER.

The bill (H. R. 4229) granting a pension to Charlotte Algier, widow of Samuel Algier, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Charlotte Algier, widow of Samuel Algier, late a private in Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARY HASTINGS.

The bill (H. R. 3198) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Hastings was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Mary Hastings, widow of Robert Hastings, late a private in Mike Galbreath's company of scouts and guides, who was wounded in 1863, and died from the wound in 1866.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN H. SNYDER.

The bill (H. R. 2803) granting a pension to John H. Snyder was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John H. Snyder, late a private in Company C, One hundred and sixth New York Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE W. DEVEREUX.

The bill (H. R. 1100) granting a pension to Jane W. Devereux was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Jane W. Devereux, mother of George W. Devereux, late of the Tenth Massachusetts Battery, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS M. MOORE.

The bill (H. R. 6389) granting a pension to Francis M. Moore was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Francis M. Moore, late a private in Company F, Nineteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN LITTLE.

The bill (H. R. 4539) granting a pension to Ann Little was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ann Little, widow of John Little, late a private in Company A, Eleventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 6, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4539) granting a pension to Ann Little, have examined the same, and report:

The facts in this case have been fully stated in the accompanying report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions (House Report No. 774), which we adopt, and recommend the bill do pass.

Ann Little is the widow of John Little, who was a private in Company A, Eleventh Regiment Massachusetts Infantry, who was pensioned by certificate No. 12210 for gunshot wound received in action. His death occurred March 16, 1874—cause given, softening of brain, epilepsy. She filed a claim for widow's pension July 13, 1874, which was rejected January 9, 1877, "on the ground that disease of which soldier died was not the result of his military service."

The evidence shows that he entered the service a sound and healthy man, that he received a severe wound of thigh at the battle of Fair Oaks, Va., for which he was discharged and pensioned.

George Alexander and Anna Alexander, neighbors, testify that they knew soldier for twelve years or more during his lifetime; knew him when he returned from the Army, and were familiar with his physical condition from his arrival home to the date of his death; knew he was disabled by disease contracted in the service; that he never was a well man from the time of his discharge up to the time of his death. He was unable to perform any manual labor either for the support of himself or of his wife and family. His wife was the main support of the family, excepting what was received from his pension; that their means of knowledge was derived from an intimate acquaintance as neighbors and while occupying the same house with the Littles.

Moses W. Wild, M. D., testifies he is a member of Massachusetts Medical Society and the Suffolk District Society for thirty years; that John Little died from the effect of injuries received in the war; soldier had been known by him for thirteen years, he in this time making him friendly visits, looking after his family, seeing that they and he did not suffer. That soldier went to the war a strong, healthy man, where he received a severe gunshot wound of right thigh about 1 inch from the middle of his groin, near the femoral artery and nerve, the ball passing directly through the thigh. From this time up to the day of his death his right leg caused him much trouble, making it impossible to do hard work, such as a laboring man is required to do to support a family. The last three years of his life he suffered from paralysis of his right side, and the last year softening of the brain made its appearance; from time to time he would fall down insensible, and in one of these fits he died before a doctor could be called in.

Your committee are of opinion from the evidence that the gunshot wound of the right groin was the cause of the paralysis of right side which eventually developed into and culminated in softening of the brain and final insensible fits which ended in death of soldier. The widow is old and poor, has had a hard struggle to keep her family together, is now nearly blind, and has at best but a few more years to live. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSINA HEINEMAN.

The bill (H. R. 1651) for the relief of Rosina Heineman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Rosina Heineman, dependent mother of William Heineman, formerly a member of Company E, Second Regiment New York State Mounted Rifle Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISAAC CARLETON.

The bill (H. R. 1889) granting a pension to Isaac Carleton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Isaac Carleton, late of Company E, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio National Guards.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 6, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1889) granting a pension to Isaac Carleton, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have carefully examined all the facts in this case, and concur in the findings of the report of the House committee, made during the present session (House Report No. 1098), and report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

The claimant enlisted in Company E, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio National Guards, May 2, 1863, and was discharged September 3, 1863. Claimant, while a member of Company E, Fifteenth Ohio National Guards, and while in line of duty near Pomeroy, Ohio, in July, 1863, while pursuing General Morgan, was wounded by a buckshot under the left shoulder, and was taken prisoner, and from said wound claimant has never recovered. The proof shows prior to his entry into the service he was a man of good, sound physical health, being, when enlisted, a farmer.

Claimant filed his application for pension December 20, 1879, and the same was rejected June 15, 1883, because claimant was not in the United States service when said wound was received, but in the State militia, and not entitled to pension unless claim had been prosecuted to completion prior to July 4, 1874.

W. H. Mills testifies that he was a private in Company E, Fifteenth Ohio National Guards, and about the 18th of July, 1863, near Pomeroy, Ohio, the claimant, while pursuing General Morgan's command, was wounded by a buckshot under the left shoulder, he being a prisoner at the time. Affiant says he was also a prisoner in the hands of Morgan's men.

James H. Hyseel, examining surgeon, certifies that he has carefully examined Isaac Carleton, claimant, as late as March 1, 1882, for alleged disability resulting from a buckshot wound under left shoulder, and in his opinion claimant was one-half incapacitated for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor from causes above stated.

This claimant has received a gunshot wound of the chest. Missile entered on lateral aspect of the chest, about 3 inches below lower margin of the scapula, passing forward through the chest, and having its exit about 1 inch to the left and a little above left nipple, fracturing the fourth rib in its passage. There is an exostosis at point of fracture of rib about one-half as large as an English walnut. There is dullness on percussion over lateral and superior portions of left lung. The evidence clearly shows that claimant was in the line of duty, and did well and faithfully discharge his duty as a soldier for his country and his country's flag, as much so as if he had been regularly mustered into the United States service, and in so doing he incurred a disability for life.

While the general pension laws debar the Pension Office from favorable consideration of the claim, yet your committee are fully of the opinion that Congress should grant relief to the claimant, who is now disabled from his wounds, as above stated.

As Congress has invariably afforded relief in cases of this character, your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW T. M'REYNOLDS.

The bill (S. 2217) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The preamble recites that Andrew T. McReynolds served as captain of Company K, Third Dragoons,

United States Army, in Mexico, during the war with that republic, and while acting in squadron with Captain (the late General) Phil. Kearny, the usual escort to the general-in-chief, was, on the 20th of August, 1847, disabled by a grapeshot wound, in a charge at the gates of Mexico, by reason whereof he was placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $25 per month, which pension he continued to receive until the 15th of June, 1861, when he was mustered into the volunteer service as colonel of the First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry (the first volunteer cavalry regiment organized for the late civil war), and served as such until the 22d of August, 1864, when he received an honorable discharge, during all of which time his pension was withheld from him, amounting in all to $950, no part of which sum has since been received by him.

The bill directs the Commissioner of Pensions to pay to McReynolds $950, taking his receipt therefor in full discharge of the claim.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR May 6, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2217) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds, have examined the same, and report:

The principal facts upon which the present claim are based are stated briefly in the preamble of the bill, as follows:

"Andrew T. McReynolds served as captain of Company K, Third Dragoons, United States Army, in Mexico, during the war with that republic, and while acting in squadron with Capt. (the late General) Phil. Kearny, the usual escort to the general-in-chief, was, on the 20th day of August, A. D. 1847, disabled by a grapeshot wound, in a charge at the gates of Mexico, by reason whereof he was placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $25 per month, which pension he continued to receive until the 15th day of June, A. D. 1861, when he was mustered into the volunteer service as colonel of the First New York (Lincoln) Cavalry (the first volunteer cavalry regiment organized for the late civil war), and served as such until the 22d of August, A. D. 1864, when he received an honorable discharge, during all of which time his said pension was withheld from him, amounting in all to the sum of $950, no part of which sum has since been received by him.

The fact appears from the evidence that notwithstanding his disability, for for which he was pensioned, this brave soldier nevertheless volunteered in the next great war in which his country became involved, and rendered good and efficient service, although disabled. This would appear to be an additional reason why during the time he was again in the service he should have drawn his pension, instead of being deprived of it during such active service.

Your committee, therefore, report back the bill and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. That seems to be a very peculiar case. I do not think it properly belonged to the Committee on Pensions. It is purely and essentially a claim, and I do not see how that committee could justly and properly take jurisdiction of it.

If this officer or soldier is entitled to be paid the amount of his pension withheld while he was in the service, every other person so situated ought to be entitled to it. If the Committee on Pensions had proper jurisdiction of this case it seems to me they should have reported general legislation; and if they considered it an individual claim, it ought to have gone to the Committee on Claims.

I think the Committee on Claims is the proper committee for the consideration of cases of this kind, and I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will consent to have the bill referred to the Committee on Claims. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR. Colonel McReynolds was the associate and companion of General Kearny in some of the most gallant actions of the Mexican war.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no question about that.

Mr. BLAIR. He was always considered as quite the equal of General Kearny in military capacity, in gallantry, and in service, and their names were associated in the Mexican war. As the evidence shows, he was disabled by a grapeshot wound in that war, suffered severely, and drew a pension down to the war of 1861, but then, notwithstanding his disability, on account of his great military qualities, upon volunteering he was accepted in the service, and rendered most valuable and efficient service with almost as distinguished honor as in the Mexican war itself. During this period of time, notwithstanding he entered the service under disability, and for that reason his service would seem to merit increased consideration of a pecuniary character, his pension was suspended. He received his pay as an Army officer. He discharged his duty as efficiently as any Army officer whatever, and he did it under the disability contracted in the Mexican war.

It seemed to the committee that it was certainly proper that he should have received compensation for the disability which he was suffering during the time he was discharging these duties. I think the Senator himself will admit that there can be no good reason why the bill should not be passed and why this man should not receive the amount of pension withheld during the time he was in service in the last war.

If that be just, upon a mere question of a technical nature as to what committee should consider the question, it would seem to be a little hard upon him now at this late period of the session, no question of this kind ever having occurred to any one certainly on the committee, to send his case to another committee and thus delay the remedy to which he is entitled.

As the Senator sees, this is a Senate bill. It has not been considered by the other House as yet, and if it goes to the Committee on Claims there will be just so much more delay. I never heard of another case like this, and I do not believe there is the slightest danger of embarrassment to the service from passing this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. This claimant has waited twenty-two years. He was discharged from the volunteer army in 1864. That was twenty-two years ago, and I do not think that much harm could be done by the delay which would be caused by a reference to the Committee on Claims.

There is force in what the Senator says, but notwithstanding we have different committees for the purpose of considering claims and cases and bills of different characters and shades and affecting different classes.

The Senator says that he does not know of any other similar case; I could not say that there was any other case, but——

Mr. BLAIR. Has the Senator ever considered such a case in the Committee on Claims?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not remember considering any such case, but the Committee on Claims might have this case and they would make an investigation of it, and would probably ascertain whether there were any other claims of this class or not. There must have been, in the very nature of things, a number of citizens who had been in the service of the United States, either as citizens or soldiers, prior to 1861 and who after that time enlisted in the Union Army. It must have been so. They all come in the same category; they all come under the same law. The law, as I understand it, at that time prohibited any one who was entitled to a pension and held an appointment under the Government from receiving both the pension and the salary of the office. The salary of the office was received in full for the services while they were rendered.

I think it would be far better that the bill should go to the Committee on Claims. Some question might arise that we could not see until that committee would have an opportunity of investigating it.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not intend by what I said by any means to concede that this was a bill which should go to the Committee on Claims in any event. It relates purely and solely to the matter of pensions, a pension which this man had been receiving and which for the time being was suspended. It seems to me there is no more reason why a bill like this should go to that committee than a bill for the restoration of one who has been dropped from the rolls to the rolls again. It all relates to a matter of suspended pensions.

The question is whether, under the pension laws or under those general considerations which affect the granting of pensions, gallantry of service, and the desert of the applicant, this pension should be restored. It is a pension matter pure and simple, and went properly, I think, to the Committee on Pensions orginally.

In regard to this man there is a great deal of evidence with which the report might have been encumbered—record evidence of his very distinguished service. I am not aware, nor is the Senator, for he states no instance, of a single other case where a man suffering from disability entered the service during the late war. There may have been other cases, but they must have been exceedingly rare or they would have come to our attention. I think the Senator's assumption that there may have been many cases of this kind is without probable proof.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is the case of General Shields, a somewhat notorious case, drawing a pension, and who was also in the Union Army after drawing it.

Mr. BLAIR. This man's service was as deserving as that of General Shields.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 473) granting a pension to William Boone;
A bill (H. R. 556) granting a pension to Bridget Sherlock;
A bill (H. R. 599) granting a pension to Mrs. Honorah Maloney;
A bill (H. R. 601) granting a pension to Alonzo V. Richards;
A bill (H. R. 607) granting a pension to Janet E. B. Smith;
A bill (H. R. 1106) granting a pension to Mary B. Carll;
A bill (H. R. 1252) granting a pension to Eugenia A. Smalley;
A bill (H. R. 2070) granting a pension to William Paugh;
A bill (H. R. 3287) for the relief of Silas Corzatt;
A bill (H. R. 3321) for the relief of Samuel C. Fisher;
A bill (H. R. 3478) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Maynard;

A bill (H. R. 6661) to provide for closing up the business and paying the expenses of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and for other purposes.

MRS. ELLEN M. BOGGS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs, which has been returned from the House of Representatives at the request of the Senate for correction. The Chair asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to have the mistake corrected in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the mistake?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The mistake is in one letter in the bill in the name "Brenton." The correction is to strike out "Bienton" and insert "Brenton;" so as to read "widow of William Brenton Boggs." By unanimous consent the correction will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a Senate bill recalled from the House for the purpose of making a correction. The bill stands passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So I understand.

SAMUEL HANSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 356) granting a pension to Samuel Hanson, returned from the House of Representatives at the request of the Senate. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed—another bill, a House bill, having been passed in place of it. If there be no objection, the Senate bill will be postponed indefinitely. The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy thoughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a suggestion, which I make at the instance of the President of the Senate. An order was made that the bill should be read section by section for amendments, every member of the Senate however to have the right to go back at any time to a passed section; but the President of the Senate suggests that it would be probably much more convenient to the Senate to have the bill read straight through and then have the amendments moved in the ordinary way. Therefore I ask leave to have the former order rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order will be rescinded and the bill will be read through. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that it will not be in order to offer amendments as the reading proceeds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be first read through.

Mr. HOAR. And then amendments may be offered.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill at section 13 and read to the end of section 30.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the reading now going on for the purpose of amendments to the various sections as they are read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is understood that the bill will first be read through, and it will then be open for amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The President of the Senate desired that course to be pursued.

Mr. GEORGE. I wanted to know what the order was. The bill is to be read through first before any amendments are offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to make two merely formal amendments.

I move to add as section 109 these words:

SEC. 109. This act shall be known as the bankruptcy act of 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 106 there is a blank left in the print in lines 4 and 5. I wish to amend so as to insert after the word "on," in line 4, the words "the 1st day of April," and after "eighteen hundred and eighty" to insert "seven," as the time when the act shall go into full operation. The section will then read:

SEC. 106. That this act shall take effect as to the appointment of commissioners and supervisors and the promulgation of rules upon its passage, and shall go into full operation on the 1st day of April, 1887, and no officer shall be deemed to have earned any salary excepting from and after said last-mentioned day.

The amendment was agreed to.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. With the consent of the Senator from Massachusetts in charge of this bill I ask that the bill be laid aside temporarily so that the Senate may resume the consideration of Senate bill 1812, Calendar number 313.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the bill now?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Simply to tax railroad-grant lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending, proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 12 of section 1, after the word "provide" and before the colon, the amendment is to insert the words:

And to all liens of the United States, all mortgages of the United States, and all rights of the United States in respect to such lands.

So as to read:

That any such land sold for taxes shall be taken by the purchaser subject to the lien for costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying, to be paid in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may by rule provide, and to all liens of the United States, all mortgages of the United States, and all rights of the United States in respect of such lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand that the bill relating to the taxation of land-grant railroads has been called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the bill under consideration.

Mr. BLAIR. It is a bill that I opposed the other day, and I gave my reasons for opposition to it. I do not care to consume the time of the Senate any further, but I should like the Senator from Nebraska to accept an amendment which I suggested the other day. I have not the papers here now, as the bill has come up unexpectedly. I ask the Senator to accept the amendment offered by me the other day providing that upon any sale of these lands for non-payment of taxes the United States may become a purchaser, and that in case of the purchase by the United States, on the United States paying the tax the lands shall revert to the public domain, to be disposed of under the laws appertaining thereto. I apprehend—though my apprehensions may be unfounded—that otherwise these lands will in vast quantities fall into the hands of unscrupulous speculators. That fear, in my belief, is largely the source of the repulsion to the bill.

By virtue of this amendment the country itself may purchase these lands upon the payment of the taxes, and having purchased them they shall revert to the common mass of public lands, to be disposed of under the homestead and other laws that now prevail to prevent their aggregation in immense individual ownership, which I look upon as one of the crying evils already in our country, and which ought to be checked even in the older and longer-settled portions of the Union, and certainly in the Territories and in States which are comparatively of recent establishment something should be done to prevent the accumulation of these lands in the hands of individuals.

In my own State I know that there is not such a great deal of land. Nevertheless the acquisition by tax titles of the unoccupied lands of the States has been a very serious evil. In these Territories where so much of this land is available for cultivation it seems to me that the bill itself under the circumstances is injudicious; but at all events, unless we do guard the provisions of the bill in such a way that the land shall come from the railroads to the general mass or fund of public lands in the possession of the United States, we shall increase an evil already almost too grievous to be borne.

I hope the Senator will accept my amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator will have his amendment reduced to writing.

Mr. BLAIR. I have not the papers here.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think there will be no objection to the Senator proposing his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That at any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser——

Mr. HARRISON. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. BLAIR. I mean at the same price that is offered by others the United States shall take the land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to add the following:

Provided, That at any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser, and in such case the lands sold shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as now provided by the laws relating thereto.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator accept the amendment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. There was another amendment I suggested, to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. —. That no natural person or persons or partnership shall hereafter acquire, hold, or own, either by virtue of the laws relating to the disposition of the public lands, or by grant, assignment, purchase, descent, or by any other method by which title to land may be acquired, more than 320 acres of agricultural lands nor more than 640 acres of any description of lands which shall belong to the public domain, on or after the passage of this act; and hereafter all patents and evidences of title to any portion of the public domain to which this act shall apply shall recite the provisions hereof.

SEC. —. That all lands acquired, held, or owned in violation of the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to enforce every such forfeiture by due process of law.

That amendment perhaps would not be as necessary as the other, because it would become, as I conceive, the duty of the United States to purchase these lands in every instance and return them to the public domain; and if that be so, and in consequence these lands be disposed of under the homestead and pre-emption act—probably under the homestead act, as the pre-emption act is likely to be repealed, a bill being pending in the Senate at the present time for that purpose—then of course the land will go for homesteads, and I do not think it would be worth while to fix a limitation to govern for all time on these particular lands unless there be a general provision applying to all public lands hereafter disposed of, which I believe would be a good thing to do, so that the public lands forever hereafter should be disposed of in small quantities, and that they should be forever hereafter held in small quantities, no larger than the original ones, in 160 acres, or some subdivision thereof. Of course I refer to agricultural lands.

There are considerations I am aware that attach to some of these lands in the West by reason of their lack of value until irrigation is provided on a large scale, that may make it proper to consider a proposition of this kind somewhat further; but in some way, I think, irrigation having been provided at the general public charge, the amount of land that is occupied by any one individual, the substantial control and income of which is made available by any one individual, should be limited to a small quantity. I had some data——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator wants time to get his amendments in shape——

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will excuse me a moment I have a list of the amendments; but my documents and my facts, my references and my magnificent argument, that the Senator from Nebraska has had notice of, are not at hand, because the bill has come up unexpectedly.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator will allow me to offer a slight amendment, and he can resume his afterward. I do not care to do it unless it is convenient to the Senator.

Mr. BLAIR. I would ask the Senator from Nebraska—for I wish to offer no captious opposition to his bill—is not the evil which he aims at located in the States of Kansas and Nebraska almost wholly?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Secretary will send for a petition presented by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] a few days ago, which was ordered to lie on the table, as this bill was under consideration, it will be seen where the evil prevails.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator object to the amendment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Secretary please send for that petition? The Senator from New Hampshire has asked whether this does not apply exclusively to the States of Kansas and Nebraska. I desire to say to the Senator that that is not so. There are other States, and nearly every Territory is affected by this proposition.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to press the amendment if the Senator assures me that the evil is in those other localities. Therefore I shall not offer it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed that the Senator desired to inquire what the evils were.

Mr. BLAIR. I am aware that they exist beyond those States.

Mr. VAN WYCK. All the Territories, I think every one, and at least half a dozen States have suffered to a very great extent by reason of these corporations being allowed to shirk their honest responsibility of taxation upon real estate over which their title is absolute, which for years they have mortgaged and which for years they have held in the market and partly disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. I am aware that there is a reply made to that. I do not know which position is correct—that of the Senator or those who oppose it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator asks the question, I hope he will be patient enough to hear the full answer——

Mr. BLAIR. I have got the full answer. If there is more, I am willing to listen. Does the Senator wish to say anything more on that point? I am always edified by his elucidations.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir; I do not understand the Senator's point.

Mr. BLAIR. I am always edified by the Senator's elucidation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I trust so. I am trying to do that and instruct as far as I am able to do so.

Mr. BLAIR. The gentleman has great capacity in that respect.

Mr. President, I move one other amendment to be added to the last:

And provided further, That the valuation of said lands upon which the same shall be subjected to taxation shall be subject to revision by the Secretary of the Interior.

I do not care to trouble the Senate with any further amendments if this is adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TELLER. There can be no reason in the world that I can imagine why it should be adopted. A citizen of New York who owns land in the Territory of Dakota is subject when it comes to a question of taxation to the authorities of Dakota. If anybody can give me any reason why a railroad company should have any further or greater rights than the citizens of the States I should be glad to hear it.

Mr. BLAIR. These lands are mainly in the Territories.

Mr. TELLER. I know they are largely in the Territories. It can not be supposed by anybody that there could be any interference by the Secretary of the Interior with assessments in a State. But why not apply to a railroad company the same rule you apply to a citizen? This is the railroad company's land. It has got all that it is necessary to get to enable it to receive the value of its land. It sells the land. For thousands and tens of thousands of acres the companies have received the benefit of the title given them by the United States, and yet they decline to pay the few cents an acre that are required to be paid to complete and perfect the title; that is, they decline to pay for the surveys for the express purpose of keeping them out of the tax-lists of the Territories.

The man who goes upon the alternate section of Government land and makes his title pays taxes upon the soil. The man who buys of the railroad company by the side of him holds it for an indefinite length of time and does not pay any tax at all. It is giving to the railroad companies a value to their land that they are not entitled to have by exempting it from taxation or by allowing a different rule in this case from what is applied to the citizen who owns land by the side of it, whether he happens to be a non-resident or a resident.

Why should the Secretary of the Interior interfere any more to protect a great, strong railroad corporation that is being unjustly and unduly assessed by a Territory than he should to protect the hardy settler who is on the public land? It does not appear to me that we ought to put in a provision of this kind in the bill. There is not any reason to suppose that the Territories will unduly tax these lands. The railroad companies have got their title to many acres of them. They are paying taxes on all which they have a patent for, and nobody that I have heard of complains of an undue assessment either by State or by Territory upon these railroad companies. Let the railroad companies alone to take care of themselves. They are as able to battle with the authorities of the Territories as the settler is; and if the Secretary of the Interior is not to interfere to protect the man who has a lowly cabin on 160 acres, I do not think he ought to interfere to protect a great big corporation that has millions of acres of the public lands that for years it has withheld from the tax-lists, in many instances having derived the full benefit of the grant by sale and payment—by sale to the settler and payment from the settler.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator's remarks apply to but a very small portion of the lands that are to be affected by the passage of this bill, and, as I understood and still believe, the evil that is sought to be remedied is confined almost wholly to the States of Nebraska and Kansas. It may exist to a very slight degree in the State of Colorado. But the scope and purpose of this bill, or one thing that as I understand can be done by it and almost certainly will be done, will be the forced sale of the vast mass of the as yet unimproved land grants which are in the possession in law of the railroads to be sure, but which are nevertheless now and likely to be in many instances for years to come in precisely the same condition as the adjoining public land, unimproved and unimprovable, but yet the basis of the credit upon which these railroads were built, and a source of no income, and for years hence not likely to be the source of any income whatever.

So the imposition upon these lands (many of which will not sell for 25 cents an acre to-day) of a very slight tax to be paid year after year, with no income existing out of which to pay the tax, must result in practically the forfeiture of these lands and vesting the title in somebody else; and all through Montana, and Dakota, and Washington Territories, and in New Mexico and Arizona, and in the Territory of Utah, and in some of the Pacific States, perhaps in every one of them, these lands are likely to be, to use a homely expression, gobbled up by speculators and held indefinitely for higher prices in the future. They will obtain them for a song, as we know that the great Pacific railroads, every one of them, or nearly every one of them, is embarrassed by debt, finding it impossible to pay any income whatever upon the cost that built them originally, hardly able to meet their fixed charges on their bonds and mortgages, and probably some of them will ultimately fall into the hands of the United States, unless the United States may consider it cheaper to forfeit its claim rather than be embarrassed with the property.

Under these circumstances it is not exactly the thing, as it strikes me, to pass a law which gives an unlimited power of taxation in these comparatively unpopulated communities when a county is organized having all the powers of taxation which belong to an older and well-ordered community—it is hardly the thing to give such bodies the power to fix high valuations on these lands, and so a resulting tax that is likely to result in forcing the title from the companies whose basis of credit these same lands now are, and into somebody else.

As I said before, the adoption of the amendment which I first moved will, in my own mind, remove the great part of this apprehended evil, because I should consider it the duty of the Government officers to reach all these lands by the payment of the taxes and thus to return them to the public domain. A part of the evil will thus be obviated, but if that be done it seems to me—and it seems to me in any event—in all these communities which are as yet very sparsely populated and where the evil of which I speak is very likely to exist there should be some provision made to guard against an excessive valuation, so that if it be thought desirable for the corporations to retain their land they can do so.

I am not very particular about this amendment. It struck me as a good amendment and I think it can do no harm to the bill and is likely to do it much benefit. I simply ask the sense of Senators, and leave the matter.

Mr. TELLER. When the honorable Senator says that this bill is only to affect Kansas and Nebraska, to be mild he displays a great lack of acquaintance with the facts. I venture to assert that it affects more land to-day in the State of Colorado than it does in Kansas, or in Nebraska either, as the Senator from Nebraska suggests. It affects lands in Kansas, in Colorado, in Nebraska, in Montana, in Washington, in Oregon, in California, in Nevada, in Wyoming, in New Mexico, and in Arizona.

Mr. BLAIR. Then the Senator understands that it covers every acre of land grants which have been made over by the United States to various corporations.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that it covers all the land grants that the companies are entitled to and have acquired by virtue of a compliance with the statutes of the United States with respect thereto; and I do not know any rule of ethics or law or morals that justifies a railroad company in escape from taxation and puts it upon the settler. I do not care if it is in failing circumstances; I do not care if it is a brankrupt railroad; that has nothing to do with it.

The first duty of every citizen is to pay taxes to the State in which he lives. That duty is exacted of the poorest man in the community who has a cow or an ox or a piece of land. Why it should not be exacted of a railroad company I am yet to learn.

These railroad companies have for years, as I say, declined to discharge an express duty imposed upon them by law as a condition to taking these lands; and the Supreme Court says that because they have so declined, the State and the Territory shall not have the benefit of taxing the lands. They will not build school-houses with their taxes; they will not carry on municipal affairs of the State or Territory because they decline to pay; and the Senator says that in these unsettled communities things are not as determinate and as settled as in some other sections and they are liable to be imposed upon. It is not true.

It is not true of the people who have settled these Western Territories that they have taken any advantage of the non-resident who owns land in their midst. Those States as they came into the Union made a contract not to do that, but if they had not made such a contract it would not have been done. If anybody can tell me why they should not bear their part of the burden I should like to have him do it.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. TELLER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator believe that there would have been one dollar of the capital that has gone into the construction of these roads and has made the communities of which he speaks possible, invested on the faith of these railroad grants, if it had been the understanding or the belief that even in the remotest future, until those incumbrances were paid, one dollar would be collected from the lands.

Mr. TELLER. In the first place these railroad companies are not entitled to the credit of having settled up a great portion of the West. We got out there hundreds and in some cases thousands of miles beyond railroads and established flourishing communities. I have seen in the mountain regions 600 miles from a railroad a community that would do credit to New England. I have secn 400 miles beyond that a settlement vigorous, enterprising, intelligent, full of everything that went to make a country desirable. The railroads are not entitled to the credit of having settled this country. The people in many instances went there and established themselves before the railroads came. We had a flourishing community in Colorado when there was not a railroad within 600 miles of us.

We carted everything across the plains and we maintained a government there that would be a credit to any people in the world. When these railroad companies came there they brought us some advantages, and they took from us corresponding and compensatory advantages to them. We maintained and we supported them; we have enabled them to pay dividends, and we have kept them running. We have been willing and glad to do it. We have borne our part of the burden of building up a State, and we insist that they shall do their part, and that they shall not be permitted under this system to say to one man "live on that section of land without paying taxes," while his neighbor who lives on the adjoining section pays taxes.

The Senator asks, do you believe anybody could have built the roads——

Mr. BLAIR. No, that people would have invested their money.

Mr. TELLER. Would anybody have invested money and built the roads, asks the Senator, if it was understood that these lands were to be taxed. Everybody understood that they were to be taxed. Everybody understood that these lands were to be taxed. Ownership means taxation. Does the Senator pretend to say that when these grants were made it was contemplated by any living person that they were to escape taxation? Not at all. It was understood that they should be taxed and it was provided that they should pay for the surveys, and it was never anticipated by anybody that they would make a refusal to pay the excuse for escaping taxation.

When the Senator says that these people would not have put their money in if they had supposed they were to pay taxes, let me ask did they not know that they were to pay taxes on the railroad? Did they not know that they were to pay taxes on their locomotives? Why then not pay taxes on their lands? I know some of the companies have paid the costs of survey, and some of the companies have taken their titles in accordance with the law; but others have not so done. It is to reach the cases where they studiously avoid paying their taxes that this bill is introduced.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. Ought there to be any difference made in the legislation in regard to these companies who have paid for surveying the lands and those companies that have not?

Mr. TELLER. If they have paid the money or made a tender they are taxable now. In other words, the railroad companies that have been honest, bona fide observers of the law are now taxed. The railroad companies that have escaped the law and have declined to discharge an obligation imposed on them by the statute are the ones who are escaping.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator does not understand me. This bill is designed mainly to relieve the governments in the Territories from the effect of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. A recent decision. Unsurveyed lands can not be taxed and are not taxed in any of the communities.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask the Senator at what particular point it is proper to commence taxation of the lands by the States and Territories, and at what point the transfer of lands from the Government takes effect?

Mr. TELLER. I do not think I quite understand the question.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. A grant is made in præsenti, for instance, to a railroad company. By the failure of the company to perform a condition subsequent the grant is forfeited, or if the company fulfills the condition the grant becomes effective. Now, at what time properly should these lands be taxed by the States and Territories; from the date of the grant, or from the date of the compliance with the condition, or from the date of the issuance of the patent? Is there any particular point where it would be proper to commence taxation, or more proper than it would at any other particular point?

Mr. TELLER. If the railroad company takes a patent that ends the subject and there is no necessity for legislation.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand that.

Mr. TELLER. I will come to your question. If they have paid for the surveys, then there is no question; that is the end of that point. Now, when are they to pay taxes? They will not be taxed until after this bill passes. They will not be taxed except in cases where the company has not become the owner in the strict sense of the term. Now the companies are not the owners because they have not paid the paltry sum of 2 or 3 cents an acre for the cost of survey.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator will understand that I am not opposing the taxation of the land. I am in favor of some proper bill for that purpose. I am only making certain suggestions that occurred to me as proper.

Mr. TELLER. This bill in substance provides that where they have earned the land and nothing remains for them to do but to pay this sum that they are bound to pay, the land shall be taxable, and that it may be taxable notwithstanding they decline to pay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask whether he is quite sure that the first clauses of this bill will operate precisely in the way that he has just now so properly stated?

Mr. TELLER. I think they will.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And when a railroad has earned the land and is entitled to it so that it can dispose of it, and fails to do what is necessary in the payment of the cost of taking out its patent it should be taxed, to which I entirely agree. I ask whether the bill does not go further in cases put as I shall state. I am told that in one instance—I do not know whether it is true, but I believe it to be true—one land-grant railroad company in this country has always paid the costs, paid its money in advance for the costs, wanted to get its land and could not get its patent for the reason that the Department says it is so far behind; that years and years have gone by in a great number of cases and the company can not get its patent and it will not undertake to put a settler on until it can sell him the land fair and square.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose, and it is not intended by this bill and it is not the theory of the people who demand this, that they shall wait for a patent. Whenever it has been put in the power of a railroad company by discharging the obligation imposed upon it by law, which is to pay for the survey—and it is provided that this money that they pay in is to be used for making the surveys—to get title, that land becomes taxable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But on what principle if the company can not get a title?

Mr. TELLER. It can get the land. The law presumes the companies can get the land and they can sell it from that hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But have they a title?

Mr. TELLER. They have a title; certainly they have a title. The Supreme Court has declared again and again that it is a grant in præsenti. They are the owners, and if there is an exception to it I do not know of the railroad. There may be an exception; I am told there is one in California; but it is the only exception, I will venture to say, where they do not treat that land as absolutely theirs as if they had the patent. I can point to the honorable Senator land worth $100 an acre that has not paid a cent of taxes, and it has been worth that for years. I can show the Senator land that is very valuable, owned by a railroad company which they could take their patent for to-morrow, but they do not choose to take it. Why? Because they wish to reserve it for higher prices for speculation.

There is not the slightest danger under this bill that any railroad company will be improperly interfered with. There seems to me to be on the floor of the Senate an undue anxiety to take care of the railroad companies just now. Let them alone to take care of themselves. There is not a railroad company in this country, however bankrupt it may be, that can not bring to its aid the best legal talent in America. I have noticed that they always have money enough to get the best lawyers in the land for any purpose; and if there is any attempt to unduly and improperly and illegally tax them they will find it out and the courts will give them proper redress. It is a question that concerns a great many communities. It may seem to some Senators who have been brought up in communities where they found everything made to their hand, it may seem to Senators who have lived where the country has been settled for a hundred years, that it is a matter of very little concern who pays the tax. They ought to remember that the people who go out and settle in the West are poor people, and when they are called upon to build school-houses and court-houses and maintain order and society they are entitled to call for assistance upon everybody who has got an acre of land that can be made available; and if the settler pays upon his little quarter-section and his cabin and his few cattle, I do not see any reason why the great railroad companies should not pay, and I do not think you need call upon the Secretary of the Interior to protect them. They will take care of themselves.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, listening to the remarks made by the Senator from New Hampshire, I ascertained that some amendments have been adopted to the bill, and I ascertained at the desk that one offered by himself had been adopted, which is as follows:

Provided further, That at any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser, and in such case the lands sold shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as now provided by the laws relating thereto.

I should like to inquire if that amendment is now subject to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be the subject of amendment in the Senate.

Mr. DOLPH. It seems to me that there should be an amendment that if the lands are not redeemed they should be restored, so that it would not look like an attempt to restore to the public domain any lands that happen to be sold for taxes. It is well known and is the case in all the Western States that whenever any land is sold for taxes it is subject to redemption within a given time, and a deed for the property is not given by the tax-collector to the tax-sale purchaser until after the time for redemption has expired. To make this amendment in harmony with the laws of the States and Territories where these lands are situated such a modification ought to be made.

Mr. BLAIR. I would be glad if by unanimous consent these words could be considered incorporated in the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will send his proposition to the desk.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. HOAR. Before my friend proceeds I wish to ask for a unanimous consent. I desire to make a request of the Senate in regard to the order of business.

It is understood that to-morrow is set apart for the funeral eulogies of our deceased colleague, Mr. MILLER, of California. Monday is Decoration Day. I am myself very desirous of going home to Massachusetts, and the only obstacle is the necessity for taking care of the bankruptcy bill, which will come up on Friday, if the Senate shall sit on that day, which is yet undetermined. I desire, therefore, to ask unanimous consent that the bankruptcy bill, which is now the unfinished business, may be the unfinished business on Tuesday next at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. The bill being postponed until that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is proposed that the bankruptcy bill be postponed until Tuesday next at 2 o'clock, and be the unfinished business at that time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes, is before the Senate.

Mr. DOLPH. I was about to say that as a member of the Committee on Public Lands I joined in the report of this bill. I am in favor of removing, so far as the rights of the United States are concerned, every obstacle to the taxation of railroad lands whenever they ought in justice to be taxed. I recognize the fact that the present condition of affairs works a great injustice to the people of the Western States and Territories which ought to be remedied. Whenever railroad lands are improved and cultivated, whenever they have been sold and are occupied and are situated in organized counties they ought to be taxed as well as the even sections to which title has been acquired under the pre-emption and homestead laws. But I have heard so much said upon this question of taxation in regard to the conduct of the railroad companies in the matter of the payment of costs of the survey of their lands, and have heard the statement so often repeated that they refuse to accept title to their lands in order that they may avoid taxation, that knowing something of the facts in regard to at least one company, I desire to correct some statements which I think are mistakes.

I introduced a resolution in this body, which was adopted, calling for information from the Secretary of the Interior, and hold in my hand his reply, which I will refer to presently.

This question of taxation stands as follows: In 1862 a grant of land was made to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or what was afterward known as the Kansas Pacific, of alternate sections on each side of the located line of their road within given limits. The act did not provide for the payment of the cost of surveying, selecting, and patenting the lands by the company.

In 1864 an amendatory act was passed increasing the grant and conferring some valuable additional concessions upon the company, and providing that before patents for the granted lands should issue the company should pay the cost of selecting, surveying, and patenting the lands.

In the case of the Railroad Company vs. Prescott, 16 Wallace, 603, in the Supreme Court of the United States it was held that the lien of the United States for the cost of surveying the lands was such an interest in the lands that they could not be sold for taxes. That decision was followed subsequently by the Supreme Court in another case.

The case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was entirely different. There was no provision in the charter of the company requiring the payment by the company of the cost of selecting, surveying, and patenting its lands, but this provision was contained in the charter:

That the President of the United States shall cause the lands to be surveyed for 40 miles in width on both sides of the entire line of said road, after the general route shall be fixed, and as fast as may be required by the construction of said railroad.

The United States has always surveyed the public domain at its own cost. When the bill incorporating the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was pending in the Senate Senator Harlan offered an amendment, which was adopted, which required the railroad company to pay the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying its land, but the House refused to concur in the amendment, and the committee of conference argued that the Senate should recede, which was done.

In 1870, in the sundry civil appropriation bill, I think, for the year ending July 1, 1871, a provision was inserted requiring all railroad companies to pay the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying their lands before patents should issue. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company did not believe that that was a constitutional enactment. They believed it was in violation of the vested rights conferred upon them by their charter, and it was so held in the case of Cass County vs. Donlus Momson, a purchaser of lands from the railroad company, in 28 Minnesota Reports, 257. In this case the act requiring the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to pay the cost of surveying its land was held to be unconstitutional.

Thus the law stood when the Interior Department made an order that the company should pay the costs of surveying lands which had already been patented to the company. After some little controversy the Northern Pacific Railroad Company determined to pay such costs under protest, notwithstanding they believed that the act requiring them to do so was unconstitutional.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in response to the resolution referred to, accompanied by a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, answering the several matters contained in the resolution, in which it is stated that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company has selected 7,903,026.25 acres of land within its granted limits, that is the lands in place, and has selected 3,343,395.07 acres of indemnity land, making a total of 11,246,421.32 acres, and that there has been surveyed to this date within the limits of the grant only 21,732,542 acres. He further states:

The cost of surveying, amounting to $42,686.50, has been paid by said company on 1,131,224.19 acres, of which 746,589.52 acres have been patented to the company and 384,634.67 acres have not been patented.

He says:

The regulations of this office make the payment of the cost of selecting a condition precedent to the approval of the lists of selections by the local officers; hence the number of acres selected (11,246,421.32 acres) is the number of acres for which the cost of selecting and listing has been paid.

The cost of patenting is assessed at the rate of 30 cents per 100 words (15 for writing and 15 for recording), and $1 for the seal of the office, and is payable when patent is ready for delivery. The cost of patenting, amounting to $168.85, has been paid on all the patented lands, viz, 746,589.52 acres.

It appears therefore from the report of the Secretary of the Interior that the company has paid the cost of patenting all the lands that have been patented to it. He says:

No patents are ready for delivery—

Let it be understood that while there had been less than three-quarters of a million of acres patented and over 11,000,000 selected, no patents are ready for delivery.

No patents are ready for delivery, as the issue of patents to said company is, and has been for several years, suspended on account of the failure of the company to locate and construct the road within the time required by the granting act.

In other words, the Department has for several years declined to issue patents to the company because it was understood by the Department they have failed to construct the road as required in the granting act.

The Commissioner further says:

Said company has not at any time after being advised of the readiness of this office to issue patents directly refused to pay the cost of survey and patent, but it did fail to make its selections, and thereby to put this office in a position of readiness to issue patents.

Now he specifies the general charge:

It could at any time between 1873 and 1880 have received patents for its lands in Minnesota, and, as fast as surveyed, east of the Missouri River in Dakota, had it made its selections and paid the fees.

And this notwithstanding there are lists of selections aggregating ten millions of acres in the General Land Office unapproved.

He furnishes also a list of the lands which have been patented to the company, from which it will appear that no patents have been issued to the company since October 13, 1873, nearly thirteen years, except for three thousand and sixteen and a fraction acres situated in Washington Territory.

This communication also contains the correspondence, and all the correspondence, between the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Interior Department in regard to this subject.

Mr. TELLER. What document is that?

Mr. DOLPH. It is Executive Document No. 126 of this session.

On page 13 of this document is found a letter written by the general counsel of the company to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated April 3, 1882, concerning this matter of the payment of the costs for the survey of the lands. This controversy was concerning the payment of costs for lands which had already been patented by the Interior Department to the company without the costs having been paid and without their having been demanded. Mr. Gray, the company's counsel, says:

Your letter above mentioned—

That is, a letter dated on the 29th of March, this having been written April 3 of the same year—

Your letter above mentioned is the first demand or request received directly or indirectly from any one for such payment, and is the first intimation given that it would be required or expected to be made. Since receipt of your letter on Saturday last the subject has had due and respectful consideration.

That was written, as I have said, on the 3d of April, 1882. Contained in the same document, and on page 21, I find copies of resolutions passed by the company, which appear to be on file in the General Land Office. They were passed on the 16th day of November, 1882, the following November after this correspondence in April, and are as follows:

Whereas the board of directors, at its meeting on the 16th day of November, 1882, adopted resolutions, of which the following is a copy, namely:

Resolved, That the company shall proceed with due diligence to obtain patents from the United States, confirming the title of the company to the lands granted to it by Congress to aid in the construction of the road, as provided in section 4 of the charter, and the president is hereby requested and instructed to cause the necessary steps to be taken to obtain patents by reason of constructed road heretofore approved by the President of the United States, and from time to time hereafter as constructed road shall be so approved. And it is further

Resolved, That the president be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to cause to be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying said lands from time to time as such patents are issued or applied for, and that he make such payment either under or without protest, as he may deem best for the interests of the company.

In calling attention to this correspondence between the Interior Department and this company I do not do it for the purpose of reflecting upon the office. I will not say that if I had held an executive office like that held by the Secretary of the Interior I myself would not have suspended action in regard to the patenting of these lands. I am finding no fault with any Secretary of the Interior or any Commissioner of the General Land Office. I am merely stating the fact as it exists. I must infer from this letter (I must take this letter as conclusive upon this matter, which contains all this correspondence) that while one branch of the Government has been unwilling to proceed to patent these lands to the company, or to approve lists of selected lands, and to pass upon the question of the title of the company to their lands, the States and the Territories have been demanding that when the lands have been earned they should be approved and patented to the companies and be made taxable. They are right in regard to that, and they justly complain that while Congress has taken no action looking to the forfeiture of the grants, there has been inaction which has delayed the segregation of railroad lands from the public domain upon the part of another department of the Government, and that the communities in such States and Territories have suffered in consequence of such inaction.

I make these statements merely that justice may be done. I think they ought to be made public in connection with what has been said during the discussion of this bill, and especially in regard to the disposition of these companies not to obtain title to their lands so that they may become subject to taxation.

As I said, these lands ought to be taxed whenever they have been earned, and whenever the title has passed from the Government, but when is that? What is the condition of this grant? The Senator from Colorado said, and said rightly, that the courts have decided that these railroad grants are grants in præsenti. I think the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and to the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies are grants in præsenti. They transferred to the companies a present title but a defeasible title, a title upon condition, and until the condition is performed the lands are liable to be forfeited by the act of the legislative department of the Government for nonperformance of the condition and to be restored to the public domain.

But that is not all, sir. These grants are grants of land in place and of indemnity lands. The lands in place are grants of alternate sections, odd sections within certain limits on each side of the line of the located road, in the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the Territories 40 miles in width, and in the States 20 miles in width. But there are certain exceptions to this grant; for instance, there are the Indian reservations. Lands within the Indian reservations do not pass by the grant. Lands within military reservations do not pass. Mineral lands do not pass by the grant unless they are coal or iron, I believe. In the case of the Northern Pacific, and probably all the transcontinental roads, the grant embraces coal and iron lands, but other mineral lands are excepted. If lands were settled upon at the time the act took effect such lands are also reserved from the operation of the grant.

In such a case it becomes necessary to determine in some authoritative manner what are the lands which are covered by the grant? It is necessary to segregate the lands which come within the operation of the granting act from the lands which are reserved from the operation of the act? How is that to be done? That can not be done until after the lands have been surveyed. Until they have been surveyed the grant is a floating grant, it is not, fixed it can not be defined; but when the lands are surveyed the grant acquires a definite location.

The next step is to segregate from the balance of the land within the limits of the grant lands which are excepted from its operation. That is what is called selecting the lands. How is that done? An agent of the company, of the party owing the grant, goes to the local land office and makes up a list of lands which are supposed to come within the operations of the grant by legal subdivisions, whole sections, half-sections, quarter-sections, or subdivisions less in amount, as the case may be, with the aid of register and receiver and the office plats and records.

The lands which are excepted from the operation of the grant are not included or intended to be included in the lists. The register and receiver approve the selected lists. Then they are sent up to the Secretary of the Interior for his examination and approval, and until the Secretary of the Interior approves such lists, the lands are not segregated from the public domain. No man can tell what the cost of surveying the railroad lands in a section is until they have been segregated from the other lands in the township, because the company is not required to pay the cost of surveying the lands which it does not get. No computation as to the costs can be made until the lists of selections have been finally approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Still it is complained that this railroad company—and I speak concerning the Northern Pacific Company, because the only information I have concerning this matter relates to that company, and it is in this latter—it is complained that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is in default in not paying the cost of surveying its lands when out of over 11,000,000 acres which have been selected by the company there have been approved, segregated, set apart, determined by the action of the Secretary of the Interior to belong to the company only seven hundred and forty-odd thousand acres of land, while 10,000,000 acres of land have been selected and the lists of selections have been sent up and now lie in the office of the Secretary of the Interior awaiting his approval. Nobody can say as a matter of law or as a matter of fact that such lands all belong to the company, or that the company should pay for the survey of them all; and no request for such payment appears to have been made of the company.

What ought to be done? If these lands do not belong to the companies claiming them the Government should say so at once. If there is no question about the company ownership they should be approved at once. If there is a question about any section or half-section or quarter-section it should be struck off the list and left for subsequent action; but the great mass of the land should be approved at once, and the railroad companies given an opportunity to pay for the cost of survey, and the patents be issued. That would settle all this question of the taxation of the lands. If the companies do not proceed with proper diligence to select the lands, some law could be passed requiring them to select them within a certain time after they were surveyed.

I myself think that these lands can not and probably will not be taxed until the Secretary of the Interior has officially said that they belong to the railroad company. What do we propose to do? We propose to substitute for the Secretary of the Interior the local assessors, and to say that every school clerk, that every county assessor, that every city assessor who makes an assessment shall determine the question for himself whether the lands belong to the company, which involves the question as to whether they are mineral lands, and as to whether they are excepted from the operation of this act.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would it be convenient for the Senator from Oregon to pause at this moment, retaining the floor when the bill is taken up again, leaving it the unfinished business, that I may ask the Senate to pass the Chinese treaty bill?

Mr. DOLPH. I shall be very glad to yield the floor for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the pending order will be laid aside temporarily and the bill indicated by the Senator from Ohio will be taken up. The Chair hears no objection.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HARRISON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the consent of the Senator from Oregon, I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1991. I hope it will be passed without much debate. I have seen no other opportunity to bring it before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1991) supplementary to and amendatory of "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved May 6, 1882, as amended by an act to amend said act approved July 5, 1884.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the Calendar number?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is on the Calendar at the head of the special orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps I had better say to the Senate just a few words at this time.

The bill was intended to carry into execution the existing laws in regard to Chinese immigration. It does not in the judgment of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who are, I believe, unanimous on the subject, change in any material or essential particular the treaty or the laws which have heretofore been enacted; but in the administration of the law several questions of difficulty, legal questions, have arisen, which have been brought before the United States courts.

This bill is mainly the work, as I am advised by the Senator who introduced it [Mr. FAIR], of the three United States judges on the Pacific coast whose duty it has been to administer the law. The provisions are mainly declaratory, or rather defining the meaning of the provisions of existing law, not with a view to change the principle of the law.

The bill has been very carefully examined in the Committee on Foreign Relations, and, so far as I know, every provision was assented to with entire unanimity.

The first amendment of the committee, that in the first section, which probably is the most important amendment to the bill as framed by the judges, simply undertakes to define the meaning of certain phrases named in the law, because Judge Field had given a certain meaning to those phrases and a judge of a United States court, I believe, in Massachusetts, or one of the Eastern States, had given a different meaning. The purpose of the first section of the bill as amended is to define the legal meaning of phrases, as to what is included in the term "Chinese laborer," &c.

I believe I have made all the explanation I need give in regard to the bill. I hope it will not lead to discussion, but if there is any amendment which is not understood, I shall try to explain it as best I can.

Mr. PLUMB. Which construction was adopted in the preparation of the bill, the construction of Judge Field or of the judge in Massachusetts?

Mr. SHERMAN. The construction of Judge Field was adopted without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the bill has not yet been read at length. The bill will first be read before action upon the amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

The Secretary read the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out section 1, as follows:

That on and after ninety days after this act takes effect, every Chinese laborer who, having been in the United States, has departed therefrom and remained absent from the United States for a period of two years, shall be deemed, taken, and held to have elected to remain permanently out of the United States, and to have waived and abandoned his right to return thereto under the provisions of any treaty existing between the United States and the Empire of China; and it shall not be lawful for any such Chinese laborer to return to the United States during the period prescribed for the suspension of the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States; and all the provisions of this act, and of the acts to which this act is amendatory and supplementary, relating to the exclusion of Chinese laborers, shall be applicable to the Chinese laborers so excluded by this section.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the words "Chinese laborer" and "Chinese laborers," wherever used in this act, or in the acts to which this act is supplementary or amendatory, shall be held to include and mean any laborer of the Chinese race, without regard to the Government to which such laborer may owe allegiance, and without regard to the port, place, or country from which such laborer may come to the United States; and the words "Chinese passenger," wherever used in this act, or in the acts to which this act is supplementary or amendatory, shall be held to include and mean all persons of the Chinese race, without regard to the Government to which they may owe allegiance, or the port, place, or country from which they may come to the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator from Ohio who reported this bill does not propose to address the Senate further. I think I ought not to let the occasion pass without at least expressing my own protest with regard to this entire proceeding.

This proposed act, and the statute of which it is an amendment, and the treaty which those two statutes profess to carry into effect, will in my judgment be regarded, if civilization be preserved on this continent, in future ages as among the great blots on the history of the human race. Here is legislation aimed at men, not on account of any individual crime or inferiority or fault, but simply because they are laborers and because they belong to a certain race; and that in defiance of the two great foundation principles of this Republic: that labor is honorable, and that there ought to be no distinction between human beings in their privileges on account of race.

The motive for this legislation is not, as will be confessed in private by every intelligent man who seeks it, any fault, wrongdoing, or inferiority of the classes sought to be affected, but because American skill, American industry, and American intelligence fears that it shall be beaten in the race for wealth, and for employment, and for power.

When the bill of which this is an amendment passed, the first proposition was to exclude Chinese laborers from this country for twenty years. That proposition was vetoed by President Arthur as an infringement of the good faith of this country pledged to China by treaty. That veto was supported by Congress in the constitutional way. Now, it is sought really to evade this pledged faith of the Government by making these exclusions by successive steps: First, for ten years from the date of the passage of the original act. Now, four or five years having passed by, ten years from the passage of the present act, so that we have now got fourteen or fifteen years of absolute exclusion.

The history of this clause in the treaty, which I should like to read, is a little remarkable. In the negotiations between Mr. Swift and Mr. Angell and Mr. Trescott and the Chinese Government, which took place at the request of our Government in China, after the Chinese Government had indicated to Mr. Seward their readiness to accede to a proposition made by him which would have absolutely relieved the Pacific coast from all the hardship which they had alleged, the United States commissioners submitted a draft in which it was provided:

That the United States might "regulate, limit, suspend, or prohibit" it. The Chinese refused to accept this. The Americans replied that they were "willing to consult the wishes of the Chinese Government in preserving the principle of free intercourse between the people of the two countries, as established by existing treaties, provided that the right of the United States Government to use its discretion in guarding against any possible evils of immigration of Chinese laborers is distinctly recognized. Therefore, if such concession removes all difficulty on the part of the Chinese commissioners (but only in that case), the United States commissioners will agree to remove the word "prohibit" from their article, and to use the words "regulate, limit, or suspend."

I now proceed with a quotation from President Arthur's veto message:

The Chinese reply to this can only be inferred from the fact that in the place of an agreement, as proposed by our commissioners, that we might prohibit the coming or residence of Chinese laborers, there was inserted in the treaty an agreement that we might not do it.

The remaining words, "regulate, limit, or suspend," first appear in the American draught. When it was submitted to the Chinese they said, "We infer that of the phrases regulate, limit, suspend, or prohibit, the first is a general expression referring to the others. We are entirely ready to negotiate with your excellencies to the end that a limitation either in point of time or of numbers may be fixed upon the emigration of Chinese laborers to the United States." At a subsequent interview they said that "by limitation in number they meant, for example, that the United States having, as they supposed, a record of the number of immigrants in each year, as well as the total number of Chinese now there, that no more should be allowed to go in any one year in future than either the greatest number which had gone in any year in the past, or that the total number should never be allowed to exceed the number now there. As to limitation of time they meant, for example, that Chinese should be allowed to go in alternate years, or every third year, or, for example, that they should not be allowed to go for two, three, or five years." At a subsequent conference the Americans said, "The Chinese commissioners have in their project explicitly recognized the right of the United States to use some discretion, and have proposed a limitation as to time and number. This is the right to regulate, limit, or suspend."

In one of the conferences the Chinese asked the Americans whether they could give them any idea of the laws which would be passed to carry the powers into execution. The Americans answered that this could hardly be done, "that the United States Government might never deem it necessary to exercise this power. It would depend upon circumstances. If Chinese immigration concentrated in cities where it threatened public order, or if it confined itself to localities where it was an injury to the interests of the American people, the Government of the United States would undoubtedly take steps to prevent such accumulations of Chinese. If, on the contrary, there was no large immigration, or if there were sections of the country where such immigration was clearly beneficial, then the legislation of the United States, under this power, would be adapted to such circumstances. For example, there might be a demand for Chinese labor in the South and a surplus of such labor in California, and Congress might legislate in accordance with these facts. In general, the legislation would be in view of and depend upon the circumstances of the situation at the moment such legislation became necessary. The Chinese commissioners said this explanation was satisfactory; that they had not intended to ask for a draught of any special act, but for some general idea how the power would be exercised.

Our commissioners said at one point also—I have not got it before me, but I have the quotation here.—"You may trust in the justice and good faith of the Government of the United States."

Mr. President, it is notorious, it will not be denied, that the legislation of four or five years ago was intended to go to the extreme of the legislative power which this Government could exercise without a breach of faith, and that twenty years was regarded by the then Executive as a clear breach of the public faith, and the bill was vetoed on that ground. Now this legislation attempts, as I have said, by indirection, extending this period from time to time, to do what Congress would not have attempted and would not be permitted by the Executive at that time to do directly, to make this prohibition in substance perpetual.

This matter comes up quite unexpectedly, and I do not propose to renew the discussion which took place, in which I took such part as seemed to me to be my duty four or five years ago.

If there were not a rivalry between the two political parties of this country for the political vote of the Pacific coast this legislation would be received, in my opinion, with universal execration from all intelligent and humane men. I do not propose to be led by any real or fancied political necessity into a departure from those principles of human freedom and human rights in which I have been educated, which have been the ornament and glory of my own State and my own country, and in departing from which every nation sooner or later is sure to encounter its just and ordained punishment.

I do not propose for one to repeat for myself or to see others repeat without a protest the miserable history of the years which preceded the war, preceded the year 1850, when the two great parties of the country undertook to vie with each other in bidding for the votes of the supporters of slavery. I deem this Chinese legislation in principle a repetition of that disgrace. I do not mean to have on my own record or to leave to my children any share in the blame.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it does seem to me that my friend from Massachusetts has enough on his hands of public duty to perform without reviving the discussion of four years ago on the policy of Chinese exclusion. When I reported this bill I did not expect to be called upon to debate the question over again as to whether the Chinese should be excluded or not.

The bill contains a few provisions which in my judgment are improvements upon the existing law, to enable the courts of the United States to enforce the laws as they are.

I did not vote for either of the laws excluding the Chinese nor for the treaty; but that question is now settled and no man dreams in our generation at least of reviving that controversy. At any rate if my friend from Massachusetts wants to play the knight-errant in opening up that controversy, I will not join him in the operation. More than that, I am inclined to think that any one who will look over the subject carefully and fairly, especially in the light of the experience in California, must on the whole become convinced that the admission of a foreign race, so entirely inconsistent with ours, so different from ours in modes and habits of thought, a people that are entirely of a distinct race kind, quality, and religion so different in everything from us not to be allowed to the extent of our trying to absorb that population with the other elements we have got already, some of which are bad enough. We certainly can not expect to absorb that population and make it a part of the great American people. Whatever may be our theory, and I shared in the belief that it was not wise for us to depart from the old policy of opening up our doors and making this the place where men of all nations might come and enjoy freedom and liberty and the rights of conscience, yet I am not sure but that the time has come when exclusions must be made for the sake of American nationality. But I do not intend to discuss that, and I do not intend to be led into it now.

There is nothing in this bill inconsistent with our treaty obligations unless previous laws are inconsistent with them. There is no provision of the bill but what is in harmony with the existing law. Take the amendment that is now before us and what is it? It defines who is meant by existing laws by the term "Chinese laborer."

Mr. HOAR. It extends the exclusion for ten years.

Mr. SHERMAN. This act operates for ten years. I do not know that I shall be here ten years hence, and perhaps my friend may not. He had better not borrow trouble ten years ahead.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You may both go up higher.

Mr. SHERMAN. Higher, or lower perhaps.

This defines what is meant by the phrase "Chinese laborer." At once the question arose whether "Chinese laborers" when described in a statute of the United States meant persons who had been citizens of China, who had been living in China, belonging to the Chinese race, or whether it meant persons belonging to the Chinese race. The question at once came up when the law was put in force, what construction should be given to this phrase.

On the one hand Judge Field decided in a very careful and elaborate opinion, which I now hold in my hand and which I could not answer if I would and which my friend from Massachusetts could not answer I think if he were to try—in a very plain, simple argument, that the phrase "Chinese laborer" included not only a person born in China proper, but a person born in Hong-Kong of the Chinese race, of the Chinese religion, although born under the dominion of Queen Victoria. I will only read the syllabus of this decision:

A Chinese laborer, born on the island of Hong-Kong after its cession to Great Britain, is within the provisions of the act of Congress of May 6, 1882, restricting the immigration of Chinese laborers to the United States. The purpose of the act was to exclude laborers coming from China, subject to certain stipulations of the treaty of 1880 with that country, and also laborers of the Chinese race coming from any other part of the world.

And then he goes on in quite an elaborate opinion and I think very clearly shows that. He quotes the language of the second section, which I will read:

The second section makes it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, for the master of a vessel knowingly to bring into the United States on his vessel and land, or permit to be landed, any Chinese laborer from any foreign port or place. The language of these sections is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to embrace all Chinese laborers without regard to the country of which they may be subjects. And the twelfth section declares that any Chinese person found unlawfully within the United States shall be removed therefrom by direction of the President to the country from whence he came—not necessarily to China.

A court in Massachusetts—it turns out that it was in Massachusetts—where the decision was made by Judge Lowell and Judge Nelson, held on the other hand that the words "Chinese laborer" should be restricted to persons born in China of the Chinese race subject to the Emperor of China. The ordinary course of business by which a vast horde of those people come here is for them to go to Hong-Kong, which is a little island controlled by Great Britain, and there they take ship for California. By just crossing the boundaries of the Empire of China to the island of Hong-Kong, according to the decision of the judges in Massachusetts, they would entirely evade the policy of the Government of the United States, evade the law and the treaty with China.

This matter was brought to the attention of the Chinese authorities. I have all the State papers on the subject. They said that was an abuse, but they could not prevent it. They could not prevent their people from going to Hong-Kong. That was the ordinary course of trade. They themselves admitted that that was an evasion, a wrong done to the treaty, an evasion of the law. They did not complain of the law and they do not complain of it now, and they never have complained of the operation of the law.

It seems to me under the circumstances that the decision of Judge Field was right, and the Committee on Foreign Relations therefore thought it better to adopt it in the forefront of this bill as a definition of the phrase "Chinese laborer." That is all there is in the first amendment.

The first section of the bill as it came to us from the judges, introduced by the Senator from Nevada, had a provision that a person who was entitled to come back who had left here and had gone away must come back within two years in order to have the privilege of coming back. The Committee on Foreign Relations thought that would be a change of the law, and therefore struck out the first section and inserted instead this definition of what is intended by the phrase "Chinese laborer." That is all there is in the first section as amended.

I do not propose to argue the question at length, but whenever Senators think that the three sections as redrawn are materially different from the old law I will try to point out the exact difference if I can.

While I am up I will say that the second section, to which attention has been called as being something very outrageous, is an exact copy of the second section of the old law except that it transposes the words "foreign port or place," to another part of the section in order to remove a patent ambiguity.

The same phrase is used "from any foreign port or place" in the second section of the old law, and we also insert it in the second line as well as in the eighth line of the same section in the present bill. That is the only change made in the second section. So with the different sections, I shall be able to show a good reason why the various amendments should be made to the existing law in order to simplify it and enable the judges of the courts of the United States to carry it into operation.

Mr. INGALLS. Concerning the first amendment I should like the opinion of the Senator from Ohio upon this proposition. I understand that this bill is based upon and supposed to be in pursuance of the treaty stipulations between the United States and China.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Burlingame treaty was the only treaty that excluded us from such legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. Then this bill is based upon the treaty of 1880 between the United States and China by which we were permitted to suspend or regulate or control the migration of Chinese to this country.

Mr. SHERMAN. So far as the treaty would affect persons who were subject to some other government besides China, the treaty with China would have nothing to do.

Mr. INGALLS. What I wish to inquire of the Senator from Ohio is how under any treaty with China we can exclude by legislation a person of Chinese birth who owes allegiance to some other government besides China.

Mr. SHERMAN. The answer is obvious. We can exclude anybody from any country in the world under our treaties and laws, if we choose by our policy so to do, and we did two or three years ago exclude paupers, &c. The power of the United States to exclude people who are offensive is undeniable; but we had so restrained ourselves by our treaty of 1868 with China that we could not exclude Chinese from coming to this country because of the express provisions of that treaty, and therefore we abrogated that treaty to the extent of allowing us to prohibit laborers from coming here; but our power to exclude any population of any country in the world that is obnoxious to us or our institutions, I believe has never been denied.

Mr. INGALLS. But this section does not presuppose that idea. It expressly declares here that in carrying out this treaty with China, upon which alone this legislation is based, we may go outside our relations with China and exclude Chinese persons, whether they are subjects of that government or not. If we have the right to exclude persons who may owe allegiance to any government whatever upon the face of the earth, why do you apply the qualifying phrase in the first section of the bill to the Chinese and say you shall have the right to exclude Chinese laborers, or persons of Chinese descent, no matter to what government they may owe allegiance? I can not understand it. The declaration seems to be illogical, it seems to be inconsistent, it seems to be based on the supposition that we have not the right to exclude anybody else but Chinese.

Mr. SHERMAN. The difficulty that gave rise to this legislation was the feeling on the part of the people of the United States that this Chinese laborer, the cooly, the degraded laborer—not the Chinese people, not the mass of the Chinese people, not probably one in fifty of them, but the Chinese cooly who is regarded as a degraded laborer—ought not to be brought to this country, that his presence is offensive to us, injurious to our public policy, degrading to our labor, injurious to our people, offensive to our morals. That was the idea. We had so tied ourselves up that we could not do as we chose to do, exclude persons of a particular class and description as we did under the general law a few years ago when we passed a law excluding paupers and lunatics and various grades from all countries. We had tied ourselves up by the Burlingame treaty so that we could not do it, and so the subsequent treaty was only a modification of the Burlingame treaty.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator seems to be wandering away from the topic. I find these words in the first section of this bill: "Without regard to the government to which they" (Chinese laborers) "may owe allegiance." Now, the Senator states that we have the right to exclude any person that we may see fit, let him come from any government on the face of the earth. Why, then, do you reiterate what is acknowledged to be a principle of political power or action in this country by applying this phrase to Chinese laborers? If we have the right to exclude them, of course we have the right to exclude them no matter what government they may owe allegiance to.

I do not understand that there ever has been any decision by any court or tribunal of this country that under the operation of the statute of 1882 we had not the right to exclude persons that we had a right to exclude whether they might be Chinese or not; but here in this bill, from some motive or purpose that I can not comprehend, this language is used, perhaps from an idea that there will be some interpretation of the law that in case a Chinese laborer has expatriated himself and become a citizen or a subject of another dominion we shall not have the power to exclude him. But the Senator himself says that power is not denied; it is a part of the general law of nations; it is a part of our political power already existing; and yet so great is the animosity, so great is the dread, so great is the fear and apprehension with regard to these few thousands of Chinese that it seems to be necessary to apply to them a distinction, a discrimination, and a qualification that the Senator himself admits without this, and as seems to me by implication to be a declaration, that we would not have the right to apply to people of other nations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator was present when I read a reference to the decision of Judges Lowell and Nelson in which they hold——

Mr. INGALLS. They went over to Hong-Kong I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. In which they hold that any person of the Chinese race born in China or born out of China might by shipping from a foreign port——

Mr. INGALLS. That can not be possible.

Mr. HOAR. My friend will pardon me; I can state what the decision was.

Mr. SHERMAN. Give me the decision and I will read it.

Mr. HOAR. I can state Judge Lowell's decision.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have Judge Field's comment upon it.

Mr. INGALLS. In a matter of this kind, if we are to determine a great constitutional or national question we ought to have the opinion on which we are called upon to act.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not myself read the decision of the judges in Massachusetts in full because I could not get it, but Judge Field quotes from the decision, and as a matter of course he assumes and knows that they did make their decision. My friend from Massachusetts says they did.

Mr. HOAR. I said they did not.

Mr. SHERMAN. They made a decision that persons might come from Hong-Kong. I would rather take what Judge Field said about the decision made by his coequal judge than take the hap-hazard remark even of my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. He was not a coequal in the first place. I read the opinion very carefully.

Mr. SHERMAN. Judge Field, who is one of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, says:

> Our attention has been called to a recent decision of Judges Lowell and Nelson of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts, in which they reach a different conclusion. Those judges considered that the act of Congress was simply intended to exclude laborers from China within the stipulations of the supplementary treaty. Undoubtedly, as already said, that was one of its objects; but it is very evident, both from the circumstances under which it was passed and from its language, that it had a still further object. The construction which we give renders all its provisions consistent with each other. The whole purpose of the law, which was to exclude from the country laborers of the Chinese race, would be defeated by any other construction.
> The release of the petitioner must be denied.

It is manifest from this state of the law that here were two decisions widely apart from each other, just the opposite, as to the meaning of the words of an act of Congress. It is necessary therefore that Congress should step in and define its meaning. If it meant only that Chinese must go through Hong-Kong and be shipped under British colors in order to evade our law, we ought to say that was the meaning, and that would be the end of this Chinese restriction; but on the other hand if we adopt the opinion of Judge Field that the object of Congress and the language of Congress fairly construed meant something more, we ought to adopt that construction. That is what is done by the bill of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HOAR. I want to state on this point before it passes from the mind of the Senate, in justice to Judge Lowell and Judge Nelson, who are my friends and constituents, the exact thing which they decided. It will take but half a minute.

The question which arose in the court in Boston was whether the act of 1882 applied to the Chinese as a race without regard to their nationality, or whether it applied to the Chinese as subjects of the Emperor of China or persons belonging to a particular nation. Nobody ever claimed what the Senator from Ohio has imputed to these two distinguished judges. Judge Field, in the sentence from his opinion which has been read, negatives the idea that the Senator from Ohio has put upon this decision. Nobody claimed that a man belonging to the Chinese nation could cross to Hong-Kong and ship there and come into this country in violation of our law; but the claim was simply that an Englishman by birth, though of Chinese descent and origin, was not included in this act, and the argument of these two judges, which I have read very carefully, seemed to me to be irresistible.

In the first place, it is an act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese. Now, how is it possible that an act to execute treaty stipulations with the Emperor of China can be supposed to have been intended to apply to a Chinaman born in England and who comes from England.

In the next place, the exceptions in the treaty to which this applied were exceptions put in to carry out a bargain with the Emperor of China under the conditions and circumstances upon which his subjects already here might stay; and that section, the third, related wholly of course to a promise to the Emperor of China, and did not affect our right to deal with the subjects of Queen Victoria.

Then, in the next place, the treaty, which this act says in its title it is carrying out, provides certain methods according to which the rights of Chinese in this country, or who shall come in here, not being laborers, should be secured, and goes on to say that on the application of the Chinese minister our Government will take into consideration any statement which he may make in regard to wrongs or in regard to exceeding the rights conferred and reserved by this treaty.

That was the argument which led these two learned judges to declare that the word "Chinese" means of the Chinese nation and not the Chinese race belonging to other nations. Whether it was a good argument or not I will not detain the Senate now to consider. I think it was.

I do not repeat this argument simply to antagonize what my friend has said, but simply to point out to him that he is altogether mistaken in the belief that these two judges, whose opinion of this treaty I dare say may have coincided with his—I do not know anything about that—had sanctioned a subterfuge by which a man belongiug to the Chinese nation could go over to another nation and take shipping to our ports. They did nothing of the kind.

Mr. DOLPH. I rose merely to make a suggestion in regard to the remarks of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

The power to exclude Chinese laborers is one thing; the exercise of the power is another. Before Congress can exercise the power the power must be possessed. Admitting for the sake of argument that the term "Chinese laborers" includes all persons of the Chinese race without regard to the government to which they may owe allegiance, that it includes those who have become subjects of other powers, still it requires legislation to exercise the power which exists in the Government to exclude such persons under the act of 1882. Undoubtedly that is so after the decision of the judges in Massachusetts as to whether the terms used in the bill, among others the term "Chinese laborer," included citizens of Great Britain who were Chinese by birth. Certainly even if it is true that the words "Chinese laborer" include such persons it will be better to put it beyond controversy in this bill. The provision here that such term shall include "all persons of the Chinese race without regard to the government to which they may owe allegiance," would be surplusage but for the doubt raised by the decision referred to.

I do not see how the question of power arises, because, as I say, the power is one thing and must precede the exercise of it by legislation. It is necessary to have the power in order that the legislation shall come, which is the exercise of it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask that the bill lie over, and that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SHERMAN. We can get through with the bill very soon.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. On the statement that we can get through this evening, I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations to the first section.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What is it? Let it be read again.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have explained it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, in section 3, line 109, after the words "return thereto," to strike out "at any time within two years from the date of the issuance of the certificate, but not afterwards;" so as to read:

At the time the said collector or his deputy issues the preliminary certificate as aforesaid, or as soon thereafter as convenient, he shall make out or cause to be made out the return certificate, which shall be numbered to correspond with the entry of registration and the preliminary certificate, and shall also contain a statement of all the particulars required and entered in the book of registration, and shall certify that the person to whom it is issued is a Chinese laborer; that he was in the United States on the 17th day of November, 1880, or came into the United States prior to the 5th day of August, 1882; that he is about to depart from the United States, and is entitled to return thereto on the presentation and surrender of the said certificate to the collector of customs at the port where he shall again re-enter the United States, subject to the restrictions and limitations hereinafter provided as to the number of Chinese passengers who may come into the United States on any one vessel from any foreign port or place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "issued," in line 130 of section 3, to strike out the following clause:

That any person who shall knowingly and falsely alter or substitute any name for the name written in such certificate, or forge any such certificate, or knowingly transfer, utter, or have in possession, with intent to use the same, any forged or fraudulent certificate, or falsely personate any person named in any such certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, and imprisoned in a penitentiary for a term of not more than five years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no; there is no unanimous consent.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not know until this moment that the first amendment on page 2 had been agreed to. I understood the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] to ask that the amendment might be again reported.

Mr. HARRISON. He withdrew that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota withdrew that request.

Mr. INGALLS. It seems extraordinary to me that at this hour of the day a bill of this magnitude should be brought in here by an arrangement with a Senator who already had another bill pending and slipped into a crevice of time——

Mr. HOAR. What Senator?

Mr. INGALLS. I am talking about the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK]. I say slipped into a crevice of time and railroaded through this body, containing provisions as extraordinary and multifarious as these are here. The Senator from Ohio states that he does not desire to renew the discussion of four years ago and accuses the Senator from Massachusetts of knight-errantry, intimating that he is a Don Quixote fighting windmills, and perhaps that I am his Sancho Panza [laughter], because we venture to ask that a great measure of this kind, which I affirm is a disgrace to American civilization, shall not be passed through here without discussion, and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] who now occupies that chair sotto voce suggests, "if there is no objection, this amendment is unanimously agreed to," and nobody knows anything about it. The Senator from Massachusetts, after three or four amendments had been thus agreed to, arises and expresses his surprise that this arrangement is being completed. And I say, sir, that I did not know until this moment of time that that first amendment had been agreed to. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] says it is my own fault and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] echoes him.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly I do.

Mr. INGALLS. It may be my own fault or it may be not. But so far as this bill is concerned it will never pass this body without discussion and without examination and without such protest as those of us who do not believe in its principles see fit to utter; and if there is any disposition to take advantage of the situation, I should like to be heard on that as on the rest of the situation here. I protest, sir, against this method of passing this bill and these amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I will just mention to my friend from Massachusetts and to my friend from Kansas as to this particular amendment on page 8 to strike out the penalty words, that if any Senator will take the trouble to turn to page 13 he will see that in this bill as originally drawn and presented those two clauses were duplicated, and therefore we thought that one clause would certainly be enough. Whether it is a good one or not will come up when we get to it. This amendment of the committee on page 8 is simply to strike out the same provision that appears on page 13, as we thought one would be enough.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did assent by perhaps my looks to the suggestion that if the Senator from Nebraska [Kansas] did not know that the amendment to the first section had been adopted by the Senate it was his own fault. The Senate were allowed to hear it read from the Secretary's desk in the usual and ordinary method, and everybody heard it that was giving attention and listening. There was no advantage taken of the circumstances of the occasion. The opportunity was as good for the Senators who oppose the bill as for those who are in favor of it to have objected.

I do not intend to detain the Senate at this time of the evening by discussing the bill. If the Senator from Nebraska thinks that the friends of this bill are afraid to discuss it, I will——

Several SENATORS. Kansas, you mean.

Mr. TELLER. Yes, the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator refers to me I wish he would ascertain my location. I represent the State of Kansas. It lies south of Nebraska, and I protest against being dislocated in this way. [Laughter.] This is the second time the Senator has referred to me as "the Senator from Nebraska," and of course I can not reply to arguments addressed to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. TELLER. I will give the Senator an opportunity; I will try to locate the Senator; but he has a method according to what they call out West "sloshing around," so that sometimes we can hardly locate the Senator. [Laughter.]

If the Senator from Kansas, the senior Senator from Kansas, thinks the friends of this bill are afraid to discuss it in the presence of this Senate, in the presence of the people of the United States, in the presence of the people of the world, he does not understand their temper.

He says the bill is a disgrace to American civilization. Why, Mr. President, there is not a nation in the world, there is not a nation in the history of the earth, that has not asserted this very principle which we are asserting here to-day—the right to exclude from its borders everybody that its people believed was inimical or injurious to the welfare of its public.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that he does not intend that this bill shall pass without a prote... He goes back and says it is in principle the same as the great controversy before the war, and then he says that if it was not for the purpose of getting votes nobody here would be in favor of this bill. Mr. President, four years ago this matter was fully and freely discussed in the Senate, and public sentiment everywhere in the United States was almost unanimously with the friends of this bill; and I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that there is not a State in the Union, Massachusetts not excepted, that can be carried on the platform which he lays down by any political party or by them all. He who denies to his Government the right to say who shall land upon its shores denies the prerogative that is necessary to the existence, to the supremacy, to the welfare of a nation, and the nation is not worth preserving that does not exercise that right whenever the interest of its people demands its exercise.

Mr. President, it is not a question of sentiment; it is a practical question; it is a question whether the American laborer is to be put in competition with the four hundred and fifty millions of people on the Asiatic coast that can be landed on our shores for $10 per head.

The honorable Senator from Kansas and the honorable Senator from Massachusetts are in favor, they tell us, of protecting American labor by means of revenue laws against the pauperized labor of Europe; but they deny our right to protect the American citizen and the American laborer against what is the more than pauperized labor of Asia. They deny the right to protect our laborers against a people who can come here and subsist on starvation wages. By many hundreds of years of training and of discipline, "the survival of the fittest" being applied to them, they are a people who, starved for centuries, can live upon that which every American citizen would go to the grave upon; they can live upon less food and with less clothing; they have neither houses nor homes, nor families. They come here in numbers to be brought into competition with our people; and when the men who are laboring in this country and looking for labor in vain complain that they are brought in competition with this class of servile labor, the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Massachusetts declare it is a disgrace to American civilization that we should by law do what they have asked us to do in the interest of the great manufacturing communities of the East. Protect labor they say, protect it against the intelligent Englishman, but do not protect it against the debased, the uneducated, and the servile Chinese!

Mr. President, nobody in this country has a greater admiration than I for the principle enunciated early that this should be the home of every man who desired to better his condition; but do these men come here for that purpose? Do they come here to make a home? Do they bring their wives? Do they raise their children? Do they participate in society? Do they do anything that goes to build up the nation? No; they are tramps coming here to take the bread from our own laborers, to destroy prosperity on the Pacific coast and all over the land, and the people who are to-day in want and in distress because of the stagnation in business appeal to us, and yet we are met with the cry that the great cause of humanity demands that they should starve and come in competition with men who can live upon what our people can not, that men who have neither houses nor homes nor families nor children in this country shall be preferred to those who are furnishing to this nation the bone and the sinew, the glory and the strength of the land, the men who labor.

Mr. President, I do not intend to sit here and listen quietly to either the Senator from Kansas or the Senator from Massachusetts hurling at me any imputations that I am less loyal to the principles of freedom than they. I believe I am as loyal to those principles as anybody. To all who come here to share the glories and advantages of this country, to become a part and parcel of it, I shall open broad the doors and welcome them, but for those who come here only that they may take of our wealth and return with it to another land, there to bestow it upon another people and upon a different civilization, I have no sympathy. No principle of humanity, no principle of freedom, no principle of generosity requires me to say that they are entitled to come either in great numbers or small numbers to our shores except as they come for the purpose I first mentioned.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Ohio, inasmuch as I was mistaken, or led into a mistake, to yield to me that I may make my motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me say a few words, and then I shall yield the floor.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The time will go beyond the hour when we can have an executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall say but a few words.

I called up the bill to-day because of the advancing stage of the session. The bankruptcy bill was put over until next Tuesday, and it is likely that it will occupy a considerable part of the time. We know that we have all the appropriation bills to follow, with many other important measures which we must pass upon. I believe that this bill will be voted for by nine-tenths of the Senators present, and perhaps by all; I hope by all. It is a bill which has been carefully analyzed and examined by the Committee on Foreign Relations, who are familiar with the whole subject-matter. It was reported from that committee unanimously. The subject has been favorably treated in the other House in harmony with the present existing law.

I called the bill up by an arrangement, as the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] termed it; that is, I requested the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] who had charge of the railroad-tax bill to allow me to take up the bill, and I also requested the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to yield the floor, stating that I hoped to pass the bill to-night. I do think it ought to pass to-night; but if any Senator wishes to discuss it further I shall not press it at this time; and the Senator from Kansas has already said that he desires to look into it. I do not desire to press it under those circumstances. I therefore ask that the bill may retain its place as a special order and I shall take some future opportunity to call it up, and then these gentlemen may make their speeches upon it. Probably next week I shall ask unanimous consent to consider it. I ask that an agreement be made that the bill shall retain its place as a special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order if there be no objection. The Chair will remind the Senator from Ohio that a special order has been made for next Tuesday, the public land bill.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that the bill which was under consideration before the Chinese bill was taken up may be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; the unfinished business is the bill with respect to taxing railroad lands.

Mr. HARRIS. It was informally laid aside.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I made a suggestion a while ago in good faith, believing that the suggestion would be carried out. The Senator from Kansas has given notice that he will discuss the Chinese bill further. I therefore renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to offer an amendment to the pending bill to be printed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pending the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator from Vermont yield for an instant before his motion is put? I wish to suggest that I shall ask the Senate to-morrow evening at a reasonable hour to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. To-morrow has been set apart for another purpose.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then I shall ask that it be done at the next sitting of the Senate after to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont yields to me that I may submit an amendment to Senate bill 1812, which I move as an additional section to the bill. I ask that it may be received and considered as the pending amendment, and that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Whether it will be the pending amendment depends upon whether another amendment is now up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be received as pending, and printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending bill now, may I ask?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending bill will be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 1812) to provide for the taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 27, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 26, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

TRANSPORTATION OF MINOR COIN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an appropriation of $5,000 for the transportation of minor coin; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

S. H. BRODNAX VS. UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of order and findings of fact in that court in the case of S. H. Brodnax against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MRS. MARIA HUNTER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7167) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Hunter, with an amendment by the Senate.

Mr. SMALLS. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 24, 1886.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 7167) do pass with the following amendment: In lines 5 and 6, strike out "$600 per annum" and insert "$50 per month."

The amendment was agreed to.

BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. FREE SHIP BILL.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, by an order of the House adopted some weeks ago, the previous question was to be considered as ordered at 4 o'clock to-day on the free-ship bill, which was partly argued on each side on Saturday last, and for the consideration of which yesterday and to-day were set apart. After consultation with the chairman of the committee [Mr. DUNN], the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], who has charge of the business now pending, I ask to submit for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to submit for immediate consideration a resolution which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the House has devoted yesterday, and wishes to devote this day, to business other than House bill 7219, commonly known as "the free-ship bill," which was set for those days by a previous order:

Resolved, That said order be a continuous order, but for one day only, to begin immediately after the reading of the Journal, and that the previous question be considered as ordered at 4 o'clock p. m. of that day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, and others. What day?

Mr. HAMMOND. There is no day fixed. We will accommodate ourselves to other matters.

Mr. HATCH. I think the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia is eminently fair and proper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRAGG. I object. I will state to the gentleman from Georgia the ground of my objection. The previous order in reference to this bill operated only after the call of committees for the consideration of bills, and the Committee on Military Affairs will be next called during that consideration hour.

Mr. HAMMOND. But we give up one day to which we were entitled under the previous order. We will not interfere with the business of the gentleman's committee.

Mr. BRAGG. With that understanding I am willing to withdraw the objection.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, the objection is withdrawn.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to say that I agree with the gentleman from Missouri that this is an eminently fair proposition.

Subsequently the following proceedings took place:

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] now desires to withdraw his objection.

Mr. COBB. I do so, with the understanding between the gentleman and myself that he will not interfere with the land-grant forfeiture bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. It has been read, but if there be no objection the Clerk will report it again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does that interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills?

Mr. HAMMOND. No; it will not.

The SPEAKER. The resolution reads "immediately after the reading of the Journal."

Mr. DUNHAM. By the terms of the order it might interfere with appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to make a privileged report, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 5887, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
J. M. RIGGS,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. B. PLUMB,
JAMES B. BECK,
WILLIAM MAHONE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that this report be accepted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the report will be accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and request a further conference.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

WHARTON'S DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. COX, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a joint resolution (H. R. 178) to print Wharton's Digest of International Law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably a resolution fixing a day for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLARA L. PREUSS.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 921) granting a pension to Clara L. Preuss; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed

CHARLES RIDDLE.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6952) granting a pension to Charles Riddle; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JAMES F. SALYERS.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3948) granting a pension to James F. Salyers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

THOMAS S. DUVALL.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 887) granting a pension to Thomas S. Duvall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOSIAH MAHONEY.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4265) granting a pension to Josiah Mahoney; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY RENFRO.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2358) granting a pension to Mary Renfro; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JACOB S. BIDDLE.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ABEL MISHLER, OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. SWOPE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2964) to restore to the pension-list the name of Abel Mishler, of Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD COLEMAN.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8351) for the relief of Edward Coleman; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE WATERS.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 325) granting a pension to Catharine Waters; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 7460) for the relief of Barnet S. Van Buren; and

A bill (H. R. 5944) for the relief Daniel Lannon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue; and pending that motion, I move that all general debate on the pending bill be limited to one minute.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to strike out "one minute" and insert "two hours."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And I move an amendment to the amendment, to insert "four hours" instead of "two hours."

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. My parliamentary inquiry is this: Have gentlemen who have exhausted themselves on this subject already the right to vote on this question? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they have.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Are they not interested under the rules? [Renewed laughter.]

The question recurred on Mr. DUNHAM'S amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 83.

Mr. DUNHAM. As this is an important question I think we should have a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of no quorum; and the Chair will appoint Mr. DUNHAM and Mr. HATCH as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 117.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question on my motion to close the general debate in one minute.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 20.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I make the point of no quorum unless the gentleman will allow me to move an amendment limiting debate to one hour.

Mr. HATCH. Regular order.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, and Mr. HATCH.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 117——

Mr. DUNHAM. It is announced that no quorum is voting, and I would ask whether it is in order for me to move there be a call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The House is dividing and the announcement has not yet been made.

Mr. DUNHAM. I understood the announcement to be made that no quorum had voted.

The SPEAKER. There has been no formal announcement of the vote. The tellers report—ayes 149, noes 7; no quorum.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move there be a call of the House.

Mr. HATCH. At the same time I demand the yeas and nays on my motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his motion that there be a call of the House?

Mr. DUNHAM. I do.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I insist on my demand for the yeas and nays on my motion to close debate in one minute.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 181, nays 54, not voting 87; as follows:

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. BAKER.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. LITTLE, until further notice; also upon this bill. If present, Mr. DIBBLE would vote "no" on the bill.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. DAVIS, until further notice. If present, Mr. ARNOT would vote for, and Mr. DAVIS against, the pending bill.

Mr. TRIGG with Mr. BINGHAM, for this day.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, with Mr. BUCK.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. MARKHAM.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. PINDAR with Mr. MITCHELL, on this bill. If present, Mr. PINDAR would vote "ay," Mr. MITCHELL "no."

Mr. ELY. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that if not paired I should have voted "ay" on this question.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurring on the motion to limit general debate to one minute, the motion was agreed to

Mr. HATCH. Before the motion is put that the House go into Committee of the Whole I desire to ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who desire to do so may have leave to print in the RECORD upon this bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

IMITATION DAIRY PRODUCTS.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills for raising revenue. The business under consideration is the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. By order of the House, all general debate upon the bill is limited to one minute.

Mr. HATCH. I present a telegram which I send to the desk, and ask to have read as a reply to the telegram forwarded to the Clerk's desk by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, May 26, 1886.

Col. W. W. HATCH,
House of Representatives:

Protest of several hundred members Chicago Board of Trade against action of directory favoring bogus butter mailed you last night. More to come.

R. M. LITTLE.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purposes of this act the word "butter" shall be understood to mean the food product usually known as butter, and which is made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, with or without common salt, and with or without additional coloring matter.

Mr. BAYNE addressed the Chair.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Are amendments now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want the attitude of Pennsylvania misunderstood with reference to this bill. In my own district there are large manufacturing establishments of butterine, and very worthy people are engaged in that branch of manufacture. But while that is true, I believe the voice of my district and my State is in favor of protecting the dairy interests of this country against competition with this pretended substitute for one of their chief products.

Pennsylvania is the second largest butter-producing State in the Union. New York comes first with 111,000,000 pounds annual production; Pennsylvania comes next, with over 79,000,000 pounds; the State of Ohio comes next, with, I believe, about 67,000,000 pounds, and Iowa next, with about 55,000,000 pounds. It will be seen, therefore, that the great State of Pennsylvania has a larger interest in protecting her dairy products than any other State in the Union, except alone the State of New York.

Now, sir, I believe it to be a high duty to protect the agricultural industries from unfair rivals from within or from without; and I believe it to be our duty to protect the consumers of the country from impositions subject to constitutional jurisdiction. If this bill is to be effective the duty or tax of 10 cents per pound upon this product should be maintained. If it be reduced to 1 cent or to 2 cents per pound, or any much less rate than that named in the bill, I believe the result will be that this butterine or oleomargarine will go upon the tables of the people in spite of law, and that the consumer will not be protected, although the dairy interests may measurably be. I want to have both the dairy interests and the consumers of the country protected from this imposition.

We have heard much of the constitutional aspects of the question presented by this bill from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN], and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], each of whom has invoked the inhibitions of the Constitution of the United States against the passage of the bill, and each one of whom has lectured the House, this side of the House especially, because they almost unanimously support this measure.

Why, sir, should a lecture come from those gentlemen? It is but a short time ago when each one of those gentlemen regarded this very Constitution as a rope of sand that might be broken at the will of a sovereign State, while we on this side of the Chamber regarded it as a band of steel uniting all sections of the country in indissoluble union, that could not be broken by any means whatever.

I claim that section 8 of Article I of the Constitution empowers us to levy this tax, not only for the purpose of raising revenue, but for the purpose of fostering the dairy interests of the country, or for the purpose of protecting the consumers of the country against imposition or fraud. In other words, I claim that under the Constitution you may levy a tax to protect and to encourage and to foster the industries of this country, and to promote the general welfare; and whatever sticklers for the Constitution may say, that principle has been asserted from the beginning by the friends of the Constitution, and was decided most emphatically by the arbitrament of arms; because that was the question involved in our great civil contest.

And I am glad to observe the accessions to the ranks of the protectionists which the promotion of this bill is evolving. The purpose of this bill is to protect the dairymen and the consumers, and I, as a protectionist of all the industries of the country, gladly welcome our new friends.

I do not anticipate any troublesome amount of revenue from this measure. We do not want revenue. Nor do I wish to extinguish the business of the manufacturers of oleomargarine. I desire, however, that they may succeed in building up a large export trade. It is claimed by a good many people that we need foreign markets for our surplus products. I should like to have oleomargarine find a foreign market. It will suit the South American States. It is less liable, I am told, to become rancid than genuine butter. If that be so, the South American States, having a warm climate and people with not overrefined tastes, are the natural markets for this product.

But we have been told that the workingmen and working women will be the sufferers from this tax. That is a mistake. It has been shown by one of the gentlemen [Mr. PRICE] of the Committee on Agriculture that the price of butter has gone up; but the number of dairies has run down since the production in large quantities of oleomargarine. The simple truth is, that the oleomargarine business is driving the dairy business out of existence. It is a slow operation, but a sure one; and it is analogous to the financial axiom that bad money will drive out good money. After the large manufacturers of this product would get control of the market they could and would fix prices to suit themselves. The man, therefore, who says that this bill is inimical to the working people misapprehends the situation. Besides, are not the dairymen, the farmers, working people? They compose upward of 60 per cent. of our working people, and no people work harder. Shall they be deprived of the opportunity of producing the 800,000,000 pounds of butter that now yearly comes from their hands?

I say no, and the workingmen and working women in all the trades and branches of industry will say no.

But why should this argument be used at all by the opponents of this bill? Is it supposed that the working people will prefer oleomargarine to genuine butter? Are not their palates just as sensitive as that of the man of large means?

The workingmen of Pennsylvania, whether in the field or in the mill or in the mine, will not thank their self-constituted advocates for maintaining such position.

Let us have genuine butter, genuine dollars, and genuine dealings in all things.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time, within my experience at least, where protection has been invoked in favor of one domestic industry against another.

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, Lord! that is what it is all for.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am a protectionist, but I have been, so far as my votes are concerned, in favor of protecting American industries against the invasion of the foreign products of cheap labor. Now, if this bill be intended simply to raise revenue, no man, I presume, will question its constitutionality. Is that its purpose? Will any gentleman who favors it assert it to be such? Why, sir, if that is its object, why impose a tax of 10 cents a pound on oleomargarine? Is it necessary? Has it been demanded? Has anybody petitioned for it with that view? Do the gentlemen who advocate the measure believe it to be a revenue measure? Are they not proceeding, so far as that is concerned, upon false pretenses? Certainly; nobody doubts it. How then is it? Is it for the purpose of protecting the consumer from a spurious article? Certainly not; because it does not discriminate between that which is clean and pure and healthy and a lawful food product and that which is deleterious to the public health.

Does any gentleman upon this floor controvert the proposition so abundantly established that oleomargarine may be made pure, and clean, and healthful, and that it is a food product which people may lawfully make and buy; that when used is not injurious to individual health? Does anybody doubt it? If that be true, why is it, if gentlemen are simply concerned about the protection of the public health and the protection of the consumer from buying a spurious or deleterious article—why is it that the tax is not imposed upon that which is uncleanly or unhealthful?

Why is it that you propose to tax out of existence an article that may be legally made and that is lawful, an industry that is legal, an industry in which the people or some portion of them are legally engaged, an industry in which the people or a portion of them have invested their capital? Why is it you propose to tax it in the interest of other industries which are simply healthful and lawful and produce an article which is a legitimate article of commerce? Why is it, gentlemen, that you do not make this discrimination? For the reason, I apprehend, that you desire to destroy an industry. Oh, but it is said you desire to give the people an opportunity of knowing what they buy! You do not want them deluded into the belief that they are buying butter when they are buying butterine or oleomargarine.

Now, if that be the purpose of this bill I am willing to assist in its passage. But if that be your purpose how does it become necessary that you should impose a tax of 10 cents a pound on every pound that may be manufactured? How does it happen that it becomes necessary to impose the enormous license of $600 on every manufacturer and $480 on those who engage in the wholesale business and $48 on those who engage in the retail business?

Oh, you say it is in the line of other taxation. Do we not tax whisky, that costs but 20 cents a gallon in its production, 90 cents? But let me ask you, gentlemen, what American industry is in competition with the whisky industry? What production do you tax out of existence when you impose the tax of 90 cents a gallon on whisky? Is there something else which rises up in competition with it? Name it. Why do we find it necessary to raise revenue by the imposition of this whisky tax? It is, so far as I am concerned, because the revenue is needed, and on the other hand because the article is not a food product but a luxury, the use of which may be dispensed with without injury, whereas if the people desire to buy oleomargarine and butterine, a pure and honest article, in the name of God, personal liberty, and the Constitution have they not the right to buy it?

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as one of the subcommittee of three to which was delegated the duty of draughting the bill under consideration, and which may therefore be regarded as its sponsor, I deem it duty to myself and to the bill to say a word in its behalf.

Starting out with the broad assumption that if a thing is not what it purports to be it is a counterfeit and a fraud, my line of argument will be mainly directed against oleomargarine as filling the bill as such, trusting that the propriety of its suppression, or limitation at least within reasonable bounds, will naturally suggest itself to every honest mind. What is butter? The bill defines it. Will any assert that it can be made out of other substance than cream or milk or both combined? If not, then the resulting product of other substance or combination purporting to be such is a fraud, and should be within the reach of the law no less than a piece of base metal with the Government's impress upon it which claims to be one of Brother Bland's 412½-grain silver dollars.

Let it remove its cap of claim, and my objection to the vile stuff is withdrawn. For I recognize every one's right to eat what he pleases as fully as I claim for myself the correlative right not to eat what I do not please, not to have forced upon me as a genuine article that which my stomach loathes and abominates. But, sir, in this and kindred cases that claim will never be abated except under legal compulsion. Do you ask the reason why? My reply is that the temptation to hold on is more than mercenary greed will willingly surrender. Is it clean, is it pure, is it healthy? Of course public repute and general belief is the basis of verdict. So far, however, from eating it myself, Mr. Chairman, after an insight into the mystery of its manufacture by evidence satisfactory to me I would scruple to give it to my dog. Still I in no wise doubt that I have eaten it time and again under the fond delusion that it was the genuine lacteal derivative, for by trick of chemist detection is almost impossible by taste. Does that militate against objection urged? No; a thousand times no!

I care not how perfect the deception, it is none the less an imposition on dairyman and consumer. Nay, the more perfect the one the greater the other. For, sir, as perfection attains in its manufacture, the easier it is by deodorizing trickery and discoloring process to convert the most repulsive and disgusting ingredients into milk-white lard or kindred substance, and this in turn into most approved oleomargarine, butterine, stearine, or bullerine.

If it is not so, why did not these gentry appear before the Agricultural Committee and make refutal that such things were either possible or at all events practiced? The committee doors were thrown wide open to both sides, and they knew full well that such allegations would be brought. Instead, however, of making their fight there, for reasons best known to themselves they preferred to come before the Committee of the Whole, and under the plea of injured innocence to inundate us with taunts of invidious taxation and protests of boards of trade reflecting upon the committee.

In this connection permit me to say that no measure ever left a committee of this House after a more patient hearing, a more thorough endeavor to arrive at the bottom facts, and a more unanimous indorsement of every clause and provision contained.

True, it was only the Agricultural Committee, unhonored by membership of any great constitutional lawyer, but actuated by laudable purpose and with an eye single to the interests of the great farming class of the land, whose interests it was supposed to have in hand. Representatives of that honorable class from almost every quarter of our great country appeared before us either in person or by proxy or petition, and never was there more unanimity of sentiment in demand of salutary legislation. But no sooner is the bill brought on the floor than it meets the hue and cry of class legislation. Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, class legislation is no new thing to our statute-book; but alas, it has almost ever been legislation against the class which I represent, and the one my committee represents.

Such, not to speak of our infamous tariff laws of recent years, was the tax on cotton, the tax on tobacco, the tax on the fruits of the earth, and the grain thereof when converted into liquid commodities. Class legislation forsooth! Point me to the tax law this quarter of a century bygone that has not been class legislation, deliberately planned and systematically framed, it would seem, to inure to the detriment of the great controlling but much-enduring class—the class to which I belong—the farming class of the land. I crave pardon, Mr. Chairman; there was a short-lived tax on lordly incomes, but it worked hardship on the commercial millionaire class and so it was set aside.

How long are we to be regaled with this nauseating plea when measures of relief for counter-class comes up? Sir, there is not a more uncompromising stickler for "strict construction" on or off this floor than I claim to be; but I am tired of having my guild construed into drudges and their hard earnings into the national coffers, or worse still, a thousand times worse, into the pockets of moneyed upstarts who spin cotton and roll steel and iron, and reveling in ill-begotten superabundance, sneer upon the farmer class and flaunt their poverty in their face.

And now, when he asks for this poor modicum of relief, when he craves with modest mien that this great, ay, taken in the aggregate this greatest, branch of agricultural industry may not be "swallowed up and lost

> In the wide womb of uncreated night,
> Devoid of sense and being,

he is met with the hackneyed and stereotyped cry of class legislation and constitutional infraction. Down with such sophistry; to the dogs with such quibbling.

The opponents of the measure, driven to the wall to find a peg on which to hang their constitutional objection, undertake to sift the motives of its friends. I humbly submit is it fair or ingenuous warfare? Does it not confer corresponding right on us to do the same with theirs? Taxation not the motive of the measure, but annihilation, they say.

On yesterday we were regaled with the millennium spectacle of the pig-iron lion of Pennsylvania and the free-trade lamb of Virginia (perhaps I should say free-wool lamb) lying down together in blissful accord, scratching each other's back and making love speeches, "quam familiariter." Politics, it is said, make strange bed-fellows, and here we see it. Ye gods and litle fishes, but it was a delicious sight!

But, sir, might we not with equal right intimate that the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his protection following object to seeing taxes levied on legitimately taxable articles, frauds, or luxuries, as he may prefer to class bogus butters, for fear that additional revenue from this source may justify or require a let-up on plowshares, tin pans, domestics, and blankets, not to mention some thousand or two other articles of every day use and prime necessity?

Might we not in like manner be pardoned for harboring the doubt that the other wing of the opposition might possibly be slightly influenced by the laudable ambition to wipe out the entire internal-revenue fabric, and so oppose the addition of an article to the list which most of them concede is as proper subject for tax as those now on it, always presupposing the motive to be revenue and the needs of the Government demanding it. But, sir, I scorn the use of such doubtful weapons.

I do not fancy our internal-revenue system as framed and maintained these many years last past and in the last Congress gave evidence of the fact, but the indications are that it is to be a permanency. If so, inasmuch as tillage has been its victim hitherto, I demand in the name of common justice that the system be made subordinate to its protection to the extent of relief contemplated in this bill. For one I do not even insist upon the retention of the full amount of the tax called for if gentlemen are so fearful of "taxing this new legitimate and thriving industry," or as some prefer to call it rascally swindle, out of existence. Reduce it if you will, but compel it to sail under its own colors—the black flag of taint and suspicion. Require it to wear its label as a sheep-killing cur does his muzzle, and the mischief being wrought by unjust, unequal, dishonest competition will soon have an end.

Butter can look with sovereign contempt upon its diminutive namesake if you will only brand on his forehead the name he should wear. To do it some tax is essential. Is the demand or the amount extravagant? It does not so appear to me. Those who higgle at its enormity, to be consistent, should assail the tyranny of the Government for suppressing the ancient brotherhood of counterfeiters of coin, note-lifters, and kindred "chevaliers of industry."

The claim set up by its advocates that it is the poor man's butter is, I hold, ridiculously fallacious, whether it be based upon the assumption that it is good enough for such or that it is so adapted on the score of economy. Of course, as it can be made at about one-third of the cost of genuine butter, it might be sold at something like one-half and leave a liberal margin for profit. Presumably when sold at first hand it is so sold. But, sir, by the time it reaches the great army of consumers, with its earmarks left behind and then claiming to be what it is not, the price approximates that of honest butter

Has any one on this floor ever called for it, in laying in his family groceries? Does any flatter himself that he does not get it more or less mixed in with butter, unless he knows his dealer or can trace it to its source? Does he lay the oleaginous unction to his confiding soul that he usually gets true butter at public tables? Mr. Chairman, if the commodity were actually made out of clean and honest fats, as the makers claim it is, it would still be a fraud if sold for what it is not. But when the offal and refuse of the slaughter-house and cattle-yard enter into its fabric, as is generally believed and stoutly maintained, it should be accounted a felony and treated as such whether sold as genuine or imitation butter.

Mr. Chairman, my limited knowledge of natural history recalls but few animals, notably the jackal and turkey-buzzard, that revel in carrion. For one I do not propose to enter the field of dietetic competition against these foul creatures, nor do I intend that my constituents shall, without being forewarned if possible.

If any prefer that sort of diet, none can gainsay them, for there is no accounting for taste. But others, more fastidious, should be permitted to decline the savory meal. Hence, I repeat, this thing should be required to sail under its own name. Why does the plethoric manufacturer object to it? I will tell you why. He knows full well that its name would be its knell; and that his occupation would be gone, or would degenerate to its proper level, that of soap-boiler, if it did. And let me tell you, sir, that he will then have entered upon a more honorable vocation.

Of course it would be a source of regret to a sympathizing world if great constitutional sticklers and lawmakers, impecunious city editors with a bare circulation of 100,000, and boards of trade, actuated purely by considerations of public good in their opposition to this measure, should be deprived of their coveted oleo. In consideration of real service rendered by these in behalf of bogus butter, common gratitude should prompt the new-fledged soap-maker to reserve a corner of his establishment for their old line of trade, in order to supply the insatiate cravings for their wares entertained by such abnormal gastronomic notables. I opine, however, that the overfastidious hod-carrier, street sweep, and boot-black will thenceforth give the place and its products a wide berth, or hold the nose while passing.

The question has been asked time and again during the course of this discussion, "Can any say that it is unhealthy?" Sir, the query is puerile or it is a blind and a pretext. It is rash to say ex cathedra what is or is not healthy. But medical science tells us that many of the admitted ingredients are noxious and deleterious to health. Whether death is the consequence of their use would, I apprehend, require a post mortem examination in each individual case. To the "doubting Thomases" of the other side I venture to suggest, with a view to a solution of the vexed question, that they authorize the necessary medical and surgical investigation into their individual cause of exit. If the coroner's verdict in all such cases should be, "Died of bogus butter," it might help to resolve the doubts of some future House of skeptics as to the sanitary effects of putrid fats upon the human system.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I earnestly trust that the bill will pass. I ask it in the name of justice to the greatest of agricultural industries. I ask it in the cause of justice in dealing with a bare-faced fraud. I ask it in behalf of the butter-eater as well as the butter-maker. I ask it with an eye to the speedy revision of our tax laws, so that the burden of taxation may fall on articles most suitable and able to bear them, and so be lightened on the overburdened necessaries of life. I ask it in behalf of the meat supply, which is rapidly diminishing under the baleful effects of this new-fledged and nefarious trade. And finally, sir, I demand it as right no less than a boon in the name of the sovereign people whose servants we are. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. I claim the floor for the purpose of reaffirming, after twenty-four hours' reflection, what I said upon this bill yesterday, and I do it the more eagerly lest some member might think I had been influenced by the threat of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] made last evening, that if Pennsylvania protectionists do not sustain the bill the iron industries of the State may be destroyed. Sir, I have great respect for the iron and steel manufacturers of Pennsylvania and their tens of thousands of employés, but there is one man upon whose good opinion I place a higher value, and that is the one with whom I lie down at night and rise in the morning for the performance of duty, and if the iron interests of the country can be saved only by my playing the demagogue, by my abandoning my well-considered convictions, by adhering to which, let me say, I sustained the farmers of Iowa and Wisconsin when the entire sugar interest, planting, importing, and refining, was here to ask Congress to prohibit by taxation the manufacture of sirup or sugar from corn or sorghum—all the arguments made against oleomargarine to-day were made against permitting the production of glucose or sugar from corn or sorghum—and I say if the iron interests of the country can be sustained only by my abandoning the convictions upon which I acted on that occasion, they will not be sustained by me. At that time, sir, I stood the barrier in defense of corn and sorghum growers against the appeals of many of my own constituents, and I do not believe that either the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], who so sharply criticised me in my absence, or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] would have supported the bill which proposed to require every pound of corn or sorghum sugar and every pint of glucose sirup to go out in a stamped package, showing that it had paid a tax, which would have been destructive of the capital engaged in its production. No, sir; the price proposed for the maintenance of the iron interests of the country is so high that I can not undertake to pay it.

As for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] who, like the gentleman from Iowa, in his humility assumed the prerogative of the Almighty and dealt with my motives, and said that he had sat at my feet and recognized me as a teacher for thirty years, but that he has now discovered that the horizon of my vision is bounded by the iron and steel interest, to the utter neglect of the more important and equally honorable interest of agriculture, I can only say that I think he must be mistaken when he says that he had so long accepted me as Gamaliel.

He is a man of extraordinary intelligence, and anybody above the range of idiocy who had read or heard me for thirty years past would know that from the day the war closed I have striven to relieve the farmers of the country from the invidious taxes upon their productions which the necessities of the war had imposed. Sir, it is in their interest that I am to-day fighting this effort to add another internal burden to those they already bear. In these days of peace and an overflowing Treasury why should tobacco pay taxes that you do not impose on cabbage, corn, oats, or rye, unless it be attempted to distil the cereals into an article which makes the farmers' product capable of bearing the cost of transportation?

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. OSBORNE and Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, addressed the Chair and proposed to yield their time to Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. KELLEY. I thank both gentlemen.

Why, I ask, tax tobacco as you do not tax cabbage or other agricultural products? It is a great growth of Wisconsin and Iowa, and is a merchantable product of more than thirty States. Again, sir, one bushel of corn will not carry another and itself from the States which those gentlemen who criticised me represent to an Eastern market; but advance it by one stage of manufacture—put it into alcohol, which our arts demand, our arts which consume more than one-half the spirits produced in the country—put it, I say, into that article which they require to cheapen products consumed by all, make that change, and one bushel will carry five to an Eastern or a foreign market.

You grow tobacco and sell it at less than 2 cents a pound, and the tax on it is 8 cents. I want to relieve the farmer of that tax of 400 per cent. On corn the tax is 90 cents a peck. The law requires the production of, or the payment of duty on, a gallon of proof spirits to the peck of corn, four gallons to the bushel, and I am seeking to relieve the corn-growing constituents of those gentlemen of the infamous tax, for an overflowing Treasury, of $3.60 for converting a bushel of corn into a transportable commodity.

Now, sir, iron and steel, however contracted the vision and base the motives the gentlemen from Iowa and Wisconsin may ascribe to me, do not bound my vision. I wish to carry non-farming populations into the midst of agricultural communities to relieve the pressure on agriculture and to give the small farmer or his wife or daughters a chance to supply markets with chickens and eggs and vegetables and pure butter made from the milk of neighboring dairies.

I was taught by Henry C. Carey that the tariff which would promote the development of the mineral resources of the interior of our country and carry manufacturing industries there was not the iron man's question, was not the manufacturer's question, but was the farmer's question; and so I believe it to be. If these gentlemen see fit to assail that system advocated by my great teacher to the end of his life, and to which I have devoted myself since 1857, with the view of promoting the agricultural interests, let them go over to the other side and vote for free trade and plenty of business in the near future for the sheriff of every agricultural county in the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, I rise to reaffirm every word that I uttered in debate yesterday. As I said in my opening remarks, I regretted exceedingly that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania was not present; but I could not withhold the discussion until he should be here, for there was no assurance that the tariff question would again come up during this session for discussion. I saw what I thought was a criticism which I had a right to make; and when I feel that I have such a right, no length of experience gives a man a patent to gag my lips.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit a brief question? By what parliamentary law may a gentleman speaking on this floor deal with the motives of another member? His arguments are subject to criticism; his motives belong to the relation between himself and the Almighty.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania should say "Henderson, I love you," while with his hand he slapped me in the face, I could judge his motives by his acts better than by his speech. When a distinguished lawmaker on every occasion fights every kind of taxation on banks, on whisky, on beer, on matches, on every form of manufactured articles, but is ever ready with all his power and eloquence to speak for another kind of taxation which, like the dropping dew, may touch every part of the country and every home, I may have the right to judge his motives.

The gentleman assumes here to speak for the people whom I represent and who have placed me here as the guardian of their interests. I thank him for his kind co-operation; but the farmers of Iowa reject the proffered aid. Recognizing his ability in this special field, they come here claiming, almost demanding, this legislation which modestly but firmly and fearlessly I am advocating on this floor.

Mr. Chairman, no man would regret more than myself one unkind remark to my superior in age and vastly my superior in intellectual power. If aught that I have said of a personal nature wounds the gentleman, no one could be prompter than myself to withdraw it; but so far as I have made the utterance that the Western country demands and will have protection—by argument if need be, but by war if necessary—I retract not a word. On that ground I stand, and will stand. I insist that tariff legislation is not the only medium by which the rights of the people can be protected; and the East must recognize the fact that the great center, West and South, must be heard on this floor and justly dealt with. That is what I said yesterday; it is what I say now; and a thousand times I emphasize it since I have the attentive ear of my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PRICE obtained the floor.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that some gentlemen should ask me whether, when I spoke of "war," I meant a conflict of arms. No, sir; I meant the intellectual conflict by the weapons planted in brave and manly minds—that and that only.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, no gentleman on this floor could regret more than I do——

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Sitting within two feet of the gentleman from Wisconsin, on account of the confusion in the Hall he can not be heard.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] says it is well. Now, ordinarily to reach his ear you would have to have a voice that would reach to the race-course. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HAMMOND. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that members standing in the aisles and the area be requested to take their seats.

The CHAIRMAN. Members will resume their seats.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I was about to remark no gentleman on the floor possibly could more regret any allusion which by any possibility could wound the feelings of my venerable and distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] than I would. But I desire to submit to the House the remarks I made, and then a statement of just exactly what those remarks were based upon, and to appeal to their intelligent judgment as to whether in anything I said I was unfair or even discourteous.

Yesterday in the remarks submitted by me I used the following language:

I have always admired the gentleman as one of the nation's ablest defenders of our protective system. I have always honored him for his fidelity to the interests of his State; but the horizon of his vision is bounded by the iron and steel interest to the utter neglect of the more important and equally honorable interests of agriculture.

To keep up a protective tariff he would release liquors and tobacco from their just contribution to our revenues, and having proceeded this far it is not strange that he should antagonize this measure.

Now, am I justified in making that statement? I find in a speech made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania on yesterday the following:

I was then, as I am now, opposed to adding to the resources of a Treasury that so overflows with revenues as to require us to erect United States court-houses where no courts are held and custom-houses where no customs are collected, and the appointment of commissioners to inquire whether the beds of certain supposed streams had better be deepened and broadened into navigable proportions, or be so smoothed down to make the bed of a railroad. [Laughter.]

I desire to state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania while he has been studying the subject of protection that he has forgotten entirely the subject of finance. I wish, therefore, to recall to his attention this fact, that to-day men are crowding these halls and these corridors to whom this Government owes money for labor well performed, requiring Congressional action for their payment. The gentleman with all the years of his experience has sat as a member of the only body which could furnish honest remuneration for honest toil to liquidate honest debts against the Government and has failed utterly to do so.

The average Congressman, as a rule, is too profoundly great to stoop to the plebeian duty of paying the nation's debts. [Great laughter and applause.] If they paid those debts it would exhaust our present surplus as well as our revenues for the next decade. [Continued laughter and applause.]

So much for that. Now, I wish to call the attention of the committee to another thing. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] said a few years ago—and I quote from his speech as published——

A MEMBER. What are you reading from?

Mr. PRICE. I am reading from a speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania made one year ago in this Hall and published in the RECORD:

I do not believe that a cheapening of goods which involves a reduction of wages can relieve any stagnant American industry.

Is the gentleman in favor of cheapening goods which will lessen the products of the dairies of our country? Has the gentleman changed his ground in one year? Is he now proposing to advocate the doctrine of protection to an article which in his characteristic language a year ago he styled as "cheap and nasty?"

It is not cheap; there is nothing before this House, no testimony before the committee to show that it is cheap, while the concurrent testimony of all of them is that it certainly is nasty. It is nasty and it is not cheap. And yet the gentleman says he makes objection to me for regretting that his views are bounded by the iron hills of Pennsylvania, when he will do this thing. What other excuse could I offer?

Mr. KELLEY. You can not offer any. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PRICE. I would like to apologize for you, sir, on the ground of your former usefulness. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

Now, sir, I will read again from the same speech made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania:

Are our Democratic associates in their mad pursuit of cheap goods willing to add pernicious anæmia to the list of diseases with which our working people are already familiar?

[Laughter.]

Again, from the same speech I quote the distinguished authority of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in support of the bill we are advocating:

Under their leadership we are to enter the race with the world for cheapness. They should remember that when Cobden and his co-workers began the agitation for free trade Carlyle admonished them that they were entering into a race with barbarous nations for the production of the "cheap and nasty." It was he, too, that gave the political economy taught by Malthus and Ricardo the appellation of the "dismal science," because it suggested war, pestilence, and famine as beneficent agents appointed by an all-wise and loving Providence as the only agents whereby He could relieve the earth of an inevitable surplus of population. That dismal science still prevails in British schools, and consequently no animal that can be utilized is of so little value in England as an unemployed working man or woman with a reasonably good appetite for bean-cake or oatmeal porridge.

"Yes," I think I hear some of you rejoin. "You studied the poverty of London, which is, we are ready to admit, unparalleled." No; I spent ten days, unknown to everybody but my daughter, who was my companion, in Birmingham and in visiting the manufacturing towns around that rich and beautiful city. We visited so much of the overcrowded precincts of the city itself as a lady might ride into, and in charge of a policeman I went beyond these limits. Our visits embraced Holesowen, Leye, Leye-waste, and Cradley, where we found women making nails, trace-chains, heavy fire-bricks, and galvanizing hollow-ware.

This brief extract will convince you I do not speak of things I merely heard of. Yet, sir, from this same old country comes this fraud, comes this invention, comes this cheat on the industries of our country, and we merely propose, following the line of policy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and in view of the facts which I have quoted from his speech to you, following him up in his line of protection to iron and other industries of his State, to protect the country from this unhealthy food, this cheap product, which sweeps out the industries of our farmers. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes in with a proposition to injure them still further by proposing to legalize the distillation of corn into a vile stuff which debauches and degrades and damns everything it touches throughout our land. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANCHARD was recognized.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to make a privileged motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate upon this section, and I will give the floor afterward to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BLANCHARD. With that understanding I will yield the floor.

Mr. COWLES. Will this cut off amendments?

Mr. HATCH. It will not cut off amendments.

Mr. DUNHAM. But there can be no debate upon amendments if the motion prevails.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I wish to offer an amendment to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes a privileged motion, which is that the committee now rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 104, noes 39.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not require a quorum.

Mr. VAN EATON. I demand tellers on the motion.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration House bill 8328, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue, and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the first section of the bill and amendments be limited to five minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to amend, that there be no limit upon the debate.

The SPEAKER. That would be equivalent to a negative vote on the pending motion. If the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is rejected there will be no limit to debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then I move to amend by making it thirty minutes.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 91.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

Mr. HATCH (one of the tellers). I am informed by the gentleman from Arkansas that he desires to offer a substantial amendment to the first section of the bill. I have no desire to cut off debate upon substantive amendments.

The SPEAKER. But the motion of the gentleman is to limit all debate to five minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to amend that and say fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Say twenty.

Mr. HATCH. Very well; I will so modify the motion and make it twenty minutes.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH as modified, it was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill the title of which has been read. By order of the House all debate upon the first section of the bill and amendments thereto is limited to twenty minutes. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

This bill I regard as a most remarkable measure. It stands unique among the measures pending before this House. Of all the propositions to be found in all of the five or six thousand bills and resolutions which have been introduced at this session of Congress the one embodied in this bill is the most preposterous, the most unjustly, unfairly, invidiously discriminative.

What is this proposition? It is one made by the dairy interests of the country that, in order to have their products increase in price, a legitimate industry of the country shall be stricken down. The bill, sir, is a fraud on its face. It comes here as a bill "defining butter and imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine." And yet, Mr. Chairman, to be truthful it should have been labeled "A bill to increase the price of dairy products," because that is its real object and its only object. A bill to raise revenue, forsooth! I feel tempted, sir, to paraphrase a well-known quotation and cry out "Oh, revenue, what crimes are committed in thy name!"

The dairy industry of the country finding itself confronted by a cheaper article, which is in the nature of butter and yet not butter, but which is a wholesome food, finding itself about to be outdone in the markets of the country, seeks a transfer of its quarrels and its troubles to the Halls of Congress, and asks the National Legislature to strike down a rival industry which is in its way. Is that fair? Is that in accordance with the principle so dear to Americans—"an open field and fair race to all?" Sir, a true and proper spirit animating American industry would prompt it to ask nothing at the hands of Government except the policy of no intermeddling, that principle of non-interference which was embodied in the modest request of Diogenes to Alexander—"Stand out of my light, out of my sunshine.

This bill, sir, is the very antipode of that principle. The dairy interests of the country have no more right to ask the national aid in their behalf, no more right to ask that their productions be increased in value or price by legislation than have the cotton interests, the wheat interests, or the thousand and one other interests of the country to come here and through their Representatives introduce and pass bills increasing the price of their several products.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have but a moment and can not yield.

I deny, sir, that the farming interests of the country are asking the passage of this bill. That portion of the farming interest of the country engaged in the dairy industry is; but the thousands upon thousands of farmers of the South and consumers all over the country are not asking at the hands of Congress the enactment of this unfair, unjust, ungenerous, illiberal, and intolerant legislation. It is class legislation of the most objectionable character. It is false in principle and false in the pretenses under which it comes before the House, and I trust will never be enacted into law by the American Congress.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, line 6, strike out the words "with or," where they last occur; so that it will read "with or without common salt, and without additional coloring matter."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the bill in proposing to prevent a fraud upon butter permits what may be termed a mild fraud in the production of butter itself, for it finds no fault with the products of milk and cream being artificially colored so as to deceive the purchaser as to the richness of the food products that have been used in the production of the butter.

We know that coloring matter is not always pure and wholesome. Perhaps there is no gentleman on this floor who has not been told by his family physician that the most injurious ingredient in the candies that are sold is the coloring matter they contain. Now, if the committee wishes to be thoroughgoing in their reform and prevention of fraud, I trust they will not permit coloring matter which for aught we know may be poisonous to be used in the production of butter.

But, like most of the gentlemen on the floor, I have some observations to offer on the bill in addition to what may be germane to a pending amendment. I shall make part of them now, and I may be able to introduce the other parts before we finish discussing the bill under the five-minute rule.

It was said last night by some gentleman, whose name I do not recall, that we have a precedent for discriminating in internal taxes as this bill proposes. I was surprised at the statement, and did not believe then that the gentleman was correct; and I have found out since that he was incorrect. He stated that we tax artificial wines 10 cents a pint, which is partly correct; but his conclusion is wrong. It is interesting, Mr. Chairman, to see what is and has been done in this. If gentlemen will look at section 3328 of the Revised Statutes—and a good deal has been said about this item quietly around on the floor—they will find this:

On all wines, liquors, and compounds known or denominated as wine, and made in imitation of sparkling wine, or champagne, but not made from grapes grown in the United States, &c.—

There is a tax of 10 cents a pint.

Mr. STRUBLE. Read the rest of that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have read enough to enforce my point. The rest the gentleman can read when he has the floor. It does not contradict what I state.

Now, I want to call attention to the origin of that law. Its origin will be found in an act passed in 1866—a revenue act. It had been found that imitations of imported champagne were being made in this country and depriving the Government of revenue. Therefore, in that act, on page 158, section 36, it is provided that—

On all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne, and put up in bottles in imitation of any imported wine, &c.

This tax shall be levied. The act was not to stimulate the production of wine in this country, but it was to prevent frauds upon the revenue; and if gentlemen will trace it back from its very inception they will see where the internal tax has kept pace with the import tax; and when this fraud upon the revenue was found to exist you find the specification inserted as I have just read, although you see how it started and the purpose, and it is still limited to sparkling wine or champagne. The amount is somewhat reduced, and I think it clear that the purpose and principle of this bill finds no precedent here.

I was all the more surprised at the statement or opinion expressed last night because I had read this in the case cited by the committee in their report, which I propose to treat of more fully before we get through, because I had read this in the dissenting opinion of the two judges of the Supreme Court in which they criticise the decision made in the case cited by the committee but they do not criticise the ground upon which the court says it made its decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the debate on this section during the time assigned to it by order of the House before putting the question on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas. It will be considered as pending.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas is practically the same as one which I was proposing to offer, and I rise simply to support his amendment. The object of the amendment to my mind is to prevent deception. The practice of coloring butter has grown to be an evil, not perhaps as great as that of the manufacture of oleomargarine, but a deception so great as in the aggregate to be an immense imposition upon the people of this country. It comes about mainly through the packers and shippers perhaps. A grocer buys the butter of a neighborhood manufactured by A, B, C, and D; of cleanly and uncleanly housewives; of people who make good butter and people who make filthy butter. That butter is bought by the grocer and packed every night or at the end of every week, as the case may be, and by the packer is colored. The parcels of ring-streaked and speckled butter brought in during the day or the week are worked over and colored in packing. The mass goes into a firkin and is shipped as the butter of a single family or of a single producer, and presumably all originally of the same color. There could be no other purpose in applying the color chemicals except to deceive.

If that is not a deception, then the manufacture of oleomargarine and palming it off as butter is not deception. Why? The man who tests the firkin or other package of butter, if there is no coloring matter in it, is able to judge somewhat of the quality, and whether it is made at one place or at a dozen places, whether it is of one quality or of a dozen qualities; but when the packer colors the butter and mixes up the butter manufactured by the cleanly housewife with that made by the slovenly one, he has extinguished all means of detection. Both kinds of butter, the good and the bad, go into the same package and are made of the same color, and the imposition on the public is complete. But for use of the coloring chemicals the several qualities could never be mixed.

Mr. FUNSTON. Does the coloring change the quality of the butter?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The coloring may not have anything to do with the quality, but no man can say but that the purchaser of the butter is deceived. If the coloring matter were not in that butter, the purchaser would be enabled to know by examination whether the butter was made at one home or all over a neighborhood. There is another reason why butter coloring should be abandoned. It not only deceives the purchaser, but it exposes butter to the cunning of the counterfeiter. The coloring that goes into butter has made it easy for the butterine manufacture to duplicate the farmers' product.

If we are going to strike at counterfeits let us hit the first one we find in the bill.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read the resolutions recently adopted by the Knights of Labor which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas certain measures are now pending in Congress for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of butterine and oleomargarine, and the imposition of taxes thereon, amounting to a prohibition; and

Whereas the manufacture and sale of this article is a legitimate business, furnishing a clean, palatable, healthy, and nutritious article of food at a reasonable price; and that the effect of this legislation will be to increase the price of a cheap and wholesome food product and destroy the labor its manufacture employs; and

Whereas the only reason given for this legislation is that it comes into competition with butter; it is

Resolved, That we protest against the passage of such measures as unjust and injurious to the laboring classes, and as opposed to the principles of sound public policy; it is Further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of this assembly.

The foregoing preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted at a joint session of assemblies 4080, 1597, 4052, 4327, 5499, 5959, and 1912 of the Knights of Labor for the purpose of taking prompt action in regard to a bill now pending before Congress entitled "A bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of butterine or oleomargarine."

[SEAL.]

G. S. CHAMPLIN, M. W. 4080.
D. A. WHITE,
Financial Secretary L. A. 4080.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have also communications on this subject from the Chicago Live-Stock Exchange and from the Union Stock-Yard and Transit Company, which are as follows:

CHICAGO LIVE-STOCK EXCHANGE, UNION STOCK-YARDS,
Chicago, May 10, 1886.

At a full meeting of this association, held in their rooms this day, the following resolutions were reported from the undersigned committee, and were adopted by a unanimous vote:

Whereas bills are now pending in both Houses of Congress proposing special taxes on all manufacturers and venders of oleomargarine and butterine, and also proposing an internal-revenue tax of 10 cents on each pound of those articles made in this country, and placing the production and sale of them under charge of the Internal Revenue Bureau; and

Whereas the proposed laws, while purporting to be revenue bills, are in reality intended to stop the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine in this country: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Chicago Live-Stock Exchange, That we are firmly opposed to the passage of any law prohibiting or taxing the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine or butterine for the following reasons:

1. The leading chemists of this country have repeatedly examined and pronounced oleomargarine and butterine healthful articles of food. This being the case, Congress has no right to prohibit their manufacture or sale; and to subject them to taxation when revenue is not needed is equally a violation of constitutional rights.

2. In this market prime fat cattle are worth at least $2 per head more than they would bring if the manufacture of these desirable articles of food was prohibited or burdened with unjust taxation, and the materials now used in their manufacture were thus compelled to be used in other channels.

3. The price of choice grades of butter is frequently so high as to place them beyond the reach of people of moderate means, who can now get a wholesome and palatable substitute at a low price, but who would, if the proposed laws should be enacted, be compelled to eat poor butter or do without.

Resolved, That the secretary of this exchange be instructed to forward copies of these resolutions to our Senators and Members in Congress and to furnish a copy to the press.

IRUS COY,
L. B. DOUD,
J. C. BOHART,
SAMUEL WAUGH,
B. F. HARRISON,
Committee.
C. W. BAKER, Secretary.

CHICAGO, May 18, 1886.

DEAR SIR: By reports from Washington we learn that a strong effort is being made in the House to enact a law taxing oleomargarine and butterine, ostensibly as a revenue measure, but really intending to prohibit by excessive taxation the manufacture of those articles in this country. We believe the American people can not afford to have this done.

It is a well-known fact that these articles are made from beef fat, leaf lard, and vegetable oils, mixed with milk, cream, the best butter and salt, and the best qualities of these articles are necessarily used in order to make the oleomargarine and butterine stand the test of examination and use. All these ingredients are daily used as choice and wholesome food at the tables of all educated and refined people in this land.

The leading chemists of this country have repeatly examined and pronounced oleomargarine and butterine healthful and palatable articles of food.

In this market prime fat cattle are worth at least $2 per head more than they would bring if the manufacture of these desirable articles of food was prohibited.

Thousands of poor people are to-day enabled to have butterine and oleomargarine on their tables who would have to eat dry bread, being unable to pay the price of genuine butter, no more palatable nor wholesome than these, if this law is passed.

The manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine does not depreciate the price of good butter, for the reason that good, first-class butter is required in its manufacture, and it creates a new demand for the best article. The only persons it can injure are those engaged in the making of poor, unwholesome butter, while it is of great benefit to the laboring masses and a source of pecuniary advantage to the great stock-growing interest of this whole country. We are opposed to any measure that has a tendency to increase the price of the food supply used by the laboring masses. We believe the people should enjoy the privilege of buying cheaply oleomargarine and butterine if they prefer it to poor, or even common, butter, and that any law tending to increase the price of these articles, or to prohibit their manufacture, would be very detrimental to the interests of the whole country.

Yours, respectfully,

JOHN B. SHERMAN.

Hon. FRANK LAWLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the members of this House that I regard the step which they contemplate taking in the passage of this bill as one that will do great injustice to more than a million of men who have petitioned against the passage of the bill. This is an effort to protect the farmer. The farmer ought to be protected, it is true, but in the large cities in certain years there have been times when the farmer's product known as dairy butter has brought from 50 to 65 cents a pound. Only a year ago in this city it brought 60 cents a pound, and in the city of Chicago we have known times when butter brought 65 or 66 cents a pound.

I appeal to you gentlemen to go with me into the households of the poor working people of Chicago, who are receiving only 80 or 90 cents or a dollar a day, and tell me how people receiving such small compensation and having large families dependent upon them can afford out of their wages to buy butter at 50 or 60 cents a pound. I tell you that the great underlying cause of the trouble to-day in the United States is the fact that in twelve years but one bill has been passed by Congress in the interest of the toiling masses of the United States. I know it is unpleasant and unpopular for men to get up here and face public opinion and the press of the country, and as a consequence the toilers of the United States are aroused now for the first time in twenty-five years.

If you do not believe it, if you think it is idle threat on my part, take the vote cast on this bill to-day, should it pass, keep that vote in your vest pocket until after the next fall elections, and then compare it with the list of the men who are defeated. Why do the workingmen so regard this bill? Because it is an attempt to tax a food product in the interest of a class. The toilers of this country, the people who pay the taxes to carry on this Government, have not asked for the passage of this bill. On the contrary, they say to this Congress: "We protest against the passage of the bill. We object to your raising revenue by assessing a cheap food product like this oleomargarine and butterine that are now used so largely by us."

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, all debate upon the first section of the bill is now closed. The Clerk will report the first amendment pending to this section, after which the Chair will entertain any amendments that may be offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 1, line 6, strike out the words "with, or," where they last occur, so that it will read "with or without common salt and without additional coloring matter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no other amendments offered to this section the Clerk will report the next section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine," namely: All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all mixtures and compounds of oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine-oil, butterine, lardine. suine, and neutral; all lard extracts and tallow extracts; and all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef-fat, suet, lard, lard-oil, vegetable-oil annotto, and other coloring matter, intestinal fat, and offal fat made in imitation or semblance of butter, or calculated or intended to be used as butter or for butter.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend the section by striking out the last word. Sir, I was very sorry yesterday that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] saw proper, for purposes best known to himself, to attack not the distinguished "father of the House" individually, but Pennsylvania generally, because forsooth some members from Pennsylvania see fit to differ with the gentleman from Iowa on the question of oleomargarine. Starting out in his remarks, he said, "I am not an iron-clad tariff man, and I hereby give notice to Pennsylvania that if her Representatives do not stand by the farmers of the West we will not stand by Pennsylvania."

Mr. Chairman, so far as I am individully concerned I have no favor to ask either on the tariff question or any other question from any individual member or from any section of this country. So far as Pennsylvania is concerned, she has no favor to ask on the subject of tariff for protection. I believe that the question of protection is a national question. It is a question in which all the people of this country are concerned. It is a question in which gentlemen from South Carolina, from Oregon, from Iowa, from every State in this Union should have an interest. It is no local question. I am sick and tired of having gentlemen thrust into the ears of Pennsylvanians the intimation that they are cringing and begging for protection for Pennsylvania alone. Pennsylvania can stand free trade just as well as Iowa can stand it; and we are asking no favors. If gentlemen would only represent the sentiment of the whole country on this question, and not merely localities, there would be no reason for making invidious remarks based upon the geographical relations of gentlemen favoring or opposing this particular bill.

Now, let me call attention to this fact: If there is one industry in the United States that requires less protection than any other it is the dairy interest, for I have noticed during my lifetime that milk, cheese, butter, calves, cows, and dairy products generally have been constantly rising in price, while iron, cotton, and woolen goods and other manufactured articles have been falling. Statistics will show that if there is one set of people who have no right to ask for special protection at the expense of other farm products it is the dairymen of this country.

Besides, sir, I have understood protection to be a union of the American people against foreign pauper labor—a union of the people of all the States against the foreign monopolist—not that one State should array itself against another because of any local interest; not that the cotton interests should array themselves against the woolen interests because of difference of locality; not that the North should array itself against the South because of any peculiar institution of either; not that any section or any business in the country should array itself against any other section or any other business, but that we should all, man by man, throughout this country stand up against foreign pauper labor, against the foreign monopolist, against that wretched "dump" from foreign countries which has been the bane of American industry and the worst enemy of the American farmer.

Mr. STRUBLE addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, I can not but think this bill is here under false pretenses, and therefore I shall vote against it. It can only be here as a revenue bill; and as such it comes here. In the discussion its advocates claim it is not here for the purpose of putting revenue into the Treasury for the support of the Government, but to brand and mark a counterfeit product, that it may not be imposed on the public as genuine.

They tell us it is here to prevent fraud. When we get further on and an amendment is proposed to reduce this tax of 10 cents a pound to 2 cents, which will give all the needed remedy and security against fraud and which will leave the bill with the means provided for showing what this substitute for butter is when it is put on the market or on the public table, then we will see whether its friends have declared or disclosed its real purpose. When such a proposition is offered we shall learn, Mr. Chairman, whether these gentlemen are telling us the truth when they say all they want is that this thing shall be sold for what it is.

But it was not for the purpose of stating objections to this bill, Mr. Chairman, that I took the floor. I sought the floor some time ago, when the senior gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] took his seat, to make some short reply to him. I want to prevent the next war now threatened between Pennsylvania and Iowa. [Laughter.]

I want also to put the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania at ease, because he seems to be disturbed lest the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] will vote at some time against protection. [Laughter.]

Why, sir, he need not feel alarmed. [Laughter and applause.] No, sir. Two weeks from now he will find the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], both of whom have to-day caused him apprehension, dancing between the tellers after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to protect all his Pennsylvania iron and whatever else he demands protection upon by the continuance of the existing tariff. [Laughter and applause.]

Why, a dozen years ago the Republican members of Iowa, and I believe of Wisconsin, were found walking through the tellers upon this floor voting against the gentleman from Pennsylvania and in favor of taking the tax off of salt to put in this good butter—Iowa and Wisconsin butter. When two weeks from now that question is again presented to gentlemen from Iowa and Wisconsin they will dance through the tellers after the gentleman from Pennsylvania to keep the tax on salt which a few years ago their predecessors voted off. [Laughter.] In these last ten or fifteen years gentlemen from the Northwest, Republican gentlemen, have been disciplined. They know now and do what the gentleman from Pennsylvania and other protectionists require of them. Oh, no, there will be no war; Iowa will protect and continue the tax on iron and salt. When we propose, and we do propose, to take the tax off of planks and wood and boards to afford shelter to the cows, without which butter will all be butterine, you will see them, the gentlemen from Iowa, voting with the gentleman from Pennsylvania to keep up a high rate of tariff tax on plank boards and wood all the same as Pennsylvanians do on iron, and all with the votes of Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska together. In these States and largely in my own shelter for cows and other domestic animals, as well as for the people less favored financially, are built of the same material—wood; but the Representatives from these States will not vote to cheapen that shelter. They will vote right along with the gentleman from Pennsylvania and other protectionists who they are now trying to scold into voting a tax on something to eat which is poor food untaxed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to ask him whether the duty imposed by the tariff on the lumber which affords the shelter he has referred to amounts to a protective duty?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes; if that tax be taken off five houses can be built with the money which now builds four. Up in Maine you produce nothing but some good men, pine trees, and fish; we will take care of the fish afterward. [Laughter.] That is to say, if the Pennsylvania and Iowa war would go on or begin so we could have the help of Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas to remove unnecessary taxes, but I can hardly expect so much.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The duty on it is not enough to produce revenue.

Mr. MORRISON. With the permission of the committee I wish to say a word in reply to Judge KELLEY as to internal taxes so much discussed in this debate. If additional revenue is wanted, this is a very proper subject for taxation according to my view of taxation. Taxing a thing is equivalent to taking a part of it, and I have always insisted that we should tax and take part of what can best be spared. So if we must have a revenue from butter or its substitutes, then it would be rightly imposed, not on natural and pure butter, but on the artificial and not so pure, because it is better to tax and to some extent deprive people of the use of what is not so good than of that admitted to be better.

Mr. Chairman, this thing of paying taxes is not a pleasant pastime. I would not, and suppose no one would, for the mere love of the thing, impose or keep up taxes even on whisky or on tobacco. But I do think it is a little wiser to put taxes on whisky and tobacco than on some other things which are more necessary to the health and comfort of our fellow-men, at least I think it is best to so divide the burdens of taxation that spirits and tobacco shall bear a considerable part.

Is our venerable friend from Pennsylvania [Judge KELLEY], or anybody else to stand here and talk of taking off the internal-revenue tax and expect to be believed? Do they mean what they say? Are they in earnest? Can it be done? How and where are we to get the money to carry on the Government and discharge all its moneyed obligations?

Mr. HISCOCK was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. MORRISON.

Mr. MORRISON. I very much dislike taking the time of a protectionist while criticising the doctrine. [Laughter.] Yet I am very thankful to the gentleman from New York. I once threw a stone—or a lot of taxed salt, which is heavier—his way, for I would not have him treated worse than we were trying to treat other protectionists. [Renewed laughter.]

I have asked, Mr. Chairman, do gentlemen mean to take off the internal-revenue taxes when they tell us they do? Our customs, or revenue from tariff taxes, is now about $175,000,000. This is and always has been with our people the method of tax-paying, if not the most preferred, the least objected to; and I have said over and over again that this system of customs taxes a hundred years old will continue; certainly in my time it will not be dispensed with. No reasonable man expects that it will be or desires it should be.

It will be exacting its demands and in operation when I am neither on this floor nor elsewhere above ground. The time will come when a choice can be made between the two systems. Those here to make the choice will determine whether they will put the taxes for the support of the Government all upon their food, clothing, and means of comfortable living, or only a part of it on these and some of it on these and some of it on whisky and tobacco. I think it would be better and wiser to put less upon the clothing, food, and shelter and more on the whisky and tobacco; but, I repeat, the choice will not be made in my time.

Taxes on imported goods are so high now that to make them higher gives us less revenue. What do you get now? One hundred and seventy-five or one hundred and eighty millions of dollars. Your expenses for administering the Government, that you will be required to vote this session, will be nearly $150,000,000, and it will never be much less, notwithstanding all our Democratic economy. [Laughter and applause.] It will grow with the growth of our people and may be estimated at one hundred and fifty millions.

The talk of reducing the annual expense of administration to $100,000,000 will never be realized. Then your cost of ordinary administration, without anything for the public debt or pensions, will require all your revenue from customs or tariff taxes except $25,000,000, which is but half your annual interest. You then require from sources other than customs $25,000,000 for interest and $75,000,000 for pensions. Where is this $100,000,000 to come from? And are we to pay nothing on the principal of the debt? The contract requires another $40,000,000 for this purpose. Have you not gone on here session after session increasing the pension-roll until it is now $75,000,000 a year? And do you not intend to pay it? Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] intend to pay what he votes for pensions?

Mr. OATES (from his seat). Eighty-one millions of dollars.

Mr. MORRISON. Where, without internal taxes, is the money to come from to pay that?

Mr. BRUMM. Issue greenbacks and pay it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, and who will pay the "greenbacks?" That is like all sham pretenses. It will not pay anything. We have gone over that road once.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that any man who has any intelligence about the condition of the country, its resources, the sources from which it derives its income, must admit that we can not dispense with the internal-revenue tax.

We might dispense with the tax on tobacco. We might spare that much. If gentlemen prefer to dispense with that and lighten the burden of indulgence that the load may rest upon those things essential to comfortable existence, then we can free tobacco and still pay the $24,000,000 into the Treasury on our houses and farms, or means of maintaining them, our tools of trade, food and clothing, and provided we do not increase or grant any more pensions. But I still insist that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Judge KELLEY], or any one else who talks of abolishing the internal-revenue system of taxation now can not mean what he says. He does not mean what he says unless he means to wipe out the pension-roll and refuse to pay the interest. [Applause.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to inform the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] that there is one Representative at least from the State of Iowa who is sound on both the lumber and butter questions. But I regard this tariff discussion as an intruder here. The pending question seems to be so oily that it is hard to confine it in its proper sphere.

Now, there are two inquiries which arise in my mind concerning this bill. First, is it constitutional? The second, is it expedient? I answer both in the affirmative. It will not be denied that this is a constitutional bill, and I believe that the effect of the bill will be healthful and beneficial in every respect.

Next to the revenue which will result from it will follow the stripping of this industry from the disguise under which it sails, and it will be remitted to honest competition with the butter-maker. It now competes as butter when it is not butter. I can not see how any class of our people can complain if they are allowed to buy it, knowing what it is. But it is now sailing under the dairy flag when it ought to be sailing under the oleomargarine flag.

I can not see that any effect of this bill will be bad or deleterious. It does not destroy competition. Competition remains, but butter goes into the market in competition with oleomargarine instead of in competition with a false and spurious and fraudulent imitation of butter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Does not this compel oleomargarine to go into the market as a competitor with butter with a tax of 10 cents a pound upon its back?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No, sir; it compels it to go into the market as oleomargarine, subject to a tax which holds it to honest competition. The tax has the effect of doing away with the fraud. What objection can there be to that?

A MEMBER. Would not a less tax serve that purpose?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Whether a less tax might not reach the same result I am not prepared to say.

It is insisted by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that we have no right to question motives. Let us apply that to the whole discussion.

The gentlemen who advocate oleomargarine here say oleomargarine looks like butter, smells like butter, and operates like butter; and so this bill looks like a revenue bill, reads like a revenue bill, and will operate as a revenue bill. Let it pass.

Mr. BRUMM. And therefore the greater its deception.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There is no deception about it.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to assure the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] that I thoroughly sympathize with him in the regret he expressed about the condition of the Democratic party on the subject of the tariff. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, says this bill is a fraud. If it be a fraud, it is in its proper place here provoking a discussion upon the tariff question. Is there a greater fraud before the American people to-day than the pretense of tariff reformers that they propose to pass and can pass a tariff bill in this House? What is it here for? The gentleman from Arkansas very eloquently said not very long ago: "How did you come here? What are you staying here for?" I ask the gentleman from Illinois to answer these questions if he deems it worth while. Why do you hold over the industries of this country a pall, a club, a threat of destruction, when you know that the utmost that can come of your attempted legislation upon the tariff at this session of Congress will be to end the whole thing in a threat, and nothing more?

How does it happen you have stricken off from a single product in my State by the presence in this Congress of the Morrison tariff bill during the last thirty days $3,000,000? For that is the exact net reduction upon the product of wool alone in Ohio. How does it happen that you have stricken down the industry peculiar to my Congressional district, so far as Ohio is concerned—the manufacture of salt—when you understand, as I believe, that the utmost you can do will be to menace its destruction, while the Democratic party of Ohio poses before the people of the country as in favor not only of the present protection of those commodities but the restoration of the tariff of the past?

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman from Ohio has asked me several questions. Does he want answers to them?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will not ask the gentleman to speak now.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not want to answer unless you desire me to do so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am speaking to the gentleman in a sort of generic way as the representative of the free-traders on this floor, and their fairest and ablest champion.

Mr. MORRISON. All right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, another word. The side to which I have the honor to belong, the men who believe in protection, do not wonder there is some uneasiness on that side when we reflect that the contingent on which we rely to defeat every species of legislation like the Morrison bill lies in the Democratic party; when we reflect it is the Democrats upon the other side, the men who come here year after year, who join in Presidential nominations side by side with the distinguished free-traders of the country, who then come here and filibuster against the efforts of the free-traders of this House to bring forward their measures to destroy the interests of the country.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The present tariff law, enacted when the Republican party had the control of both Houses and the Executive, taxes rough boards $2 per thousand feet and allows railroad ties to come in free. Does the gentleman justify that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will talk to the gentleman from Iowa about that when that question comes up. I am sympathizing now with the Democratic party for their own misfortune, and if the gentleman comes inside the Democratic party and defends it, well and good; if he desires to stand outside the party and defend it, all right; and if he hangs in mid air, all right. But he must wait for his time, and not inject it into my five-minute speech.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It would improve your speech.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman speaks of railroad ties. I am talking of the disintegration of the Democratic party that was bewailed so eloquently by the gentleman from Arkansas yesterday.

Mr. HEPBUBN. I would suggest that my colleague [Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa] himself might answer that question as well as the gentleman from Ohio, because he supported the same tariff bill for a good many years. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there is one thing I never did, which my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] did. I never denounced the Republican party as being "so rotten that the Goddess of Liberty had to hold her nose when she passed over the Capitol," and then returned to that party when it was more rotten than ever. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I never did anything of that kind, but if I had done it and wanted an excuse I should say that it was because the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] was at that time a member of the party in good standing. [Great laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the gentleman returned to the Republican party while I was still a member of it. "Like the sow that was washed, he returned to his wallowing in the mire." [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I should like to understand the process by which a gentleman who obtains the recognition of the Chair, after waiting several hours for it, finds himself taken off the floor without his own consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time had expired when he was interrupted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], but the Chair indulged gentlemen while they were interchanging the pleasant remarks that the House has just heard. [Laughter.]

The formal amendment was withdrawn, and the Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, as follows:

Section 2, line 13, after the word "butter," insert:
"And all butter containing any coloring matter or any other substance except products of cows' milk or cream: Provided, That nothing in this bill shall prevent the use of salt."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is only to give effect to the amendment which was made to a previous paragraph. It is in accordance with that amendment and should logically be adopted as the other was.

I will consume the balance of my five minutes in continuing the few observations that I desire to make on this bill. I have remarked to the House that the opinion of some gentlemen in debate last evening to the contrary notwithstanding, there is no case in the history of our internal taxation where a tax has been laid with the view of encouraging one industry and putting down another. I had thought that there could not be such a case from my general knowledge of the internal-revenue laws, and my opinion was further strengthened by reading the opinion of the court in the case cited by the committee in their report on this bill.

I am about to read, however, a portion of the opinion which the committee did not cite. The dissenting judges in the case of the Veazie Bank vs. Fenno attributed to the court a basis for the opinion delivered on that occasion, which the court did not acknowledge. The ground that they took for sustaining the 10 per cent. tax upon the State bank circulation was that it was giving effect to the power to provide a currency. They did not sustain it as a discrimination between industries. They said that it was a necessary incident to the power of providing a circulating medium, but the dissenting judges did not rest their dissenting opinion upon that ground, but upon the ground of discrimination between one industry and another in laying an internal tax; and upon that proposition of trying to discriminate between industries to which the States are willing to give citizenship, as it were, Judges Davis and Nelson spoke as follows:

It is true that the present decision strikes only at the power to create banks, but no person can fail to see that the principle involved affects the power to create any other description of corporation, such as railroads, turnpikes, manufacturing companies, and others. This taxation of the powers and faculties of the State governments which are essential to their sovereignty and to the efficient and independent management and administration of their internal affairs is for the first time advanced as an attribute of Federal authority.

Now, sir, this bill is unique. Indeed, sir, I think it is the only proposition of the kind that was ever brought before the American Congress; but of that I can not speak with certainty. These eminent judges said none such had been advanced at that time, December, 1869.

It is a remarkable departure from the whole system of legislation that has characterized us in the past, and it is quite a striking fact that the committee in quoting this report for their authority failed to see that the court had been careful to take exactly the position which they do not attribute to it. The court says this:

The general intent of the Constitution, however, seems plain. The General Government administered by the Congress of the confederation had been reduced to the verge of impotency by the necessity of relying for revenue upon requisitions on the States, and it was a leading object of the adoption of the Constitution to relieve the Government to be organized under it from this necessity and to confer upon it ample power to provide revenue by the taxation of persons and property.

The committee cite the general welfare clause of the Constitution, as if any man in America imagined that it is a grant of power except as to the disposition of the money in the Treasury. No; this is not a Government merely of discretion, though there are some great trusts we may pervert.

But to go back to the case they cite. The court says, page 549:

Having thus in the exercise of undisputed constitutional powers undertaken to provide a currency for the whole country, it can not be questioned that Congress may, constitutionally, secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation. To this end Congress may restrain by suitable enactments the circulation as money of any notes not issued under its own authority. Without this power, indeed, its attempts to secure a sound and uniform currency for the country must be futile.

The court then sustained a Federal tax upon a corporation, or upon the emissions of a corporation—a bank—created by a State, laid not for revenue, it is true; but most guardedly not sustained upon the ground, or pretended as being for the sake, or for the purpose, or upon any assumed or imagined power to depress or burden the business of one class of our citizens in order to give a corresponding profit and advantage to the business of another class. The court says you can tax to two purposes: first, persons and property for revenue; second, State-bank notes in order to sustain or make possible the Federal currency; and here the court stops. It does not say that you can police the industries of the country, which is one thing this bill attempts to do, and which is the least objectionable feature; and it distinctly says that you can not tax to set up one class and to put down and oppress another, which is the main thing this bill proposes to do. Hence when we turn to the case the committee cites we find that it leaves them not only no ground to stand upon, but it positively denies what they claim.

It is quite striking, then, to observe that the very report which the committee cites denies to it every particle of the ground that is claimed. In addition to this, and as further bearing upon the constitutional power claimed, we must all know, as has been frequently stated on this floor, that there are some twenty States which by legislative act have regulated the production and sale of this article. Gentlemen know perfectly well that with us power never reposes in two places at the same time. The States can not have this power to give or deny citizenship and equality or inequality to pursuits and Congress also have the power. It is strange that gentlemen who claim this power for their respective States will yet come upon this floor and ask us also to exercise it, while not denying that their local authorities possess it. It is idle to say that we punish counterfeiting of money. Of what money? Why, of coin or of currency, the only money we issue or authorize. Do we punish the counterfeiting of State scrip? No; the States do that. Neither should we seek to invade any other feature of State jurisdiction. Mr. Chairman, this bill seems to mark a new departure. It contains the germs of immense disorder, and the support it receives must convey grave alarm to every reflecting mind.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will give the gentleman an opportunity when I next obtain the floor.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have said, Mr. Chairman, that if this bill is for the purpose of raising revenue it is constitutional. I have assumed that, while such may be its result, it is not its purpose. It is said, however, on the other hand, that the purpose of the bill is to prevent the sale in our markets of a filthy and unhealthful article as food. If that be the purpose there is not a lawyer professing to know anything about the Constitution who does not know that to declare an act of this kind criminal and impose upon it penalties is beyond the legislative power of the Congress of the United States.

The bill is not intended for that purpose. Even if we had the right to enact legislation of that character, this bill is not designed for that purpose, as I have stated, because it is admitted by every man—I assume it is admitted because I have heard no man contradict it—that oleomargarine may be made and is made a cleanly, healthful food product. This bill proposes to take the cleanly, healthful product and impose upon this legitimate article of food the same penalties—I speak of them as penalties—which it imposes upon the impure and unhealthful commodity. Therefore it is not the purpose of the bill to protect the people from the unhealthful and the impure. I think nobody has pretended that such is its purpose.

It is said, then, that the object of this bill is to prevent oleomargarine—and I use that term to cover all these commodities—from being sold as butter. I submit that such legislation is within the jurisdiction of every State. I assume what I think no man will question, that it is within the power of every municipal corporation in every one of the thirty-eight States of this Union. Does any man question it?

But, it is said, there comes up a cry all over the land from the farming interests of this country for this kind of legislation. What kind of legislation? Legislation to compel these food products to sail under their true colors. Is that the case? Gentlemen, let me appeal to you earnestly, for you are in earnest. Is it your simple, your sole purpose to have the people protected from buying as butter that which is not butter? If it is, let me ask you, are you in earnest in assuming that it is necessary to impose upon the manufacturer of a healthy food product a special license tax of $600? Is it necessary in the second place to impose upon the wholesale dealer in this healthful food product a special license tax of $480? It is necessary to impose upon the retail dealer a special tax of $48? And then to put on the product, which is stated to amount to 200,000,000 pounds annually, a special internal-revenue tax of 10 cents a pound?

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will allow me to conclude my remarks before he makes that motion.

Mr. HATCH. I thought the gentleman had finished. I withdraw the motion for the present and yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I thank the gentleman.

Now, if such taxation as I have just recited is not necessary, how much is necessary? Just so much as will put this commodity within the jurisdiction of the proper revenue machinery of the United States and secure some revenue—a quantity sufficient to pay the expenses of the machinery which is intended to protect the people. Is $20,000,000 of taxation added to these special license taxes required for that purpose? Why, sir, a taxation of 1 cent on the pound would, if your statistics are stated correctly, yield $2,000,000 annually. When you add to that these special taxes how much would you obtain? I do not know; but if you impose a tax of 2 cents a pound it will bring into the Treasury of the United States $4,000,000 annually. Is that enough to put oleomargarine under its true colors? If it is, I will vote with you.

But when you propose to impose all these additional taxes, what object do you intend to accomplish? You intend to destroy an industry—to destroy an industry that demands the healthy product of the farmer's animals—the healthy product of his ox and his hog. You propose to destroy an industry that adds to the value of the farmer's ox and the farmer's swine. And you attempt to do this in his interest! In this way you impair the value of the farmer's cattle and swine, and rob one class of agriculturists for the benefit of another class.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I saw in a paper the other day a statement that may astonish you when you think of the representative of the people to whom that statement applies. I represent a district that has a smaller percentage of illiteracy than any Congressional district in the United States. This, when you remember who represents it, may be considered a paradox; I can not help that. But I wish to say that this constituency of mine is very largely made up of farmers engaged in raising milk and cream and selling butter; and this intelligent constituency has not sent me a petition in reference to this bill, and, with one exception, I have not received a letter upon this subject. Yet gentlemen are asserting loudly that this measure is being demanded by all the intelligent and industrious farmers of the country. I deny it. The demand comes from a single branch of the farming industry. Have the raisers of beef-cattle and fatted hogs called for it? My farming constituents largely interested in these industries have asked no protection.

I can account for their silence on the supposition they have implicit confidence in the wisdom of their Representatives. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, allow me to say, if, gentlemen, you are honest, if you intend simply to allow this thing to be sold forwhat it is, if you mean that, and if you will so amend the bill it will accomplish that purpose, and that only, I will vote for it. But if you intend to use me or my vote as an instrumentality to destroy any honest and legitimate industry of this country, however small or however feeble, and in favor of another, however strong and powerful, or however numerous its supporters may be—if you expect to use me as an instrument in that direction you have mistaken the man. [Great applause.] I will go home to my constituents and defend my action, and if they do not like my vote in defense of liberty, justice, and fair play they can send some one else in my place. [Renewed applause.] I will vote for this bill if it be made to protect the consumer of oleomargarine from imposition, but I can not vote to destroy—destroy wantonly—an industry that is capable of supplying a cheap and healthy food to the toiling poor.

Mr. HATCH. Unless I can get the consent of the committee to take a vote on the pending amendment I will move that the committee rise to close debate. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I hope the committee will give its consent to close debate and thereby save time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask for a division.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the committee will vote the amendment down.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 96.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No quorum has voted.

The Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and Mr. HATCH.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 113.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as follows:

"That hereafter it shall not be lawful for any manufacturer, merchant, shopkeeper, or other person to sell or expose for sale within the District of Columbia, or any of the Territories of the United States, the produce known as oleomargarine without first branding, marking, or labeling the same in a legible manner and conspicuous place with the word 'oleomargarine,' so as to be easily observed by persons offering to purchase, and also without first informing the person offering to purchase that the article is oleomargarine.

"It shall not be lawful for any proprietor, keeper, or manager of any hotel, inn, restaurant, or house of public entertainment to furnish, offer, or set before, or permit to be offered, furnished, or set before his guests, in the District of Columbia, or in any of the Territories of the United States, the article known as oleomargarine without first putting his guests upon notice by posting in conspicuous places in the dining-room and in all other rooms where the guests of such house are accustomed to take meals, and also in private rooms of the guests, so that it can be easily observed and read by the guests, in the following words: 'This house uses oleomargarine;' and also have said notice on their bills of fare when such bills of fare are used by any such house."

Mr. HATCH. I desire to make a point of order on that amendment, that it is not germane to the section. I will tell the gentleman if he will carefully examine the succeeding sections of the bill he will agree with me if he desires to offer this amendment in good faith it had better be offered to a subsequent section of the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have carefully examined the other sections of the bill and I do not agree with the gentleman it ought to be offered at that place. If I have my choice, that place never will be reached in this bill. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HATCH. That is what I supposed.

Mr. HAMMOND. I suppose that was obvious from my conduct on two or three occasions on this floor. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, the amendment, in short, is simply a copy of the Georgia statute. That which Georgia had the right to do within her limits the United States has a right to do within the District of Columbia and within the Territories of the Union.

That marks oleomargarine wherever it is used. It suppressed its use in my State. If gentlemen are honest enough to suppress its use in the United States then let them vote for that amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I want a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The question recurred on Mr. HAMMOND'S amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is this offered as an amendment or as a substitute?

Mr. HAMMOND. As an amendment to the second section of the bill.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 85.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. I move in the second section to strike out the words "or calculated;" so it will read:

In imitation or semblance of butter, or intended to be used as butter or for butter.

Mr. HATCH. I will move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], having moved an amendment, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HATCH. I will give the gentleman his five minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for giving what belongs to me.

Mr. HATCH. I proposed to give the gentleman time after the House had agreed to limit the debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I prefer to occupy my own time.

That amendment, Mr. Chairman, it will be perceived, proposes to strike out of line 12 the words "or calculated;" and I make the motion for the reason that I think the words as used there are entirely too vague and indefinite. Crime consists, generally, in the intention; but under the language of this bill if any one should make a commodity that may be judged to resemble this article, even without any intention to pass it as butter, if it were merely "calculated" to be used as butter, they would be guilty of a crime and subject to the punishment imposed. Hence I think the words should be stricken out and only retain in the section the words "or intended;" and I believe the committee, if they will examine the lines indicated, will not doubt the propriety of the amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a question of order. We would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I must beg not to be interrupted now.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Well, the gentleman desires that we should know what he is talking about, I presume.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I thank the gentleman for attributing to me a characteristic which I know is not very common; but it is my time, and I ask not to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio to raise a question of order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I simply desired to call the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the fact that we have not been able to hear the amendment read, and consequently can not understand the burden of his remarks. I hope he will allow us to go along with him in the discussion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If my friend will honor me with his attention now I will tell him exactly what I propose. I call his attention to line 12 of the second section of the bill, and the proposition is to strike out the words "or calculated." That is the pending amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said that this is the first effort ever made in Congress to subsidize selected industries of the country by internal taxation—the very first, indeed, that is not strictly for revenue; and, further, it does not lessen the force of my point to cite the one single case where the circulation of State-bank notes was stopped under the form of taxation in order to secure the circulation of Federal notes.

The Federal Congress is now undertaking for the first time to determine by internal taxes what the people shall eat and what they shall drink. And this comes at a time when Congress is singularly derelict in exercising its lawful and proper functions. What we need is to remove taxes, not to increase them. But you must obtrude into the police or social questions of the people. How long do you think you will be able to keep the temperance question out of Congress? How long do you think you will be able to deny the constitutional power of Congress to regulate the question of temperance if you pass this bill? How long can you refuse to consider those who mix cotton with wool and silk, and flax with jute, and all such local questions if you pass this bill?

What aspiration is there of creed or greed or course of action, or of fanatical faction, if you please, that will not come with hungry wits, dashing like fierce waves against the base of the Capitol, or rushing fiercely through its corridors, demanding that we take note of their grievances, their pet arguments or schemes of speculation, and take them out of the domain of local agitation of personal discussion, and redeem them from the restrictions of municipal control or State control? And all these things, as to what shall survive, what industry shall have citizenship, what belief itself even, shall have reputation or existence in communities, will come here for determination.

Sir, it opens Pandora's box to every question of business and morals and fanaticism, and to every demand of speculation and avarice that is conceivable; and when you have, under the form of taxation, gone beyond the question of revenue and taxed those things that are called the vices of the country, but which the States permit, until you have destroyed them, you will have nothing but the virtues of the country to feed upon for revenue.

When you have stricken down tobacco and whisky and oleomargarine and mixed goods, with none of which we have lawfully anything on earth to do, except to tax them for revenue and upon accepted principles of revenue, if we find them in existence by permission of the States, you have got to proceed on bread and meat and upon the other necessaries of life, and upon the very seed-corn of the country. I draw the line here at revenue, where I am sustained by the Supreme Court of our country, by every statesman in our history, by an unbroken line of legislative precedents, by my conception of what should be left to my State, and by my sense of obligation of my solemn oath to support and defend the Constitution of my country until it is changed by the forms and requirements of law.

See, gentlemen, to what illogical and wretched extremes this hitherto unknown and unattempted policy of taxation reduces us. See what local, petty, fireside, social, police, and gainful if not wretched questions this policy brings into Congress. It converts our whole system of taxation into a miserable log-rolling scheme. To-day it is butter that seeks advantage over butterine; to-morrow perhaps the South with its cotton-seed oil for cooking will want an advantage over lard. The next day beef is to have an advantage over pork or some other product, and so on through every one of the pursuits and products of the people. We shall turn ourselves into a maelstrom of confederated businesses in order that a combined majority may oppress a minority and drive them out of business or reduce them to poverty and servitude.

Now, sir, I want to look for a moment at some of the extraordinary proofs and evidences that have been brought by the committee in support of their bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 29.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8328, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 670) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Commander T. A. M. Craven.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of revenue bills; and pending that motion I move that all debate on section 2 of the pending bill and amendments thereto shall be limited to ten minutes, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I desire to amend the motion of the gentleman from Missouri so that the debate shall be limited to one hour.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Missouri has demanded the previous question.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. If the demand for the previous question is voted down would the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas then be in order?

The SPEAKER. It would.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 94, noes 7.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 30, not voting 109; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and Mr. VAN EATON objected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LOUTITT with Mr. WOODBURN, on the pending bill.

Mr. OATES with Mr. GOFF, for the rest of the day. Mr. OATES, if present, would vote against the pending bill.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. GLOVER, on this bill. Mr. GLOVER would vote for the bill and Mr. COLLINS against it.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to limit debate on the second section of the pending bill and all amendments thereto to one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, all debate on the pending section of the bill and amendments thereto is limited to one minute.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the following amendment, proposed by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas:

In the twelfth line of section 2, strike out the words "or calculated," so it will read "made in imitation or semblance of butter, or intended to be used as butter or for butter."

The question being taken, the chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for a division. Those words ought to be stricken out.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 99.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 2 as amended, the following:

"If any person shall knowingly and willfully violate the foregoing provisions of this act he shall, upon conviction in any court having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, or be imprisoned for any period not exceeding one year."

Mr. HAMMOND rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Only one minute is allowed for debate.

Mr. HAMMOND. And that minute is altogether ample for my purpose. This is simply to make the proper penalty for the violation of the law embraced in the amendment which we have just adopted.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 96.

Mr. HAMMOND. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered—44 members voting therefor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HAMMOND, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HATCH.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 109.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That special taxes are imposed as follows:

Manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $600. Every person who manufactures oleomargarine for sale shall be deemed a manufacturer of oleomargarine.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. This section of the bill is divided into paragraphs. The paragraph just read defines who shall be regarded as manufacturers. The next paragraph prescribes the tax. I submit that, this being a separate paragraph dealing with a distinct matter, it ought to be subject to amendment by itself.

Mr. HISCOCK. This whole section applies to one subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the whole of the section, but in order to facilitate the business of the committee the Chair will entertain amendments to the separate paragraphs.

The Clerk completed the reading of section 3, as follows:

Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $480. Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in the original manufacturer's packages shall be deemed a wholesale dealer in oleomargarine. But any manufacturer of oleomargarine who has given the required bond and paid the required special tax, and who sells only oleomargarine of his own production at the place of manufacture in the original packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed, shall not be required to pay the special tax of a wholesale dealer in oleomargarine on account of such sales.

Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48. Every person who sells oleomargarine in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in oleomargarine. And sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section and to the persons upon whom they are imposed: Provided, That in case any manufacturer of oleomargarine commences business subsequent to the 30th day of June in any year the special tax shall be reckoned from the 1st day of July in that year, and shall be $500.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to amend section 3 by striking out, in line 2, the words "six hundred" and inserting "one hundred."

Mr. Chairman, I stated to the House yesterday that I should offer to-day an amendment proposing to reduce the tax upon the manufacturer of this article from $600 to $100. I offer this amendment because the taxes generally imposed upon manufacturers under existing internal-revenue laws do not in any case reach the sum of $600. The rectifier of whisky to an amount less than 100 barrels pays a tax of only $100; the rectifier of whisky to an amount over 500 barrels is taxed only $200. Further along in this bill there is provision made for a tax upon the product itself, and the object of this assessment upon the manufacturer is simply to require him to take out a license and be identified with and come under the internal-revenue system.

The tax proposed on the product itself is certainly all that is wanted. Where a man makes, perhaps, a million pounds of this product and pays a tax upon that, it should be sufficient, without requiring him to pay an extra $600 simply for the privilege of keeping his works running. The proposition seems fair to reduce this tax from six hundred dollars to one hundred, and I hope the House will accept it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] will not prevail. It is stated here, and not denied by the friends of the manufacturers of oleomargarine, that it can be made at 8 cents a pound. It is not denied that it sells for at least 25 cents a pound. Now, if a tax of 10 cents a pound is levied upon it, and the $600 provided in the bill instead of $200 to which this amendment reduces it be demanded, still the entire tax will not amount to more than 12 cents a pound, and the manufacturer of oleomargarine will be making a very handsome profit.

Gentlemen tell us that this is a pure article of food. If that is the case why does it not go forth under its own name? Do you ever see an honest man registering himself under a false name? Are the fellows who go around under aliases honest men? If this is an honest article of food, as good as butter, why do not the manufacturers and dealers brand it and sell it as oleomargarine? One word more in reply to my friend from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER]. He says that the poor men, the workingmen, want this food. I say that the workingmen of this country want the best food they can get; they do not want cheap and nasty food; and if this imitation butter is taxed out of existence I have no doubt there is, or soon will be, sufficient capacity in the dairies of this country to give the workingmen butter that will be at the same time both good and cheap.

Why, sir, if you allowed counterfeit money to be circulated all through the community do you suppose that you would have a sufficient amount of good money to supply the people with currency? Certainly not. The counterfeit would crowd out the good money. Just so this oleomargarine is crowding out good butter. It is diminishing our dairy products, diminishing the number of our dairies, causing the slaughter of the cows, and if its unlimited manufacture is to go on the result will be that you will have a supply of this counterfeit butter and nothing else.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. Sir, I assume that every gentleman who favors this bill, as well as every gentleman who opposes it, is in earnest. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], in discussing this question, started out by admitting that oleomargarine in itself may be pure and wholesome, not injurious to public health. The gentleman from Illinois said that the farmers are not afraid of competition with this article if it be so marked that the man who buys it may know what he is buying. Now, I assume, of course, that these gentlemen are honest in stating these propositions. That being so, all we need to do is to put such a tax upon oleomargarine that the manufacturer and the retail dealer shall be required to sell it for what it really is.

When we have accomplished this, we shall have accomplished all that should be sought by a bill of this kind. But the man who wants to buy oleomargarine should be allowed to do so without paying an excessive price for it. While imposing such a tax that the manufacturer and retail dealer shall be obliged to sell this commodity for what it actually is, we should not compel the man who buys it to pay, on account of this taxation, 12 or 15 cents a pound more than he would otherwise be compelled to pay.

Sir, I am in favor of a bill of this kind, but I am not in favor of taxing this commodity out of existence. If, as has been said here, this article can be so made as not to be distinguishable from butter, so as to be as healthful as butter, then I believe the man who works for 80 cents or $1 a day should not be compelled to pay 40 or 50 cents a pound for butter. The gentlemen who drew this bill have gone too far.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] has said that we export more oleomargarine than butter, and in this way our foreign trade is cut down. But, sir, this very bill proposes to say to the men who manufacture oleomargarine, "You may export this article and practice a fraud upon those who reside out of the country, and you need pay no tax upon this exportation."

Mr. STRUBLE. I stated that I was opposed to that section of the bill. I am in favor of taxing that portion of the product which is exported as well as that portion which is sold in this country.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Now, the friends of this measure who say they wish to pass a bill which shall protect the men who buy oleomargarine ought not to impose such taxation as to tax this commodity out of existence, thereby using the taxing power of the Government as a means of legislating against one class of people and in the interest of another. You might just as well say, "We will buy the use of the taxing power, protect one class of manufacturers while we oppress another." Let us be honest about this matter and impose simply such taxation as will secure the proper marking of this commodity wherever sold. But let us not tax it out of existence. If a man wants to buy this article and does so knowing exactly what it is let him buy it at a reasonable price.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the opponents of this bill have put into the mouths of those who favor it every conceivable argument. In addition to the charge that we are supporting an unconstitutional measure, it is urged by one gentleman who has addressed the committee that we are attempting to "tax out of existence" a "healthful product." Sir, I have no hesitation in standing upon the ground that we are attempting to protect a healthful product against the unfair competition of a fraudulent and poisonous product.

It is true, I have said, as the gentleman from Indiana states, that oleomargarine can be made pure; yet I have here a characteristic description of the manner in which it is in fact made; and I will read some portions of this description as a reply to gentlemen who say we are attempting to "tax out of existence" a "healthful product," which the laboring men desires to purchase as food.

Mr. DUNHAM. And after the gentleman has read that let him read a description of the manner in which some butter is made.

Mr. HISCOCK. I read the testimony of Mr. Michels, of New York, a well-known microscopist and the editor of a scientific journal. He says that—

> Oleomargarine is simply uncooked, raw fat, never subjected to sufficient heat to kill parasites which are liable to be in it; that those who eat it run the risk of trichinæ from the stomachs of animals which are chopped up with the fat in making it.

That is your "healthful product!" I have also here the testimony of Dr. R. U. Piper, of Chicago, who says that—

> His attention was first called to the subject by an article published by Mr. Michels, in the American Journal of Microscopy. Since then he has examined a large number of specimens. He testifies that, while no true butter can carry trichinæ, eggs of the tape-worm, &c., he has found in oleomargarine not only organic substances in the form of muscular and connective tissue, and various fungi, but also living organisms which have resisted boiling acetic acid, and eggs resembling those of the tape-worm. These he has preserved to be shown to any one who may desire to see them, and he has also microscopic photographs of them.

Rev. E. Huber, microscopist, of Richmond, Va., writes in the Southern Clinic of May, 1880:

> Oleomargarine differs in its microscopical appearance as well as in its nutritive and dietetic qualities from true butter; that the fats in it are not subjected to a heat sufficient to destroy the germs of septic and putrefactive organisms, and that there may also be introduced into the system by its means the eggs which develop in tape-worm. And he also states that he has frequently found in oleomargarine eggs resembling those of the tape-worm.

Dr. George B. Harriman, a most respectable microscopist of Boston, "examined some twenty specimens of oleomargarine obtained from different dealers, and had found in every specimen more or less foreign substances, a variety of animal and vegetable life. Among those were corpuscles from a cockroach and small bits of claws, the blood corpuscles of sheep, the egg of a tape-worm. Yeast was found sprouting in considerable quantities and spores of fungi were very prevalent. A portion of a worm, a dead hydra viridis, portions of muscular fibers, fatty cells, and eggs from some small parasite were among the discoveries."

This is your "healthful product" that you would not have "taxed out of existence." Neither would I; but I desire gentlemen should understand the ground upon which we plant ourselves. We desire to give protection to an honest industry against this fraudulent one which I have described.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. HISCOCK. I can not unless the gentleman will yield me further time.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I will yield you all the time I have. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRISON (to Mr. HISCOCK). Say over again what you said about "protection," so that the chairman of the committee [Mr. HATCH] may hear it.

Mr. HISCOCK. My friend from Illinois asks me to repeat the utterance I made in reference to "protection." Since I am invited to do so I take pleasure in reading some remarks of Daniel Webster upon that subject:

> Mr. President, this power of discrimination, thus admitted, avowed, and practiced upon in the first revenue act, has never been denied or doubted until within a few years past. It was not at all doubted in 1816, when it became necessary to adjust the revenue to a state of peace. On the contrary, the power was then exercised, not without opposition as to its expediency, but, as far as I remember or have understood, without the slightest opposition founded on any supposed want of constitutional authority. Certainly South Carolina did not doubt it. The tariff of 1816 was introduced, carried through, and established under the lead of South Carolina. Even the minimum policy is of South Carolina origin.
> The honorable gentleman himself (Mr. John C. Calhoun) supported, and ably supported, the tariff of 1816. He has informed us, sir, that his speech on that occasion was sudden and off-hand, he being called up by the request of a friend. I am sure the gentleman so remembers it, and that it was so; but there is, nevertheless, much method, arrangement, and clear exposition in that extempore speech. It is very able, very much to the point, and very decisive. And in another speech, delivered two months earlier, on the proposition to repeal the internal taxes, the honorable gentleman had touched the same subject, and had declared "that a certain encouragement ought to be extended at least to our woolen and cotton manufactures."
> "Sir, it is no answer to say that the tariff of 1816 was a revenue bill. So are they all revenue bills. The point is, and the truth is, that the tariff of 1816, like the rest, did discriminate; it did distinguish one article from another; it did lay duties for protection."

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FINDLAY. Allow me to present an amendment. I do not propose to say anything about it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Do not yield.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the question that is of the most importance to my mind in the consideration of this measure is not the relative value and purity of the article known as oleomargarine or of butter; and I do not desire to submit any observation on these subjects nor upon anything which has been said about these two products.

But the question is as to whether the American Congress shall deliberately proceed, in the line of a new departure, to use the internal-revenue taxing power for any purpose other than that of raising revenue.

This measure, however demanded, for whatever purpose introduced, supported by whatever argument, is, when you reduce it to its ultimate analysis, the use of the sovereign power of taxation for the purpose of aiding a competitor in trade in the race for profit. [Applause.]

Now, what I desire to say is only to emphasize that issue so that we may understand and the country will understand what it is we are doing to-day.

We do not need the revenue, for the figures show that by the present internal-revenue taxation for this year we will receive from tobacco and spirits, and from the duties imposed on imported tobacco and spirits, about $109,000,000. With the sugar duties added to this, making about $160,000,000, all the war expenditures can be met by these three articles.

The pensions are about $80,000,000, the sinking fund, $46,659,000, the interest on the public debt about $44,622,589. So that these three articles—sugar, tobacco, and spirits—will pay all the war expenditures which the Government must liquidate.

The customs will leave us perhaps thirty millions or over more than the sums which by the estimates of the Departments are necessary for the year 1887.

On page 254 of the Book of Estimates the aggregate estimated expenditures for the year 1887 are $339,589,552.34. Of this sum $75,830,200 are for pensions, $46,659,000 for the sinking fund, $44,622,587.28 for interest on the public debt; so that these three items, all being war expenditures, aggregating $167,111,789.28, are to be met by war taxes, by the internal revenue on spirits and tobacco, and the remainder over the sum collected on these two articles can be well paid by the duties on sugars. These taxes are literally taxes, absolutely so as to spirits and tobacco, almost so as to sugar, 85 per cent. of the imports on sugars going into the Treasury.

So that we have ample revenues for all the purposes of the Government and a surplus of at least thirty millions. This of necessity brings us face to face, whether we desire to face it or not, with the problem, how shall we sort out these taxes, how shall we eliminate from the objects of taxation so as to reduce these excessive revenues somewhat to meet the mere necessities of the Government? From what shall we take off the burden of taxation, what shall be relieved from the taxing power, not what shall we hunt to subject to new burdens.

There are $30,000,000 over and above our necessary revenues. Where shall we lift the burden of taxation? This is the real problem which meets us.

This bill proposes not to relieve taxation. And lest I forget it in the limited time allotted to me I here remark that the power of taxation is a trust power. All powers granted to governments, whether they be despotic or republican governments, are trust powers. They are powers delegated by the people to the organism known as society, acting through prescribed agencies called a government, merely for the purpose for which governments are organized. Now this trust power——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman from Texas.

Now, this trust power, this power of taxation, given to us solely as trustee, to be exercised only by necessity and solely for the purpose of raising revenues, which revenues can only be justified by necessary expenses—this taxing power is now under this bill sought to be used for the first time in the history of the Government in a competitive race between rival industries.

For, sir, the exercise of the power heretofore by which 10 per cent. was laid on the circulation of State banks was not a contest between citizens, but it was a contest between the General Government, acting through its bank agencies, the national banks, and the State banks; and it was justified simply because those national banks in that day of peril to the credit of the nation were necessary to be sustained and encouraged as its financial agents in operations of stupendous amounts and absorbing interest, in times of great urgency demanding extraordinary measures.

They were all for the benefit of the Government; not for the special benefit of citizens or any particular industry. But here the power of taxation is used for the purpose of destruction. Now for the first time we enter into private controversy between internal industries. However wide our differences have been or are as to the use to which the power of levying imposts could or ought to be put, however earnest the contention about the protection to be given through customs, all agreed that the Government ought not to enter into partnership with one home industry to injure another home industry; no one seriously urged that the common Government, instituted for the common good, supported by all the citizens, should deliberately, under any excuse, exercise its power of taxation as a means of destruction to one industry, or as a bounty or aid to a rival industry.

I agree in full with what fell from the lips of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, this morning, that as between customs duties and internal revenue, when we can come to the point of election, I am in favor of customs duties wisely and justly levied as relieving the country from the machinery which necessitates espionage, that must be offensive, that can not possibly, no matter how well administered, be administered so as not to be a burden.

It may be hereafter, Mr. Chairman, in those happy days when our public debt is paid—God speed the day—and when the pension-roll is a memory, and when only the ordinary civil administration of the Government causes expenditures, that our children may see economic questions in a different light, and may prefer to raise their revenues by excises and internal taxation. To-day spirits, tobacco, and sugar would pay without increased duties or taxes all the civil expenditures of the Government.

If from the $339,589,552.34 of estimated expenses is taken the sums before set out as estimated for pensions, the sinking fund, and the interest on the public debt, $167,111,789.28; the $3,877,410 for interest on the Pacific Railway stock, which is really a legacy of the war and which is temporary in its nature; the $26,860,016.76 estimated for public works, a sum unnecessarily large, and dependent on annual and always doubtful legislation; the $4,000,000 estimated as necessary for repayment to importers in excess of deposits, and the $8,500,000 as drawbacks or customs allowances, the amount annually expended in the ordinary administration of our Government would be, on the estimate for 1887, $130,000,000; while the taxes on spirits, tobacco, and sugar would realize $160,000,000. And with these or such relative figures before them our children might conclude that a race so thrifty and brainy, possessing a country so blessed with all material wealth, could outstrip the world in a free, equal, untrammeled industrial competition, and thus prefer to support their Government by these duties rather than by customs dues. But for to-day, with an unpaid public debt and an increasing pension-list, we must submit to both tariff and internal taxation.

But I am not now willing to increase these offices, enlarge this machinery, add to its powers, and change its nature by making it in the mind of the country a machinery that can be employed to help one industry in the race with another. That is the simple problem presented here to-day by the pending bill. It is covered with the abuse of oleomargarine; it is clothed with praises of the dairymen; it is enwrapped in rhetorical figures about the farmers; it is made plausible with appeals to prejudice and passion; but stripped of all these, it is simply that we shall go in this road, that we shall undertake this new departure, to use the process and powers of taxation to build up one industry at the expense of another.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is the most important question that has been presented to this Congress during the few months that I have had the honor to occupy a seat here, far more important than the dairy industry, far more important than the oleomargarine industry, for it goes to the very foundation of our authority and calls in play the whole question of the taxing power of the Government. It brings us necessarily—whether we attempt to disguise it to ourselves or not, when we come face to face with our own consciences, to the consideration of the question of all questions which the representatives of a free people can discuss or legislate upon—it brings us to a decision as to our right and the ground upon which it rests to wring from any man his money, earned by his sweat, under the taxing powers of the Government. Disguise it in any manner you please, when it has at last reached its bottom, taxation means the involuntary enforced payment by somebody of a dollar of his own money for the benefit of the Government or by the exaction of the Government for some one else. With my views the constant limitation that ought to be put upon this dangerous but necessary power is that it shall be used solely for the benefit of the Government.

Never by my consent shall the sovereign power of the nation be used to tax one man for the direct benefit of another [applause], confiscating out of one man's pocket, under the name of taxation, a dollar of sweat for another man, I care not whether he be a dairyman in the beautiful blue-grass region I love and represent or whether he be any other man engaged in any other industry in this country. A freeman's dollar in his own pocket is a sacred dollar from the hands of the Government. [Loud applause.]

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, I represent a district the people of which are mainly devoted to agricultural pursuits, and I deny that this bill imposing a tax upon oleomargarine is in the interest of the agricultural masses of this country. While I respect the opinions of those gentlemen who hold views in opposition to my own, I must be allowed to say they make a mistake when they endeavor to palm this bill off upon the farmers of the country as one for their benefit and in their interest.

The farmers of this country are a quiet, unobtrusive, and patriotic class, and while they do not interfere in politics to the same extent as others, yet they are generally as well informed and as intelligent as any other portion of the community; are quick to see when their rights are invaded, and will not be duped into the advocacy or toleration of a measure pretendedly for their benefit but really for their injury and the injury of all those who abhor monopolies and deprecate unnecessary taxation.

For what purpose is this bill offered? Some of its advocates say to obtain revenue—money. From whom is this money to be drawn? From the people, of course. For what purpose do you want more revenue, more money from the people? It is understood that the Treasury is full; that it has in it now a surplus gathered in from taxation. What interest, then, what right, have we to tax the people, or any of them, farther? If the object was to find some other subject of taxation and by taxing that give relief to subjects already taxed by lessening the burdens attaching to them there might be some excuse for this bill. But that is not the object. None of the gentlemen contending so stoutly for this, in my opinion, bad proposition propose to reduce taxes upon anything or at all.

While some then are looking for revenue, others as earnestly protest that they would tax oleomargarine because it is a deleterious compound, offensive to the tastes and injurious to the health of the people. Let us see. Gentlemen have cited here the testimony of some of the best chemists and physicians of the country to the effect that oleomargarine is neither offensive to the taste or smell, nor yet injurious to health. It is shown that its manufacture is a large and growing industry; that a great deal of the product is exported to foreign countries, and much of it sold to poor people and laborers, who choose to buy it because of its cheapness and because they like it. Are you going to take away the "poor man's butter" without his consent?

Injurious to health! Who says so? The great dairymen of the North and West, who are interested to build up monopolies in the butter and cream business; who are interested in enhancing the price of their own commodities at the expense of others; who desire to crush out a rival industry to the end that theirs may thrive; who desire to bring the whole butter interests of the country in subjection to them; who, in short, desire that the Government shall "hold while they skin" the forced consumers of what they are pleased to term "honest butter." Of course nobody ever has good butter except these saintly dairymen!

You can not hoodwink the people in any such way. The people of this country can well comprehend when a product is presented to them whether it is offensive or whether it is injurious to them or not. Do gentlemen upon this floor really believe that the farmers and laboring men of this country have not the intelligence to know their own minds and their interests when a bad commodity is offered to them either for food or as an article of merchandise? Are you going to say to those people that they are so wanting in prudence and intelligence that Congress must interpose to save them from bad purchases, to protect them against themselves? Shall Congress step in as a kind of guardian ad litem to every "case of bad butter?" Mind you, gentlemen, or you will vex the patience of these same people a little too far.

"Protection" no doubt is meant by this bill, but it is that protection which extremists desire who would build themselves up upon the downfall of their neighbors. Protection may sometimes be right, but it is of that character which incidentally results from the proper and legitimate taxation of a subject; but protection is never right when exercised in behalf of one interest for the purpose of destroying another.

Mr. Chairman, I fear that some of our friends are "slightly mixed" upon this question, while others evade the true issue. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN] favored this bill yesterday because it would bring in revenue. He no doubt was honest in what he said; but what, I repeat, do we want with more revenue? If that gentleman or any other had coupled with the demand for a tax on oleomargarine a proposition to abolish or even reduce the tax on tobacco or distilled spirits, I might have understood it; but no such proposition was made.

The proposition is to tax oleomargarine 10 cents per pound. It sells, it is said, at from 11 to 12 cents per pound. Will not the tax, then, drive the product and the industry out of existence? And is not that, gentlemen, the precise end in view? If it is, what right has Congress to use the taxing powers of the Government in any such way? If oleomargarine will bring only 12 cents in the market and we tax it 10, of course it goes, and one of the great industries of the country is wiped out.

I do not like oleomargarine. My people neither make it nor use it; they are too intelligent to be fooled with it, if it is as some gentlemen say. They make good butter and sell it for good prices, and always find a ready market for it; for a good article will always command a good price, and needs no other protection than its own good qualities.

I appeal at least to my brother Democrats to be careful in what is being attempted here. It is a great wrong to tax any industry when the revenue from it is not needed, and a much greater wrong to tax it out of existence to foster some other enterprise perhaps no more worthy. If it is permissible to tax oleomargarine out of existence today, by the same rule some other great industry may be destroyed tomorrow. If one section of the country should wish to make a "corner" on beef to-day they might so instruct their representatives and drive out pork to-morrow and vice versa. So might these same Northern and Western monopolists raise a cry against Southern butter and cheese and even tobacco interests and compass their destruction through the taxing powers of the Government. In fact if you inaugurate the system and establish the principle that the Government through its taxing powers can and will destroy any industry whether good or bad, whenever monopoly rests its baleful eyes upon it and so demands, the rights of the people are gone. "Might makes right," and tyranny takes the place of liberty and justice.

Again, Mr. Chairman, if oleomargarine is such a hurtful product as that its manufacture and use should be restricted or destroyed, I contend that that is a matter which belongs to the States. When did it become the business of Congress to pass "sumptuary laws?" When before was it ever deemed the duty of Congress to say to the people of the several States "what they shall eat, or what they shall drink, or wherewithal they shall be clothed?" For, mark you, this is not a proposition merely to levy a reasonable tax, but a proposition to tax a subject out of existence. Some of the States have dealt with this question. Some have directed that when oleomargarine is sold it shall be so marked, and other States will pass laws of the same character when necessary.

But I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that this bill has a deeper significance than the mere taxing of oleomargarine. With all courtesy I say it, this bill is intended to build up and foster the great butter and butterine monopolies in the North and West. Not only this, but it contains that which may be wrought into a cunningly devised scheme to augment, to build up, and to perpetuate that wretched internal-revenue system which for years has afflicted this country. For this, if for nothing else, would I oppose this measure. This bill if passed will become part and parcel of the internal-revenue system; under its provisions we will have a new army of officials. Inspectors, collectors, microscropists, &c., are contemplated by this bill, and then there will be that unsavory horde of spies and informers who will haunt the domain of the housewife and dog the footsteps of the citizen as he pursues his daily business. The law itself being prohibitory in its character, the 10 cents per pound having crushed out the industry, this crowd of officials and their parasites must be paid by the Government from taxes wrung from some other subject.

This is no fancy sketch. It is perfectly plain that if oleomargarine is taxed 10 cents no margin for profit will be left, consequently the business will go to nothing or be quite small; yet the corps of officials provided by this law, and which will be provided for by some other law or regulation, will stand forth and "bedevil" the people like "little men," and draw their pay all the same, like "little patriots." Is our country so happily off that we can afford to increase taxes to raise money to pay a new set of officials, or to build up and enlarge a system which for years has been a burden and a scourge to the land?

If, Mr. Chairman, this House has determined, as I believe it has, notwithstanding its many objectionable features, to pass this bill, then allow me to commend to its consideration the propriety of abolishing the tax upon tobacco and that upon spirits distilled from fruits. It can be done upon this bill, and if anything could make this bill tolerable that would do it. My colleague [Mr. DANIEL] has indicated his purpose to offer such amendments as I have suggested, and will do so at the proper time. Why should not the taxes upon tobacco and spirits distilled from fruits be abolished? Both subjects yield only some $27,000,000. Considering the condition of the Treasury, we can readily spare that amount. You know that you do not mean to remit any tariff taxes this year, and here perhaps is the only chance you will have to do something for the people. As long as a surplus remains in the Treasury, so long will Congress run into extravagance, and jobbers and monopolists try to control it. Here is the place now to get rid of part of the "surplus" and free Congress from a wasteful policy. Would we not be doing better to decrease rather than increase taxes? No taxes are more onerous or distasteful to the people than internal-revenue taxes.

The tax upon tobacco is unjust because it is a discriminating tax. It taxes the products of one or two sections of this country only, while the products of other sections go untaxed. Some say it should be taxed as a luxury; others, because it is a noxious plant and hurtful to those who use it. As to the latter objection, I shall say nothing; the wise men, the doctors, and the fanatics may settle that. In one sense tobacco is a "luxury," but it is a "necessity" to those who by climate, soil, and country are obliged to raise and manufacture it. If it is a luxury it is still an agricultural product and the poor man's luxury. Why not let him use it without tax? Do you tax the luxuries of the rich in any such way? Not at all.

Silks, satins, diamonds, watches, broadcloth, "purple and fine linen," are not taxed in any such proportion as tobacco. Besides such commodities are generally taxed because they are of foreign make and imported from foreign countries. Does Congress mean to tax American citizens and domestic products to a greater extent than foreigners and foreign goods? Is that the way to protect your own people against the "pauper labor of Europe," and to encourage home industry? Tax foreigners and foreign goods from 20 to 75 per cent., but your own people forsooth from 100 to 200 per cent. This is "protection" with a vengeance. But what surprises me most is that a good many of our so-called "free-traders" seem to have forgotten the doctrines of their fathers and have fallen in love with the excise system, which in "warp, woof, and filling" was abhorrent to the founders of this Republic.

But to return to tobacco. It is said by some that the "consumer" pays the tax, the producer is not hurt. There is a difference in the nature of things between the "consumers" of foreign goods and the "consumers" of domestic products; anybody can see that. But let us see. Who are the consumers of tobacco? True, we export a good deal, but who consumes the greater part? Our own people. Thousands and thousands of the growers and workers in tobacco use "the weed," and unlike any other people are heavily taxed upon the results of their own labor. Again, how much greater would be the area of trade, how much greater the consumption, and consequently how much greater the price to the producer and the stimulus to production, but for this tax? Moreover the tax upon tobacco is in the interests of monopoly and monopolists. Men of large means can engage in the manufacture of tobacco. Men of small means by reason of the tax can not do so. What the producer wants is a free, large, competitive market. He can not get it while the tax keeps men of moderate and small means out of the trade.

It is absurdly claimed by some that tobacco was higher soon after the late war with a high tax upon it than it has ever been since. Nominally that is true. In fact, it is not true. Then everything was higher—pork, beef, sugar, coffee, salt, iron, &c. The currency was not settled—there was a vast difference between gold and greenbacks. Then you never saw gold. Everything was bought and sold in a depreciated currency. As to tobacco, by reason of the war there was but a small amount of it on hand. The supply was nothing like equal to the demand. In spite of the tax, therefore, it bore a high price. But when specie resumption came, what was the result? Everything came down to "hard pan." Everything shrank in value and extent save the tax. Tobacco, consequently, fell in price to almost nothing; the greater part of it sold far below the cost of production; the trade languished, and the planters of the tobacco regions were almost in despair.

It was then that a few men in Congress—I am glad your humble speaker was one of them—commenced efforts to have the tax reduced, and after many defeats and much labor procured a reduction, on the 26th day of February, 1879, from 24 to 16 cents. As soon as the reduced rate took effect leaf-tobacco rose in the market from $2.50 to $3 per hundred pounds, and the trade in all kinds and grades of tobacco greatly revived. The tax being still oppressive we again, in March, 1883, procured a further reduction from 16 to 8 cents, and, as before, the price of tobacco increased to the farmer from $2.75 to $3 per hundred pounds.

To verify these statements I refer to the trade statistics from the city of Danville, Va., the center of the finest tobacco-growing section of this country; other markets I may say showed a similar state of things. In 1878, when the tax was 24 cents per pound on tobacco, there were sold upon the Danville market 27,698,828 pounds of tobacco for the sum of $2,439,959.22, or an average of $8.80 per hundred pounds. In 1879, with tax at 16 cents, there were sold 26,827,922 pounds for $3,223,-689.51, or an average of $12.01 per hundred. Thus you see that sales of 1879, less in pounds 870,906 than those of 1878, brought to the farmers $783,730.29 more money, with a greater average by $3.21 under the reduced tax. In 1882 tobacco again reduced in price. In 1883 the tax, as I have said, was reduced from 16 to 8 cents. Take again the sales in the Danville market:

Year.	Tax.	Pounds.	Value.	Average.
1883	8	35,503,112	4,776,456 45	13 45

Here we have a greater average by $3.64 per hundred under the operations of the reduced tax. Prices kept up in about this proportion for the years 1884-'85—the average price for 1885 being $13.54, but this year, by reason of financial and other troubles, the prices have ruled much lower. I should have said that in March, 1875, when the tobacco tax was increased from 20 to 24 cents, tobacco declined $4 per hundred. And I here assert that the history of this tax will show that whenever the tax was increased the price of tobacco declined, and whenever the tax was lowered the price to the farmer was increased. It is true that in one sense the consumer pays this tax, but for reasons which I have given he is not by any means the chief sufferer.

The producer has in the main to bear the burdens of this taxation upon tobacco, for, as I have often said, when the Government taxes the manufacturer he throws it back by way of a reduced price for his product upon the farmer—the farmer from necessity, if he has employés under him, throws it back upon them so far as he can by way of reduced price for their labor, and the laborers, having nobody nor anything behind them except old mother Earth upon whom they can throw off, of necessity bear the chief burdens. And so it is that the poorer and more helpless the producers the more of this abominable tax do they pay.

I have said that the tobacco trade has been greatly depressed this year and prices have ruled low. Exactly what caused this is a hard question to answer. Some of our "Republican brethren" have charged the present depression and "hard times" to the incoming of a Democratic administration and the consequent change of policy. Sensible men, however, will hardly accept this as a reason. The change of policy has not, I am sorry to say, been as rapid or as marked, in my opinion, as it should have been; but we might well reply that the "hard times" prove but the sequel or culmination of the bad Republican policy which has been marching us on to ruin for several years.

In so far as the farmers are concerned they might well take some comfort in the recollection of the two or three fearful droughts which fell upon the country in the last years of Republican rule, the effects of which unfortunately extended over into the days of Democracy. In fact, some shrewd and knowing persons have already suggested that if the Republicans had been kept in power a few years longer we would all have been starved out. The observation looks reasonable, for sure it is under Republican rule we Democrats had a very "drouthy time."

Many reasons are given for the "hard times" now upon the country, chief among them the "labor strikes" and consequent agitation and troubles in the North and Northwest. Whether these things are true, or if true were justifiable or not, I will not discuss. The fact is they were long ago inaugurated and have continued for months. Hundreds of thousands of men have been, and are now, out of employment, earning no wages and contributing nothing to the business, trade, or commerce of the country. From active, worthy, industrious, energetic producers they and their dependents, running into the millions, have been for months consumers. Their means as also their desire to purchase has been greatly curtailed, and not only the tobacco but every other interest has felt the fearful effects of the stoppage of labor, travel, traffic, and commerce, in the great iron mines, machine-shops, manufactories, and over the great railways of the country. If these troubles can be happily settled prosperity will no doubt speedily return, and men will wonder why such things ever occur in a country where justice and conciliation ought to control in every department.

But the great trouble with the tobacco trade is the enormity of the tax. Take that off, free our people from the oppressiveness of that burden, give to the farmers who live in the tobacco regions an "equal chance in the race of life" with other agriculturists of the country, and you will have done, gentlemen of Congress, a deed worthy of all commendation.

Mr. Chairman, I wish now to call attention to another amendment, which it is understood will be offered to this bill by my colleague [Mr. DANIEL], an amendment to abolish the tax upon spirits distilled from fruits. We do not now ask to abolish the whisky tax; we know that we can not accomplish that—monopoly is too strong for that—but we believe that the time has come to abolish the tax upon fruit spirits, and we ask that it be done. The Government gets only about $1,250,000 annually from the brandy tax.

This is the most onerous, offensive, unnecessary, and cruel tax embraced in this bad excise system. It is the tax upon the home product, and almost the only product of thousands of the mountain people of the South. Living remote from railways, these people can not profitably transport their fruit to market; consequently thousands of bushels of the finest apples, peaches, pears, &c., go to waste yearly before the eyes of its owners because they have not the means to pay the tax, or fear to endeavor a compliance with the onerous, complex, and rigid exactions of the internal-revenue system. The collection of this small brandy tax costs the Government more, is the fruitful cause of more annoyance and trouble, and results in more wrong and outrage to these "dwellers among the mountains" than all the laws upon our statute-books combined.

No one, I suppose, will oppose the abolition of this particular tax except some one who believes that the whisky interest will be affected thereby; in other words, that the abolition of the brandy tax will promote fraud in regard to the collection of the tax on whisky. We have thought of all that. The amendment to be offered, while it provides for the abolition of the brandy tax also provides that spirits shall not be made partly from grain and partly from fruits without payment of the full tax required upon spirits distilled from grain, and that all offending persons shall be properly punished. This provision will amply guard against any violation of the law or frauds in this respect upon the whisky tax. There is no reason why this amendment should not be adopted, and the brandy tax abolished. Our proposition is fraught with good to the people, and an act of long-delayed justice which the Government can well afford to extend.

We ask these things in good faith. Grant us relief, at least, from the taxes upon tobacco and brandy. In fact, this Congress should abolish the whole internal-revenue system, should cut it up root and branch. It was placed upon the country in time of war by the Republican party; it has been kept up, fostered, and maintained by that party for all these years, aided latterly, I am sorry to say, by a few Democrats. Let the good work be done this very session of Congress. Take away from among us the revenue agent, the gauger, the gouger, the spy, and the informer. Let the people feel as freemen once more. Do these things, as suggested, and to crown it all give to the country an educational bill with sufficient appropriations to help onward and fit for the higher duties of citizenship all the youth of this favored land.

Mr. GROUT. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], when first upon the floor this morning, to have questioned the correctness of my statement on yesterday that Congress was already committed to the principle of protecting the industrial products of the country from fraudulent imitations. I made that statement in substance, and cited in support of it section 3328 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which I did not then have time to read. The gentleman from Arkansas incorporated into his remarks so much of that section as suited the purpose of his argument this morning. I desire now to read the whole of it. It is as follows:

SEC. 3328. On all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, and made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne, but not made from grapes grown in the United States, and on all liquors, not made from grapes, currants, rhubarb, or berries grown in the United States, but produced by being rectified or mixed with distilled spirits or by the infusion of any matter in spirits, to be sold as wine, or as a substitute for wine, there shall be levied and collected a tax of 10 cents per bottle or package containing not more than 1 pint, or of 20 cents per bottle or package containing more than 1 pint and not more than 1 quart, and at the same rate for any larger quantity of such merchandise, however the same may be put up, or whatever may be the package. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared suitable and special stamps denoting the tax herein imposed, to be affixed to each bottle or package containing such merchandise, by the person manufacturing, compounding, or putting up the same, before removal from the place of manufacture, compounding, or putting up; and said stamps shall be affixed and canceled in such manner as the Commissioner may prescribe; and the absence of such stamp from any bottle or package containing such merchandise shall be prima facie evidence that the tax thereon has not been paid, and such merchandise shall be forfeited to the United States. Any person counterfeiting, altering, or reusing said stamps shall be subject to the same penalties as are imposed for the same offenses in relation to proprietary stamps.

Now, sir, if a tax of 10 cents per pint on imitation wines is not for the purpose of protecting and encouraging the production of genuine wines, for one I am unable to understand what it is for. The inventive gentleman from Arkansas says that this tax is for the protection of the revenue which the Government derives from the import duty on foreign wines. That duty is, I believe, 50 cents per quart on champagne or sparkling wine and 25 cents per quart on all still wines. Every one knows that this duty is for the protection of the wine industry of this country, that upon the American wine product there is no internal-revenue tax as upon whisky, but that the Government encourages this industry by a high protective tariff.

Now, suppose that the assertion of the gentleman from Arkansas be true—which let it be understood is only supposed—namely, that this tax of 10 cents per pint on imitation wines is really for the purpose of more certainly collecting the duty on foreign wines, would it not still operate for the protection of genuine American wines, inasmuch as that import duty is for the protection of those wines?

It seems like a solecism in argument to claim otherwise. The fact remains, however, upon the very face of the statute itself that this tax is for the protection of American wine products against fraudulent American imitations; and no amount of sophistry can break the force of the argument for what it may be worth that section 3328 is a precedent for the bill before us.

But there is upon foreign butter as well as upon foreign wines an import duty, and if an excise tax of 10 cents per pint upon imitation wines helps the Government collect the tariff duty on imported wines, we will let the gentleman have his argument and give him this 10-cent tax on imitation butter to help in the collection of the duty on imported butter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to be able to advance a new idea or to suggest to the committee any reason not heretofore urged in favor of the measure now under consideration, but I feel that in the passage of this bill we of the West are greatly interested.

For the past few years our farmers have devoted themselves to the task of building up the dairy interests, and to-day find that by the unlawful competition of the manufacturers of oleomargarine the industry is prostrated, and unless relief is given will be entirely destroyed. During the past three years the product of our dairies and creameries has fallen off fully one-third. Yearly thousands of cows are sent to the butcher's block, the farmers finding it unprofitable to keep them, those cows being worth until the introduction of oleomargarine an average of $40 per head; to-day they will not sell for $30 per head. Any one can estimate the loss the farmers have sustained from this depreciation alone.

Now, Mr. Chairman, who do we find opposing this bill? Every man who is interested in selling to the manufacturers of oleomargarine cotton-seed oil, the offal from pork-packing establishments, and those interested in handling and manufacturing the unlawful product. We have before us petitions, instigated by the parties interested, asking that this measure be defeated. On the other hand, five millions of farmers in this country favor this legislation. And to whom shall we give hearing—to the men who admit that they are engaged in the manufacture and sale of an article that is known to be deleterious, composed of ingredients that are poisonous and unfit to be used for food, or to the farmers of this country who are engaged in making and selling an article whose worth is now and has been recognized from time immemorial?

The issue is a very simple one. Shall the manufacturer of oleomargarine and butterine be encouraged and the farming interests further injured, if not entirely destroyed, or shall we encourage and protect those who are engaged in a legitimate business and are making an article that is pure and wholesome and that can be used without the fear that we are consuming that which is detrimental to health and fruitful of disease.

Mr. Chairman, twenty-two States of this Union have passed laws either restricting or prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, and the people of this country rightfully claim that such laws are being evaded and can not be enforced. They ask this Congress to give them relief. They know their demands are fair and just. This measure is constitutional; it is practicable, and this House should pass this bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to offer a substantial amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and Mr. REAGAN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] has been recognized.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to propose an amendment to the amendment, to strike out "$100" and insert "$200."

Mr. VAN EATON. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. FINDLAY. I rise to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the formal amendment as withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read the amendment to the amendment proposed by Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. FINDLAY. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FINDLAY. I would like to know whether a substantial amendment is not now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two substantial amendments now pending.

Mr. FINDLAY. Can another be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order at this stage. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized to speak to his amendment.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not desire to weary the committee by much talking; but I make a suggestion or two in this connection that seem to be demanded by the course of this debate. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT] quotes a statute by which a tax is imposed upon adulterated wines for the benefit of the public revenue, and attempts to show the identity of the principle involved there and the principle embodied in this bill. I submit there is no such identity. Here you do not propose to impose a tax simply upon an imitaion, or on an adulterated or upon an impure article. You propose to impose a tax upon what is admittedly pure and healthy.

Mr. GROUT. Who admits that?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have heard the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] read to-day an extract from the opinion of a chemist in which he says he had discovered by the microscope a great many ugly things in oleomargarine. I undertake to say that I could read page after page from the testimony of the most accomplished chemists in the land to the effect that they have submitted oleomargarine to chemical analysis and microscopic tests, and have found it pure and healthful, and they recommend its use.

Now, if it be true that this product is filthy and unhealthy and 200,000,000 of pounds are sold every year, I would like to know where oleomargarine has buried its dead? I would like that gentlemen would bring me an exhibit of some tombstone on which it is solemnly inscribed, "Died from oleomargarine." [Laughter.]

I wish gentlemen would give an authentic case. I am talking what I mean. I wish some gentleman would give us an authentic case of a man being even made sick by the use of oleomargarine. History, to my knowledge, has recorded no such case. I do not say that there are not impure specimens of this article on the market, but when gentlemen stand here and attempt to shock the country by these frightful stories, when they draw upon their imagination for facts, and draw in Shakspeare and witches and ghosts and everybody else for the purpose of getting up something to frighten the timid, I appeal to the testimony on the other side, and I say that it is abundantly shown and not denied that oleomargarine may be pure, clean, and healthful, and I am now only controverting the propriety of taxing this pure and healthful product out of existence.

Another point. The strangest logic that I have ever heard—and it commends itself to my admiration because of its novelty—is that we ought to impose this high tax upon this commodity because it can stand it. Gentlemen say that oleomargarine sells for 20, 25, or 40 cents a pound that costs but 7 or 8 cents, and therefore it can bear this tax of 10 cents a pound and the extra license tax also and still be sold at a profit. But, gentlemen, you forget one thing. You have asserted all the time that this article has been sold at these high prices because it has been imposed upon the people as genuine butter. Strip it of that disguise, but do so by taxing it only so much as is necessary to effect that object. Then when it is put upon the market for what it is it will sell not at butter prices but at oleomargarine prices. Then the poor men who want to buy it—and thousands do—can obtain it at the cost of production with a reasonable profit added. Let me put a question to you, though I know it will have no effect.

It was once said by a distinguished commoner that he had heard many arguments in the Parliament that had convinced his judgment, but none that had ever influenced his vote. [Laughter.] But let me put this question to you: If any part of this product is being honestly manufactured and honestly put into the market, if any part of it is sold to men who are not being deceived by it, has not the American citizen the right to produce that article, the right to sell it, and the right to buy it? I want you to answer that question. Now, if you are in earnest about this matter—and I do not question your honesty—if you are in earnest, then you will simply fix the tax at such a rate as will compel the sale of oleomargarine for what it is.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FINDLAY. I would like to offer a substitute for the pending amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 32 insert the following:

"Provided, That no manufacturer of, or wholesale dealer in, oleomargarine shall sell, ship, or export the same to any point included in Her Majesty's East Indian possessions inhabited by the Parsees or fire-worshipers, or other part of the world where this sect may reside: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall extend to the manufacture and sale of sausage, as far as practicable, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

[Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. FINDLAY. I will claim my time when the Committee of the Whole resumes its session.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] is not in order.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH that the committee rise, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 101, noes 4.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 27, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of property-owners and residents along the line of Thirteenth street, Northwest, Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the chartering by Congress of any company to lay tracks and run cars along that street; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a letter from A. H. Babcock, adjutant of Loraine (Ohio) Post No. 448, Grand Army of the Republic, transmitting petitions of numerous citizens and soldiers of Ohio, praying for the enactment of a law embodying the recommendations of the national pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic; which, with the accompanying petitions, was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VEST. I present the petition of a committee of citizens of New Mexico, and I ask that it be read. It is not long, and it relates to a matter of very great importance to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be read, if there be no objection.

The petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

Your memorialists, citizens of the County of Bernalillo and Territory of New Mexico, acting in pursuance of resolutions unanimously adopted at a public meeting of the people of said county held in the city of Albuquerque on May 17, 1886, respectfully but earnestly pray your honorable body to adopt and pass during the present session the bill which has passed the House of Representatives, and commonly called the Joseph bill, for the adjustment of private land claims in Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona.

Nearly forty years have elapsed since our Government assumed by the treaty of cession of the territory in question the high duty of ascertaining and confirming to private owners of lands all bona fide titles acquired under the Spanish or Mexican Governments, and with very few exceptions that duty has been neglected to this day. Not only is this neglect of treaty obligation a reproach to national honor, but it is most disastrous to the material interests of our people. A cloud of uncertainty and doubt resting upon vast bodies of lands which are withdrawn from the operation of the public-land laws deters investments and prevents all advancement. Every consideration therefore demands prompt action at the hands of Congress.

The Senate bill upon this subject, commonly called the Edmunds bill, provides for the adjudication of those claims in the courts, while the House bill creates a special commission of three persons and is similar to the measure under which the land titles of California were settled.

In this Territory and in Arizona there are but three district courts which would have original jurisdiction under the Senate bill. The dockets of these courts are already overcrowded with litigation of ordinary character, such as is the natural outgrowth of our development and situation, and their business is constantly increasing, so that without an increase in the number of judges it is and will be impossible for them to dispose of the business before them.

If to this accumulation of ordinary business there be added the determination of private land claims, we beg earnestly to call to your attention the inevitable consequences. Delays and expenses which will be equivalent to a practical denial of justice must and will result not only to land claimants but to ordinary litigants. And, in addition, the organization of the courts is not such as to best enable them to sit upon the questions involved, while a commission of men specially selected for the purpose can hold their sessions at such places as will be nearest and most convenient to the lands and to the muniments of title involved.

Failure to enact the House bill will, we fear, cause still greater delays upon this subject, which to us is of vital importance, and we urgently request of you to give your sanction to that bill at your present session, so that this Territory may be relieved from the greatest obstacle to its prosperity and advancement.

GEO. LAIL,
Mayor of the City of Albuquerque, N. Mex.,
H. N. JAPBA,
Pres. Board of Trade,
J. J. SHARICK,
City Councilman,
A. J. BARR,
L. S. TRIMBLE,
H. L. WARREN,
G. PITMAN SMITH,
E. T. STOVER,
WM. A. WHITEMAN,
E. D. LUXTON,
J. FRANCISCO CHAVEZ,
Committee.

Mr. CAMERON presented a memorial of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange and a memorial of the board of directors of the Grain and Flour Exchange of Pittsburgh, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the bill proposing to tax oleomargarine and butterine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of citizens of Russell County, Kansas, praying that early action may be had upon the pension claim of Burris Harper, late a private in Company G, Fifth Missouri Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of certain Pottawatomie Indians, praying for legislation regarding traderships; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of S. M. Whitten, of Randolph County, Indiana, praying for a revision of certain Senate rules; which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of William Talmadge and other citizens of Palmer and Wilbraham, Mass., and a petition of Franklin Bonney and others, of Hadley, Mass., praying for such legislation as will protect the dairy interests against imitations of butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of C. H. Torrey, of New York city, praying certain legislation in relation to the case of William Campbell Phelan, alleged to have been improperly convicted of crime and sentenced to the Fitchburg (Mass.) jail; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of J. N. Tinsley, of Buffalo, Dallas County, Missouri, praying to be allowed compensation for supplies furnished the United States Army during the late war. I move that the petition, with the accompanying papers, affidavits, and evidence, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of Elgin, Ill., favoring the passage of the bill taxing the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and butterine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Board of Trade of Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of the bill known as the "immediate transportation act;" which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2553) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborn; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2554) to amend section 2133 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2555) granting a pension to William Sackman, sr.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2556) granting a pension to Mrs. Elmira J. Merritt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN introduced a bill (S. 2557) granting a pension to Benjamin Crenshaw; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. I introduce two bills to reimburse Mrs. Charlotte Smith for money expended in nursing soldiers during the war.

The bill (S. 2558) for the relief of Mrs. Charlotte Smith was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; and

The bill (S. 2559) for the relief of Mrs. Charlotte Smith was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, which is now on the table, that it may be printed, and I ask that the bill may be taken up and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I desire to have the amendment printed, so that it may go before the committee with the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. It is simply an amendment to be printed, as I understand.

Mr. DAWES. That is all; but the House bill is on the table, and I want the bill taken up and referred, with the amendment, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made as requested, if there be no objection.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in respect to the claim of H. B. Wilson, administrator of William Finder, deceased, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, there having been no adverse report thereon.

INDIAN TRADERSHIPS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolutions; which were read:

Whereas it is stated in the matter of the administration of the powers and duties of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in respect of the appointment of Indian traders acts have been done, or permitted to be done, in disregard of law and the rights and proper interests of citizens: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and hereby is, directed to investigate the subject of the appointment of such traders, the granting of licenses to them, and the refusal to extend such licenses to persons engaged as such traders, and the methods which have been practiced in that regard since the month of April, 1885, and the reasons and influences affecting the several instances of such granting or refusing of such licenses, to whom licenses have been granted since said date and to whom refused, why granted and why refused, and whether or not any person to whom a license has been so granted has been guilty of conduct or practices prejudicial to the good repute of the public service; and, if so, in what respect, and whether or not the same have come to the knowledge of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Resolved, That in pursuing the said investigation the said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, administer the necessary oaths, and employ a stenographer should it deem it necessary so to do; and such expense as may result from said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the committee is further instructed to report a bill or bills for such legislation as the investigation may disclose to be necessary and proper in the premises.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the resolutions be adopted at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolutions?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolutions be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolutions will go over under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3848) for the relief of H. P. McFarlin.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate thereon, and had appointed Mr. IRION, Mr. CRISP, and Mr. DUNHAM managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 670) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Commander T. A. M. Craven;

A bill (H. R. 7300) for the relief of Randolph Seaman; and

A bill (H. R. 7617) granting a pension to Solomon J. Grissom.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning business is closed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to take up Senate bill 2172 for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves to proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask the Senator from Oregon if he will not give way and let us have the morning hour for the consideration of pension bills so as to get through with those remaining on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. I can not do it this morning in view of the fact that pension bills have the right of way at any time and this is a bill which can not always be taken up for consideration.

Mr. SAWYER. I should like to go on with the pension bills, but I do not want to be too persistent.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. SAWYER. I give notice that I shall ask for the consideration of the pension bills to-morrow morning.

Mr. DOLPH. I will assist the Senator any other morning in getting up the pension bills.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a statement in regard to the motion, which is not debatable. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. Let us have one thing at a time. I wish to get the pension bills off the docket as soon as possible, but if there is a motion pending to proceed to another bill it had best be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan object to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CONGER. There is a motion pending to take up another bill, and I await the result of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida desires to debate that motion. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON and others. Oh, yes; we can not debate it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon to take up the bill the title of which has been read.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 26, noes not counted; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the substitute which I send to the Chair.

The bill which has just been read proposes to forfeit from Wallula Junction, Washington Territory, to Portland, Oreg., a portion of the original grant over which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company does not now and probably never will contemplate constructing any portion of the road provided for by the act.

My only objection, I will say in a word, with the leave of the Senator from Oregon, is that there are other portions of the road not finished which at least should be included, and there are portions of the line also where the road has been finished which should be included. The difficulty is that the passage of the bill in this condition of affairs will be a legislative declaration to the whole country that this matter has been passed upon and decided, and that there shall be no more forfeitures, so far as the Senate is concerned, than this land, which the company have never for years expected to earn by the construction of the road. If this be done, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company at the next session of Congress will come with some show of insistency and say that the Senate and, if the House adopt it, that Congress have passed upon this matter of forfeiture and have concluded that they will ask no other or further forfeiture than that contained in this bill.

Therefore I feel it to be my duty at this time (as it was understood, I believe, that the members of the Committee on Public Lands should have the right to vote on this question as they pleased when it came here) to propose an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

That except as to all lands granted for that portion of the road of the Northern Pacific Railroad which was completed before July 4, A. D. 1879, and also excepting the right of way, with necessary lands used in operating said railroad, and also except all lands included within the limits of any village, town, or city site, the grant of public lands made in aid of the construction of the said Northern Pacific Railroad by act of Congress approved July 2, A. D. 1866 (13 Statutes at Large, page 365), be, and it is hereby, declared forfeited and determined; and the said act making the grant is, so far as said grant is concerned, hereby repealed, and said lands are hereby restored to the public domain for sale and settlement under existing laws of the United States; and all of said lands shall be held and treated as though said grant and the withdrawals under it had never been made: Provided, That in case of any of the lands embraced within the terms of this act, to which said railroad company would have been entitled had the said road been constructed as provided in the act making the grant, have been sold by said company prior to January 1, A. D. 1884, the party or person so purchasing any of said lands, his heirs and assigns, shall have the right to the lands so purchased to the extent of 320 acres, upon making proof of the fact of such purchase before the register at the local land office of the district where said land may be located; and upon proof as above within twelve months of the passage of this act patents shall issue to the parties entitled thereto for the land; and in any case of purchase or settlement, as contemplated in this act, of more than 320 acres by each settler, the 320 acres to each settler may be selected by him within one year from the passage of this act, he filing the description of such selection at the proper land office or with the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SEC. 2. That all persons who have made actual settlement or have made valuable improvements upon the odd-numbered sections adjacent to the said road or branch thereof, with or without contract of purchase therefor, with a bona fide intent to secure title thereto by purchase from said Northern Pacific Railroad Company when the said company had earned the same by compliance with the conditions and requirements of said act, or to acquire title to the same under the public-land laws of the United States, and being a citizen of the United States, or having declared his intention to become one in compliance with the naturalization laws of the United States, shall be entitled to enter one quarter-section, of 160 acres each, of the lands so settled upon or improved by such person, under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States; and in case such person has exhausted his or her right under said laws, then and in that case such person may enter one quarter-section, of 160 acres, of the land so settled upon or improved, by paying therefor $1.25 per acre.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I scarcely think a matter of this great importance should be passed upon in a short period of time and without full and deliberate discussion, as will be the case if the bill should be passed in the morning hour.

This is a proposition to confirm instead of forfeiting a railroad grant, the larger part of upward of 48,000,000 acres of the public land. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska forfeits a very large proportion, I am not prepared to say how much, but all the grant which was not earned within the time specified in the granting act. The question then is clearly presented between the rights and interests of all the people of the United States on one side sought to be protected by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska and the interests of the few persons who own and control the Northern Pacific Railroad Company on the other side.

The question therefore before the Senate is whether it will adopt the principle of the House bill or whether it will adopt the principle of a forfeiture of the lands beyond the present point of completion, and, as I said, it involves a great many millions of acres of the public land and the right of hundreds of thousands of the people of the United States to homes and subsistence for themselves and their wives and children.

The whole question is before the Senate whether the demand of the people, and their rightful and just demand, that where a railroad company has failed to comply with the provisions of the law the Congress of the United States shall declare that the law which created the grant and which provided that at a certain period of time the grant should expire, and the land should belong to the public domain and be open to settlement and occupation by the people under the homestead laws shall be observed, or whether Congress will make a new grant of perhaps a hundred million dollars or more of the public money in the form of a land grant to a few individuals.

I read from a report made by the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives in regard to the amendment which the Senator from Nebraska has offered:

Your committee hereby adopt as their report the report of the Public Lands Committee made to the House of Representatives in the Forty-eighth Congress. The legal status remains the same, and your committee therefore have concluded to present that report, as it stands, as their report to this Congress.

* * * * * * *

Your committee have given the subject-matter of this grant—

The grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company—

patient, careful, and thorough consideration. They are satisfied that the grant was one in præsenti upon condition subsequent; that by breach of such condition the grant, along the entire line so far as it was uncompleted on the 4th day of July, 1879, is, and has been since said date, subject to forfeiture, and that justice to the United States and her citizens now require that a forfeiture and restoration of the lands to the public domain should be declared by act of Congress. To accomplish that result and at the same time protect purchasers of the company's title prior to January 1, 1881, and actual settlers and owners of valuable improvements on the odd sections adjacent to the uncompleted portions of said road who settled or made said improvements with bona fide intent to secure title through the company, your committee have prepared a substitute for said bills, and herewith report the same to the House and recommend its passage.

The bill now proposed to be passed by the Senate and called up on the motion of the Senator from Oregon is an entirely different bill, and gives to the railroad company millions of acres of the public land beyond that contemplated in this report and recommended by it.

In view of the fact that the conclusion to which your committee have arrived was earnestly combated by learned counsel in elaborate argument and briefs, we deem it proper to refer somewhat minutely and in detail to what we consider the most material points of the case, especially as it was urged that the grant to this company was in certain features an exception from the otherwise unbroken line of forfeitable grants, an isolated example of unparalleled generosity on the part of the United States in giving away millions of acres of the public domain without any provision for resuming its title even upon absolute failure of the company to fulfill its part of the contract. That such a construction in effect of the granting act was not only seriously but earnestly and forcibly urged by learned and distinguished counsel for the company is the apology of your committee for what might otherwise be deemed an unnecessary elaboration of the subject under consideration.

The act of Congress containing the grant to this company was approved July 2, 1864 (13 Statutes, 365), and the grant itself was in extent the most munificent of all the princely donations made in the era of liberality to aid in the construction of railroads, being for 20 miles along the entire line in all the States and 40 miles in all the Territories through which the line might be located, with the right of indemnity selection within 10 additional miles, afterward by subsequent act (16 Statutes, 278) enlarged to 20 miles, for all lands lost in the grant in place.

The land affected by the grant and subject to its operation was in fact all odd-numbered sections in a belt of the public domain extending over 2,000 miles from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, 40 miles in width in all the States and 80 miles in width in all the Territories through which the line should be located.

This was a grant of an empire, capable of sustaining millions of the people of the United States, the most munificent grant that was ever made, and equal to any conquest by any conquering army at any period of the history of the world. Its value is hardly to be estimated in money at this time. It is the gift of two or three hundred millions of dollars of present and future values to a few individuals.

The consideration of this munificent grant, as specifically declared by the act itself, was "to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores" over said railway (section 3), "to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line," to keep "the same in working order," and "to secure to the Government at all times, but particularly in time of war, the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes." (Section 20.)

Section 3 of the act, embracing the grant of lands, was in the following words:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and is hereby, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores, over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as said company may adopt, through the Territories of the United States, and ten alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad whenever it passes through any State, and whenever on the line thereof the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed and the plat thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and whenever prior to said term any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, or pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections and designated by odd numbers, not more than 10 miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections."

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 8. * * * That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876."

Section 9 of the act was in the following words:

"SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same upon the further condition that if the company make any breach of the conditions hereof and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States, by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of said road."

The period fixed by the eighth section of the granting act above quoted within which the road was required to be completed was subsequently extended to the 4th day of July, 1879, as appears from the following facts: The joint resolution of May 7, 1866 (14 Statutes, 355), extended the time two years, and the joint resolution of July 1, 1868 (15 Statutes, 255), amended section 8, the original granting act, so as to read July 4, 1877. On June 11, 1879 (General Land Office Report, 1879, pages 109–111), the Secretary of the Interior held that the effect of these two joint resolutions was to extend the time to July 4, 1879. In this view your committee concurs, and we adopt that date as the expiration of the period of limitation.

The total length of the line as located and proposed, including the Washington Territory branch, was 2,270 miles. Prior to July 4, 1879, there has been completed 531 miles of road, leaving 1,739 miles uncompleted at the expiration of the time limited. (See report of Secretary of the Interior to Forty-seventh Congress, Executive Document No. 144, page 41.) In round numbers and estimated 10,675,200 acres are by the bill reported conceded to the company and 27,539,840 acres subjected to forfeiture.

The question therefore before the Senate sought to be determined in this hasty manner by the bill is, whether 27,539,840 acres of the public domain shall now be given by the Senate bill to a few individuals constituting this corporation, in value equal to $100,000,000 at this time, and a part of the public domain required by the people of this country for homesteads for its citizens, for its families, for its men out of employment.

No graver question can be presented to the Senate. There is none in the whole range of public questions of greater importance to the people to be settled than the question whether the Congress of the United States is to appropriate the public money and the public property to enrich a few individuals, for that is what it means, neither more nor less. I here in my place protest against such a use of the powers of Government, of the public functions, as to confer vast wealth upon a few individuals while a million of men with their familes are out of employment, without homes, and without the means of comfortable subsistence.

Instead of complying with the just demand of the associated laboring men and women of the country to enact some measures by which the burden of their toil and poverty shall be lightened this bill proposes to lay still heavier burdens on them, and to place beyond their reach 27,000,000 acres of the public domain which partly belongs to them.

There is no question or doubt that the franchise of this road, with the 10,000,000 acres of land granted by the House bill, is more than sufficient to build this road.

There is no question of the construction of the railroad presented by this bill. There is no question that this great highway failed to be constructed within the time limited by the act, and that by emigration and the increase of the population of the country these lands have become immensely valuable. All the circumstances which require and justify the original policy, if there was justification for such a vast donation of an empire of land for any purpose whatever to a few individuals, have changed and no longer exist.

The report of the committee of the other House proceeds:

The consideration of the case involves two general and leading questions: First, the power of Congress to declare a grant of public lands forfeited for breach of condition-subsequent; second, whether, this power being established, there are any features in this particular case excepting the grant from the general rule.

The power of Congress to declare forfeited a grant of the public lands, made to either a corporation or a State, by an act containing a clause providing that the lands should revert upon failure to build the road within a specified time, is established beyond all controversy by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court.

I undertake to say that this is a proposition which can not be reasonably assailed. It is self-evident, and had the Supreme Court decided that Congress under the Constitution had no sovereign powers of legislation it would not have affected or changed the sovereign powers of Congress. But they have not so decided, and there is in my opinion no justification or reason in the argument that there is any warrant in the decision of the Supreme Court that a present interest vested under these grants denies or limits the powers of Congress, or the proposition that there is any limitation placed by them upon the power of Congress to declare a forfeiture, the absolute and discretionary power of Congress whenever there was a failure to complete the road within the time specified in the act.

It is specifically so held in United States vs. Repentigny (5 Wall., 211) and Schulenberg vs. Harriman (21 Wall., 44).

Following these cases is another which even more unequivocally defines the power of Congress in this regard. In Farnsworth vs. Minnesota and Pacific Railroad Company (92 U. S., 66), the court, considering the question, said:

"A forfeiture by the State of an interest in lands and connected franchises, granted for the construction of a public work, may be declared for non-compliance with the conditions annexed to their grant or their possession, when forfeiture is provided by statute, without judicial proceedings to ascertain and determine the failure of the grantee to perform the conditions."

Following these authoritative expositions of the law, as well as the reasons and sense of the principle involved, your committee have uniformly held that jurisdiction existed in Congress to declare these grants forfeited and have reported several bills to accomplish that purpose, some of which have already passed the House. We adhere to this position in the case under consideration.

Your committee are also clearly of the opinion that there is nothing in the provisions of the Northern Pacific act which takes it out of the category of grants upon condition-subsequent, liable to forfeiture for breach of condition.

What pretense can be set up in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court in this language:

A forfeiture by the State of an interest in lands and connected franchises, granted for the construction of a public work, may be declared for non-compliance with the conditions annexed to their grant or their possession, when forfeiture is provided by statute, without judicial proceedings to ascertain and determine the failure of the grantee to perform the conditions.

That settles the question as to the opinion of the Supreme Court; but for one I protest against any proposition that a tribunal composed of nine men holding office for life can in this republic of the people deprive the people's representatives, the Congress of the United States, of its constitutional functions. It is the court's function to consider and apply the law as Congress makes it, and not to repeal or modify or qualify or change in any form or degree the exercise of the sovereign legislative power of the people of this country. But the court has not undertaken to do so. It has, on the contrary, expressly declared that when forfeiture is provided by statute, as in this case, a condition not being performed, the grant shall lapse, as in all these cases, whenever Congress shall so declare, as the Supreme Court declare that Congress may by statute declare a forfeiture without the intervention of any legal or judicial proceeding:

The question turns upon a consideration of sections 3, 5, 8, and 9, hereinbefore quoted. The company claim that they constitute an absolute dedication of the lands to the purpose of constructing the road; that there is no condition-subsequent whatever, and that the only power in the United States is the power through Congress to adopt such measures as may be necessary to insure the completion of the road in case the company does not build it.

On the other hand, your committee regard this construction as utterly untenable, and are clearly of the opinion—

1. That section 8 of the act declares a condition-subsequent, namely, that the road shall be completed within a certain time, upon breach of which the grantor may declare a forfeiture.

This was a most unwise and imprudent grant. Far better would it have been for Congress to have granted the bonds for the reasonable cost of the road than to have given the power to demand of the settlers in 48,000,000 of acres of the public domain, twice the cost of building the road.

The road is 2,000 miles long. The grant is 40 miles in width in the States and 80 miles in width in the Territories, a territory greater than many great kingdoms. In round numbers it is estimated in this report that 10,675,200 acres are by the bill reported to the House conceded to the company and 138,539,840 acres subjected to forfeiture.

Mr. President, when you consider the fact that has been developed before the Senate in the reports of its Committees on Interstate Commerce, that a taxing power upon the people of this country greater than that exercised by Congress, upon every man, woman, and child, has imposed a debt of $3,000,000,000 upon this people in the shape of fraudulent and fictitious securities, and that while we are here pretending to exercise the powers of legislation in this most important of all subjects, the power of taxation, the power to oppress the labor of the country and take from it its hire for public purposes, has been exercised without our knowledge or consent, and a debt greater than the war debt has been imposed and now rests upon the people by virtue of the issue of fraudulent securities issued by transportation companies with the power to tax for all locomotion and transportation to pay the interest on their securities—when we reflect that this 138,000,000 acres of public land is now proposed to be appropriated to the same purpose, to float additional securities with the power of taxation upon the people of this country, the magnitude of the question involved in this bill may be somewhat appreciated. The passage of this bill in its present shape will be a menace to all the property interests of the country. It will be a defiance by the Senate of the people and their just demands. It will be a declaration that the Senate will use the powers of legislation in the interests of corporate power and against the people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. VEST. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sorry that the Senator from Nebraska has thought it to be his duty to offer this amendment on this occasion to this bill.

The bill as it stands, if I correctly understand it, and I believe I do, provides for forfeiting and resuming to the United States all the lands that lie between what is called the Wallula Junction, up the Columbia River, and Portland—a line which is within the original charter, but which the company has never undertaken to build, but it has supplied that gap by leasing or coming into some arrangement with another railroad company that did not have any grant. There is a clear case where whatever lands are embarrassed by this old grant can be resumed and put into the public land system of the United States with the universal consent probably of both Houses of Congress. It is sure to become a law. There is so much good done about which we can all agree.

That being the state of this bill, a thing we certainly can accomplish, the Senator from Nebraska thinks it desirable to raise the disputed and mooted question as to whether these other grants of land to the Northern Pacific Company, which are affected by the fact whether that company built its road or did not build its road within the time fixed by Congress can be forfeited by the United States under the decisions of the Supreme Court already made. That is a mooted, a disputed, and a difficult question which requires great consideration, and about which gentlemen would largely differ not only in respect of the absolute vested rights of this corporation, which Congress can not take away from it if it wishes to do so, but also in respect to the justice and morality of Congress from the mere lapse of time (the executive department and Congress together having allowed the corporation to go on and build its road and have it inspected and get its land certified), now going back upon them in respect of the circumstance that they did not come to the time within which they were to build. I do not mean to express my opinion about that now.

Some years ago the committee of which I am a member, the Committee on the Judiciary, had the subject of the forfeiture of all these grants under consideration; and that committee at that time came to the conclusion that such a course would not be just, and that it was for the interest of the United States to waive mere questions of time, that those companies which were now—that is at the time we made the report four or five years ago—actually engaged in going on to build the lines that the people wanted and that it was for the public interest to build, should not be interfered with, but to cut off all dead grants and all grants where the conduct of the companies had not been excusable in respect of not keeping within the time.

In that state of things I do not wish to vote yes or no on this distinct proposition, because on consideration and time to consider it, and as a measure which should receive careful attention, I might in the end think it right as it stands. But now why should we embarrass a thing we can all agree about by undertaking to hitch on to it a measure about which there is fair room for an honest difference of opinion as to the law as it is, and for an honest difference of opinion as to what justice and public policy require?

So it seems to me that my friend from Nebraska ought not to press this amendment now, and that he ought to withdraw it and let us get what we can all agree about and are clear about, and not embarrass a measure that is clearly good by one that is open to so many considerations of difficulty. I hope my friend from Nebraska will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Vermont appeals to the Senator from Nebraska. I did not intend to say a word on this matter. I know that the Senators from Oregon and some others are anxious to pass the bill in this shape; and of course, if it is all we can get, I shall have to take that; but I can take no other position than I do, believing as I do that we should not merely take the forfeiture of the lands from Wallula Junction to Portland, a portion of the line that the company never contemplated to build, and that it is willing and desirous, or, I may say, is willing, should be forfeited.

There is an honest difference of opinion, I admit. I should be content, and so the people would be, with the vote of the Senate and the vote of Congress on that point, because that would be the end of it. I and many others have believed when the question of forfeiture has arisen that there should be lands forfeited even where roads were built after the expiration of the term; that if a road was not completed when the time fixed by law expired the railroad company should come to Congress and ask them to extend the time; but I do not desire now to discuss the question. I want a speedy vote on the matter.

The Senator appealed to me, but I can not see the force of the appeal. This is an amendment which a large portion of Congress concedes that it is right to pass and a great portion of the American people believe it is right. I can see no objection to the proposition of this amendment and to taking a vote on it.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska embraces the grant for all the completed road west of Bismarck, in Dakota, does it not?

Mr. VAN WYCK. What was not completed at the time fixed, July 4, 1879.

Mr. DOLPH. It is the land on the completed road west of Bismarck, is it not?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator knows the point where the road was completed. He can state the fact.

Mr. DOLPH. At the Missouri River in Dakota.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was about to move to lay the amendment on the table so as not to make any prejudice in favor of the company by the rejection of the amendment—to lay it on the table without expressing any opinion on it at all; but I do not make the motion if anybody wishes to say anything about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think it is proper or fair that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska shall be precipitated upon the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands. As I understood, the purpose of the committee was to accomplish something. It was considered that by this bill the forfeiture of the lands and their resumption by the United States from Wallula to the terminus could be effected and the bill become a law, and all other questions would be untouched.

Now, I think I will go about as far as the Senator from Nebraska in declaring forfeitures where they ought to be declared; but there is a "zeal according to knowledge" and there is a zeal not according to knowledge. There is one way of accomplishing a thing, and there is a way of defeating it which appears to be in its favor. We can pass—the Senate will agree to it and the House will agree to it—a bill declaring this forfeiture from Wallula to the terminus, and then we can consider the other question unaffected by that. That will be accomplished. It is something. We have had these bills of forfeiture in Congress for years, and by some means or other they never become laws. The bill that I introduced for the forfeiture of the lands of the Iron Mountain Railroad, a short piece of road, is I think the only one that has become a law.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator forgets the Texas and Pacific grant.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes; the Texas and Pacific forfeiture bill was passed last session; but that was a very easy matter.

Here some want to go to an extreme length; others want to take a medium position, and others want to go a very short distance, and none of them will compromise. I believe that we ought to agree upon something and accomplish something; and it was for that reason that I was in favor of this bill, which could become a law and become operative; and then I was in favor at the same time of considering the other question. I think that is the only way to succeed. I think it is the only way to accomplish anything. I think the Senator from Nebraska is throwing a stumbling-block in his own pathway. I think he is doing more to prevent any forfeiture than could possibly be done by passing this bill. The Committee on Public Lands——

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri if the Committee on Public Lands have considered the question now presented in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska at all?

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand it, they have not. I was just going to remark that the Committee on Public Lands have not come to a conclusion in regard to the bill which has been offered here as an amendment.

Mr. BECK. One other suggestion. Would the laying of this amendment on the table now be any committal in any way against the forfeiture declared by it, provided the Committee on Public Lands should consider it proper?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see that it would.

Mr. BECK. Why not let the whole subject go to the committee now and be considered at once?

Mr. COCKRELL. I propose to move to recommit the whole matter to the Committee on Public Lands for further consideration.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator from Missouri will yield a moment, I hope the Senator will not propose to recommit the whole bill. The bill has had the consideration of the Committee on Public Lands day after day.

Mr. COCKRELL. If we can not get the Committee on Public Lands to agree in its action then let the matter come into the Senate and be indiscriminately discussed; but let the Committee on Public Lands consider the question and make its report, and then the Senate will know the views of the committee upon the whole question. It seems that we can not accomplish a part without taking all, and the effort to take all will defeat anything.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the bill which is under consideration, to say nothing about the amendment, has been considered and reported by the committee as a case of clear and unquestionable propriety of forfeiture and restoration.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all done. The committee has come to that conclusion because the pathway was clear. Now comes the Senator from Nebraska with an amendment which opens an entirely different and separate question, as we all agree, which may be decided one way or may be decided another way upon consideration. Now why should this measure, as the Senator from Missouri has concurred I suppose, as he is a member of that committee I believe, in reporting, and which is a good measure, be hung up by being sent back to the committee to see whether it can not be married to some other doubtful and disputable proposition, which, as the Senator from Missouri says, never seems to get through? As he has stated, let us do the good that we can and then consider the other.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the bill ought to be recommitted, and I feel sure that the Committee on Public Lands will come to a conclusion and make a report. It is not fair to the committee that we shall come in here divided unless we are divided upon written views submitted to the Senate. Therefore I move——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me a word?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state that this bill does not include all the unearned lands that were granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad. A portion of the committee tried to put on an amendment including the lands that were granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad on the line of what is known as the Cascade branch, which is not yet finished—it is not finished to-day—but the Senator from Oregon refused every effort to include all the lands which are unearned. Therefore the Senator from Nebraska had a perfect right to offer this amendment, because the bill seeks to forfeit a portion, which would have the effect of confirming the title to the other unearned lands on the Cascade branch.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am not discussing what may have occurred between the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Oregon or any one else in committee. I am stating the conclusion. The committee never acted on anything but that one question, and now it is not fair that these other questions shall be precipitated into a measure in the morning hour and the Senate be called upon to decide them. I believe it is right and proper that the whole matter shall go back to the committee and let the contention be there settled. Therefore I move that the pending bill and the amendment be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. How far this proposition may be "according to knowledge" would rest especially on what is knowledge. I know it is very easy to hurl epithets at and denounce a man because the victim is not quite long enough or short enough for the iron bed prescribed for it. I offered the bill reported by the House committee as an amendment, and whether that was above or beneath knowledge I shall not say. It is a bill that probably will be passed by the House, and I was anxious to do just what the Senator from Vermont wanted and just what the other Senator wanted, to get some measure which could become a law; and this will be nearer becoming a law if we shall adopt the House proposition than if we send a measure to the House which we know they will not adopt. That has been the case from time to time.

I have heard the suggestions of Senators; and I would desire to yield to the wish of my friend from Vermont, whom I esteem so highly, and, therefore, I have thought that under the circumstances I would withdraw this proposition if the Senate consent and propose another which is a medium ground.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do not do that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I shall have to do it. It seems to me that here is a question of the forfeiture of the lands of the Northern Pacific Railway, and we are proposing to deal with it by piecemeal. We take a little here, and then we protest that it is only for a little, and that we will attack another little by and by, and this railroad goes on and comes up and says, "You gentlemen do not act according to knowledge," and the world would say we did not act according to knowledge in taking up one question and dealing with it by piecemeal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask my distinguished friend—and I am sure he will answer yes—whether he does not see clearly a distinction in dealing for the interest of the United States between undertaking to get what we clearly have a right to, and what nobody can dispute by itself, and the matter of trying to get that by tying on something that is disputed both in point of law and in point of justice? Is it taking here a little and there a little when these two classes of lands stand, as we all agree, upon entirely different questions?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I would say to the Senator that if it was a matter of dispute between the people and the Northern Pacific Railroad as to this portion of the lands from Wallula to Portland there might be some force in his distinction; but here is a piece of land which the railroad company is desirous or rather willing we should take. There is no question about that. That we never can lose. There is no question in dispute about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is hung up.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The railroad company when they desire a thing come and besiege the Senate Chamber and besiege the Senate of the United States, but there is no one from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company who asks us to keep our hands off this piece of ground from Wallula to Portland. They want Congress to do it and to do it in this way, so that it shall be a concession on the part of Congress that it ends the question. That will be their argument hereafter; and when you undertake to touch the other part they will come here and say, "You have passed on the question."

I will withdraw this and offer another amendment which I think we can readily agree upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to recommit.

Mr. BECK. I wish to offer——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to Senators that no amendment is in order until the question of recommittal is disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can not the Senator from Nebraska withdraw his first amendment?

Mr. BECK. I wish to introduce an amendment—

That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release or in any way affect any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them to the said railroad company forfeited for any failure of said company to comply with the conditions of the grant.

That is to exclude a conclusion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That meets the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] withdrawing his amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I propose this amendment to which I trust there will be no objection——

Mr. BECK. Is not my amendment now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the motion to recommit the bill no amendment is in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw that motion for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to recommit is withdrawn.

Mr. BECK. Then I offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill as a new section:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release or in any way affect any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them to the said railroad company forfeited for any failure of said company to comply with the conditions of the grant.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope that will be adopted by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is right. It saves all possible questions.

Mr. BECK. It does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Having withdrawn the amendment I first offered, I now propose, after the word "main," in line 10 of section 1, to strike out down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, and to insert:

And branch lines where the railroad required by said act has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act.

That is, that the lands for other portions of this road where the railroad has not been completed shall be included in this act and shall be forfeited. I presume nobody will object to that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "main," in line 10 of section 1, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, as follows:

Line which extends from Wallula Junction, in Washington Territory, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, except such of said lands as appertain to and are conterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And branch lines where the railroad required by said act has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act.

So as to make the section read:

That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of its main and branch lines where the railroad required by said act has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act be, and the same are hereby, resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain, and made subject to disposition and settlement under the general laws relating to the public lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I were forced to vote at this moment on that amendment on its merits, I, for one, should vote no, because knowing nothing about the Northern Pacific Railroad Company as a corporation and having nothing to do with it, I do know as a person connected with public affairs and studying the history of his country that that company or somebody under that company is at this moment engaged in building the extension of its line to reach Puget Sound across the Cascade Mountains through a very high and mountainous piece of country, in order to get a complete through and independent line to the Pacific Ocean at Puget Sound. I say if I were to vote at this moment, in order to get that thing accomplished, and if it were entirely a new question, I would vote about all the land that they would ask for in those mountains in order to get it done. And inasmuch as that was in their original grant and they are now engaged in building that most difficult and necessary connection of this road to get straight to Puget Sound, I should vote against the amendment on the merits. But I do not want to foreclose its merits. The Senator from Kentucky has got in a saving clause as to all the land grants of this company, so that the company can gain nothing by inference or otherwise from the act as it now stands. Therefore, when everybody has said what he wishes to say, I shall move to lay this amendment on the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I have so far refrained from saying anything on this bill, although I reported it, because I was anxious to get a vote this morning; and I am not going to discuss it at length now.

The situation is just this: For 214 miles, from Wallula to Portland, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company never has done anything toward constructing its road, except to secure some strategic points and do some grading at such points on the north side of the river. They are not now proposing the immediate construction of the road. Eventually they will be compelled to build it. They would like to retain the grant until they get ready to construct the road; but I think they ought not to have it. The region is being rapidly settled; the grant is in the way of the development of the country, and it ought to be forfeited, and it ought to have been forfeited long ago. The only other portion of the road that has not been completed is a gap of 75 miles through the Cascade Mountains. If Senators will examine the map of Oregon and Washington they will see that the Cascade Mountains extend from the northern boundary of Washington Territory down to the southern boundary of Oregon and separate both Oregon and Washington into two parts, eastern and western. Over the Cascade Mountains, in Washington Territory, there is not a wagon-road.

The people of Washington Territory in passing from one side to the other have to go by the Columbia River and by Portland, in Oregon; and every bushel of produce that is raised in Eastern Washington has to be taken down through the gorge of the Columbia. It is usually shipped to Portland, and from thence to foreign market. There in Western Washington is the great Puget Sound extending 100 miles inland, 150 miles north and south, affording with the rivers which discharge into it a great system of water navigation. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company are struggling to complete its Cascade branch to connect by a direct line Lake Superior and Puget Sound. Just north of their line now completed is the Canadian Pacific Railroad. That railroad company received from the Canadian Government $25,000,000 in money and 25,000,000 acres of land and a loan of $35,000,000, and the government took back from the company 6,666,666 acres of land at $1.50 an acre, making $10,000,000. It received a donation of completed road of 707 miles—from Lake Superior westward to Winnipeg, 400 and odd miles; from Winnipeg to the boundary line of the United States, 65 miles; and on the western slope, 200 and odd miles. So there was $25,000,000, 25,000,000 acres of land, a loan of $35,000,000, and 707 miles of completed road—completed in the best manner—donated to them.

The Government of Great Britain has granted a subsidy to that company of $500,000 a year for the purpose of aiding in establishing a line of steamers from the terminus of their road on Puget Sound to Australia, China, and Japan, and the company is now having constructed five large steamships which will be ready in 1888 for service, and in the mean time are proposing to put on a line of three steamships which are to be hired or purchased for the purpose. England, with its commercial ports and commercial agencies established all over the world, is attempting to seize and take out of our grasp the commerce of the old East, of the Pacific coast, and Puget Sound; and what are we doing? Here is this Northern Pacific Railroad, which has been completed under the provisions of the charter of the company and in compliance with the conditions of its grant from Lake Superior to the Columbia River, and from Portland down the Columbia to Kalama and thence to Puget Sound, and the Cascade branch of which has been completed up into the foothills of the mountains on both sides, to Ellensburg on the east side of the mountains and into the Green River Mountains on the west side, until there are only 75 miles of mountain road to complete it and secure a direct line to tide water on the sound, and it is now seriously proposed in the United States Senate in the face of all that has been done by the British Government for the Canadian Pacific Railroad that the United States shall step in and stop the completion of that through line, that we shall prevent a company incorporated by Congress and in which our citizens of every State and Territory are interested, from completing a great national enterprise and securing a portion of the commerce of the Pacific. There is no land now on the uncompleted portion of that branch, or at most a small amount, that is fit for agricultural purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator one question. How far is it from Wallula where this Cascade branch starts out until you get down to Portland?

Mr. DOLPH. The Cascade branch starts from a place 11 miles above Wallula, but its main line is constructed down to Wallula. It is 214 miles, the line we propose to forfeit, to Portland.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to know the length of the Cascade branch, not the branch from Wallula down to Portland, but the Cascade branch to the mountains.

Mr. DOLPH. I can not state precisely now from recollection. My impression is that it is 175 miles, of which there are 100 miles completed.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are 100 miles already completed?

Mr. DOLPH. Already built.

Mr. COCKRELL. Leaving a link of 75 miles.

Mr. DOLPH. I can state that generally from recollection. It is all of that any way. In that 75 miles there is a tunnel 1.9 miles long; and I saw a statement in the papers recently that already 550 feet of this tunnel have been cut and they are boring the tunnel from both ends. The contract has been let for the construction of this road for this entire gap; and it is stated in the Oregon and Washington papers that by next spring cars will be running over the mountains, the company making what they call a switch-back over the tunnel if the tunnel can not be completed in time. There are no agricultural lands, I am informed, within the grant conterminous with this gap.

I have been asked by some of the Senators on the floor, "Then why not forfeit it; they lose nothing?" Because the credit of the company depends largely upon the land; and they can only construct their road in sections of 20 miles. When 20 miles have been constructed and approved, upon the strength of the title to lands thus acquired and the security of the constructed road they are able to sell the bonds for that section and apply the money received to the construction of the next section.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand the Senator, on the 75 miles of uncompleted road the lands are of no value practically.

Mr. DOLPH. They are of no value unless there should be some mineral found.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why does the Senator object to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, which confirms all the land on the completed portion of that road, and only declares a forfeiture of 75 miles?

Mr. DOLPH. Because the bonds issued for constructed road are sold in sections, and if this amendment should pass, forfeiting that 75 miles, then there would be no further construction, because the contract under which bonds are sold would not be carried out; its provisions would be violated; the bonds could not be sold. So construction would be stopped.

Mr. GEORGE. Allow me to ask a question for information. How much of this road has been completed?

Mr. DOLPH. Nearly 2,000 miles, I believe.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator say that it is necessary for a company that has 2,000 miles of completed road to have a land grant in order to build 75 miles more.

Mr. DOLPH. It is necessary. Every mile of the road has two mortgages upon it, one for $25,000 a mile, and a second mortgage for $15,000, making $40,000; and certain fixed charges have to be met. The construction can only be carried on by the earnings of the road and by the proceeds of the bonds as the sections are completed.

One thing more and I shall be done. During this administration 25 miles on each side have been received, and commissioners have just been appointed to receive 50 miles more.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am not in favor of the amendment of my good friend from Nebraska, because it goes further than I can go in the confirmation of this grant. He proposes, in line 10, after the word "main," to make the word "line" plural and make it read "lines," and then to insert:

And branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act.

Then it will read:

That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of its main and branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act, which extends from Wallula Junction, in Washington Territory, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon.

There can be but one construction to that amendment, and that is that it confirms all the land conterminous with the present completed portion of the Cascade branch, which will be over 100 miles. Now the bill without the amendment would leave that whole question open. Therefore I can not vote to confirm a grant 100 miles long to that branch road.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I assured the Senate that I at least would take no time in debate on this question; and I have suffered suggestions to be made which I thought ought to be replied to; but my good friend from Missouri seems unable to agree with me at all. First, it is obstruction to do what he thinks now ought to be done; and now this does not do enough and the other did too much. One was "according to knowledge," and this is beyond knowledge, I suppose, as it appears in the mind of the Senator from Missouri.

The answer to the Senator from Oregon is simply here. This company beyond 1874, when their time expired under the former act, have been living by grace for twelve years; from 1874 to 1886 have been outside the terms of the grant; and now it seems that for 75 miles this huge corporation are still clinging to a portion of this grant which they say is entirely worthless. That is all I need say in answer to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to lay this amendment on the table.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask the Senator from Vermont to withdraw the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw it for the moment.

Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon what is the meaning of the second section, which requires settlers to pay $2.50 per acre for lands covered by the grant which is to be forfeited under this bill?

Mr. DOLPH. It is only settlers who are in possession of the land under contracts with the company, and who must be protected. It does not interfere with the action of the general land laws at all. It provides for cases where parties have gone in under contracts with the company. The committee carefully examined all these points and heard parties upon them.

Mr. EUSTIS. I would call attention to the similarity of the condition of these settlers with settlers who took under railroads in Louisiana.

I shall vote against any such provision of law. Here is a grant which has been made by the Government of the United States which was simply a gratuitous donation, a mere act of beneficence by which the Government of the United States translated from itself to a railroad corporation a property of very great, if not immense, prospective value. Up to the time that that grant was made by the Government of the United States to this railroad corporation that land belonged to the people of the United States, and any citizen of the United States under the laws of the United States had a right to enter upon that land and to acquire it under the pre-emption or homestead act, to take possession of that land, to establish his homestead, to build his house, to have a roof to cover his family, and to till that ground for the support of his family. That was the right which existed in behalf, I say, of every citizen of the United States. It was a curtailment of that right and a divestiture of that right for the Government of the United States to transfer that property to a railroad corporation.

I am not going to discuss the question of the policy of land grants to railroads; but how was that grant made? It was made upon express and explicit conditions, and it was a grant that was defeasible by the non-fulfillment of those conditions which the grantor and the owner of that land had a right to impose and did impose. If the corporation has not fulfilled the conditions which it accepted at the time that it accepted the grant, if the corporation for any reason whatsoever did not place itself in such a position as to make that conditional title an absolute and a complete title, if by reason of the inaction of the grantee, the railroad corporation, the conditions under which this grant was made remained in suspense and were never and have never yet been fulfilled, it is a clear proposition of law, as well as it would be clear in equity, that that land to-day is in the same condition as though that grant had never been made.

That grant has never been in operation; that grant has never translated any property to that railroad company; there has never been any title acquired by that railroad company under that grant; and if that be so, the purport of the question which I addressed to the Senator from Oregon was why, if that grant has never been in operation, do you impose conditions upon the settlers who have gone there, not in violation of law, but exercising a right under the law? Why is it that you impose upon those settlers conditions as harsh as this is if the grant had been acquired by the fulfillment of the conditions contained in the grant?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The conditions are for the benefit of the settlers.

Mr. EUSTIS. That is a difference of opinion. I believe the condition is in the interest of the railroad company, and that it is the interest of the railroad company to allow it to be known by a declaration of Congress that these lands can not be acquired at a less price than the railroad company sells lands at; and it is in order to maintain the value of its lands, in the interest of the railroad company at the sacrifice of the rights of the settlers, in my humble judgment, that that provision is put in this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that in the absence of that provision the settler could only take under any of the land laws 160 acres, while under this provision he takes 320 acres. The provision is in the interest of the settler.

Mr. EUSTIS. I am speaking of the question of price. That same proposition is made with reference to the Vicksburg and Shreveport Railroad, in the State of Louisiana. There the condition was not complied with because the ten years had expired before the railroad was completed, and yet that railroad company insists that the settlers shall pay $2 an acre for land which in my humble judgment they have never earned and do not own, except by the sufferance and permission of Congress.

What sort of a title is that which I hear so repeatedly declared to be valid under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and under the rulings of the Executive Department of the Government, that it is a legal title, a title that is vested, a title that concludes the world? I ask what sort of a title is that when the power of Congress to forfeit that title is recognized by the Supreme Court itself? So long as Congress has the jurisdiction and the power, which I understand to be conceded by the strongest personal or judicial advocates of railroad corporations in this land, that the power to forfeit does reside in Congress, that if Congress made a grant of land upon condition that a railroad should be built within ten years, if that condition was not complied with Congress can exercise the power of forfeiting and destroying that inchoate and conditional title and restoring it to the Government of the United States, thereby protecting the rights of the settlers, the poor people who have settled upon these lands. It is, Mr. President, in their interest and in their behalf that I participate in this discussion to-day.

I had occasion at a previous session to declare most emphatically my opinion on this question. I believe it is one of the most infamous outrages that has ever been perpetrated by a civilized government, that Congress having power to protect these poor settlers who are doing nothing except comply with or offering to comply with the laws of the United States, whose little homes are worth to them as much as millions are worth to the millionaire, who have spent years and years in improving their poor estates, making their crops and providing shelter for their families, that this great Government legislates in the interest of these rich railroad corporations at the sacrifice of these poor and honest citizens in our land.

Sir, I never will vote for any bill to affirm or to ratify a railroad grant that ought to be forfeited unless it contains a provision and a clause to protect these settlers and to allow them to enjoy the same rights that they would have enjoyed if the grant had never been made.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the Committee on Public Lands to a very singular phase of this important question. I do it in order to direct their attention to the importance of action upon this question by Congress.

Here is a power which resides in Congress to forfeit. That, I say, is a conceded power. It is not disputed even by the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. No one, if the power exists, has a right to dictate to Congress when that power shall be exercised. If that power exists and if that jurisdiction exists, it does not become impaired or debilitated or exhausted by any lapse of time, as I understand; and yet the Executive Department of the Government—and I do not state this with any spirit of criticism—can defeat that power, can nullify that jurisdiction, by issuing patents to the railroad companies although they may not have earned these grants. That is to say, it will be seen by the very able report of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Teller, in 1882 and 1883, and the report of Mr. Lamar, that the attention of Congress has been directed to this question, and they have not only asked but implored Congress to act definitively upon the question of these grants and of protecting the rights of the settlers, but they intimate that unless Congress does act the Executive Department of the Government will be called upon to act, and the Executive Department of the Government may issue patents to a railroad corporation which possibly in the opinion of Congress has never earned the grant.

Who are the class of people interested in this important question? They are a poor class of people, people who do not perhaps have as strong a voice as they ought to have in the halls of legislation; but they are a class of people who are to-day living in a condition of anxiety and trepidation that is perfectly appalling and distressing. I have received many letters upon this question from the settlers, and from the condition of the question I have not been able to give them a satisfactory answer. Therefore, I hope the Committee on Public Lands at an early day will bring in a bill to determine the rights of corporations under these grants and to protect the settlers on the public lands.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the unfinished business of yesterday will be laid before the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4838) to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7167) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Hunter; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THE SHIPPING LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House agreeing to the conference report on House bill 4838.

Mr. MILLER. On the part of the conferees of the Senate I present the report of the committee of conference and ask that it may be now considered.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4838) "to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 24, and 26, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its amendment striking out section numbered 3, and agree in lieu thereof to insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That section 10 of the act entitled 'An act to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes,' approved June 26, 1884, be amended by striking out the words 'That it shall be lawful for any seaman to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of any portion of the wages which he may earn to his wife, mother, or other relative, but to no other person or corporation,' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'That it shall be lawful for any seaman to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of all or any portion of the wages which he may earn to his wife, mother, or other relative, or to an original creditor in liquidation of any just debt for board or clothing which he may have contracted prior to engagement, not exceeding $10 per month for each month of the time usually required for the voyage for which the seaman has shipped under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, but no allotment to any other person or corporation shall be lawful.'

And said section 10 is further amended by striking out all of the last paragraph after the words 'vessels of the United States,' and inserting in lieu of such words stricken out the following: 'And any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated this section shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for a similar violation.'"

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the following new section in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 14. That section 4418 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by striking out from the nineteenth and following lines thereof the words "and, to indicate the pressure of steam, suitable steam-registers that will correctly record each excess of steam carried above the prescribed limit, and the highest point attained;" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and suitable steam-gauges to indicate the pressure of steam."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the words "the edition of 1875 and," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "As the sections of title 33 are numbered in 'An act to reduce internal-revenue taxation and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1883," and the provisions; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: "Strike out the word 'the,' after the word 'suspending,' and before the word 'concessions,' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'such;'" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered —: That the Senate recede from its several amendments changing the numbering of sections and agree to the numbers proposed by the House; and that the Senate further recede from its votes numbering the last five sections and substitute the numbers in order; and the House agree to the same.

WARNER MILLER,
J. N. DOLPH,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

NELSON DINGLEY, Jr.,
P. DUNN,
BENTON McMILLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MILLER. The managers on the part of the Senate have prepared a statement in writing as to the result of the conference. I do not think it necessary to have it read, but I ask that it go in the RECORD. The bill is substantially as it passed the Senate, and therefore I move that the Senate concur in the report of the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The paper is as follows:

The managers on the part of the Senate of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the Senate amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. 4838) "to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action herein recommended on each amendment in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment numbered 3 modifies the tenth section of the shipping act of 1884, which prohibited the payment of advance wages to seamen so as to allow a seaman to allot, in his shipping agreement, wages not earned to an amount not exceeding $10 for each month of the time usually occupied in the voyage for which the seaman has shipped, to an original creditor in payment of any just debt for board and clothing previously incurred—this allotment to be in addition to that which the seaman is now permitted to make to his wife or other relative.

Amendment numbered 5 extends the limited-liability rule to canal-boats, barges, and lighters, thus making the rule apply to all vessels on inland waters as well as on the ocean and lakes.

Amendment 8 adopts section 7 of the bill as passed by the House, by which a vessel of the United States without the usual papers is subjected to a fine instead of forfeiture.

Amendment 22 repeals so much of section 4418 of the Revised Statutes as requires steam-vessels to be provided with patent automatic steam registers that will record the pressure of steam, and substitutes therefor a provision requiring only the ordinary steam register.

Amendment 23 gives to whaling and fishing vessels of the United States the benefits of the provisions of sections 2510 and 2511 of the Revised Statutes, as numbered in the tariff act of 1883, and of the provisions of section 16 of the shipping act of 1884.

Amendment 24 provides that rule 12 of section 4233 of the Revised Statutes shall not be construed to require row-boats and skiffs on the River St. Lawrence to carry lights.

Amendment 25 authorizes the President to withdraw commercial privileges in our ports from the vessels of any foreign country to the extent that such privileges are denied to the vessels of the United States in the ports of such foreign country. This section simply extends the authority given the President by the act of 1823, which covers only discriminating charges and duties, so as to cover cases where vessels of the United States are discriminated against as to commercial privileges.

Amendment 26 provides that the United States shall allow steamships the regular steerage-passenger rate, not to exceed 2 cents per mile, for the transportation home of shipwrecked American seamen in cases where such steamships are required by law to transport such seamen at the expense of the Government; and also exempts steamships from the obligation to receive and transport seamen having a contagious disease.

WARNER MILLER,
G. G. VEST,
J. N. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on adopting the report.

The report was concurred in.

DEATH OF SENATOR JOHN F. MILLER.

Mr. STANFORD. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice given some time ago that on this day I would move certain resolutions in reference to my late colleague, JOHN F. MILLER, I beg to offer resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of JOHN F. MILLER, late a Senator from the State of California.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute of regard to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously.

Mr. STANFORD. Mr. President, the Senate is asked this afternoon to suspend its regular business in order that the last tributes to the memory of Senator JOHN F. MILLER can be paid by his former associates of this body.

The character and public services of the distinguished deceased are deserving of public and official recognition. The people of California have already performed this office. The expressions voiced by them have been that the nation has lost a worthy, faithful, and devoted servant, an exemplary citizen, and an honored Senator.

On the afternoon of the 8th of March, Senator MILLER passed from mortal life after a long and painful illness. We had been led to believe and had hoped that he would be able to attend this session of the Senate. When he came to this city, in December last, from his distant home in California, he had strong hopes of resuming his official duties, but it was ordered otherwise. During his illness I frequently saw him and found him always hopeful for the best and extremely desirous of resuming his Senatorial labors. As the winter closed he thought that with the incoming of spring he would gain strength enough to resist the ravages of his disease for a short time, even if he did not permanently regain his full health. At one time it seemed as if his will power and strength would be sufficient, but his strength failed him.

He passed into the other world surrounded by those most dear to him on this earth.

General MILLER was descended from two of the most respected families of Virginia, and was of Swiss-Scotch extraction, his progenitor on his father's side having left Switzerland to find in America what was denied him in the land of his birth—the freedom to worship God in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience; while his paternal grandmother's family were from Scotland. In the first decade of the present century his grandfather and father, who were then located in Franklin County, Virginia, decided on leaving that State, and before doing so manumitted their slaves. It may be easily supposed that the strong appreciation of liberty and the rights of man possessed by JOHN F. MILLER came to him as a natural heritage from a father and grandfather whose sense of justice and liberty was so great as to impel them to make a voluntary sacrifice at a time when slavery was by many held to be lawful and right.

Having started out from Virginia, the first halting place of the Miller family was at a point in Kentucky on the Ohio River, near Maysville, where, after a short stay, they built flatboats upon which they floated down the Ohio to the present site of Cincinnati. Subsequently the family home was chosen in Union County, Indiana, near Indian Creek, in the great Miami Valley.

By a coincidence, the maternal branch of JOHN F. MILLER'S family was of the same name as the paternal. His mother's father, John Miller, was a colonel commanding volunteer forces in Indiana and Ohio during the war of 1812, and won an extensive reputation for his successful warfare against the British and their Indian allies. His father was a man of great force of character, a natural leader, and exercised a wide and powerful influence in the State of his adoption. Here, in Union County, Indiana, a few miles from Cincinnati, JOHN F. MILLER was born. A short time after his birth the family removed to South Bend, where his early days were passed. He received an academical education at South Bend, and at Chicago was fitted for college; but preferring to embark as soon as possible upon his life career he chose to enter at once upon the study of the law, in which he graduated at the New York State Law School at the age of twenty-one. He began the practice of the law at South Bend in the same year, achieving early success. In the year 1853 he first came to California, and, locating at Napa, resumed the practice of his profession with marked success. In the winter of 1855–'56 he was summoned back to Indiana by the news that his mother was dangerously ill. Happily this was a mistake, and Mrs. Miller lived to see her son prosperous, happy, and highly honored. She passed away last fall at the mature age of seventy-four.

Mr. MILLER, however, remained in Indiana re-engaging in the practice of law, and 1861 found him a member of the senate of that State. In 1857 he had married Miss Mary Chess, of Pennsylvania. Of their marriage two children were born; the daughter survives her brother, who passed away in San Francisco in 1878 at the age of seven years.

Mr. MILLER was one of the first to respond in behalf of the Union at the breaking out of the rebellion. Governor Morton, the great war governor of Indiana, appointed him colonel of the Twenty-ninth Indiana Infantry, and he resigned his seat in the Legislature of the State. Few men are better fitted for a soldier's career than was JOHN F. MILLER. He had a cool head, great personal bravery, and indomitable energy, as well as the other traits that go to make up a successful soldier. As the conflict progressed, deserved promotion for "conspicuous bravery" was given him, and the close of the war found him brigadier and brevet major-general. On his return to Indiana, Governor Morton presented him a sword which he had promised the soldier of the State who distinguished himself the most and reflected the greatest credit on his State and country. The details of his honorable military career may well be left to his comrades in arms, several of whom are members of this body.

When the sound of the conflict had passed away, General MILLER was offered a commission as colonel in the regular Army, but he declined it. He was a soldier only because there was a war, and preferred to return to the more active, and to him more desirable, competition of professional and political life. He returned a second time to California, and President Johnson offered him the position of collector of the port of San Francisco. He accepted and performed the duties of that important office for four years with great credit. He surrendered the office at the end of his term, declining a reappointment. After that he took an active interest in the management of the Alaska Commercial Company; was a candidate for Presidential elector in 1872, 1876, and 1880, and his election to the United States Senate followed in 1881. He took his seat in this body March 4 of that year. The responsible duties of this position he discharged in such a manner as to satisfy his constituents and secure the respect and esteem of his brother Senators.

At noon on Saturday, March 13, there were held in this Chamber impressive funeral ceremonies in his honor, in the presence of the President, the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, the Supreme Court of the United States, the diplomatic representatives of foreign countries, members of the Loyal League and other organizations. Every available place in both Chamber and galleries was filled. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the remains were escorted by members of this body, accompanied by a committee from the House of Representatives, to the depot, whence later in the evening the committee appointed by this body and the House of Representatives accompanied them to San Francisco, where, on March 21, funeral ceremonies again took place in the presence of an immense concourse of his sorrowing fellow-citizens.

On the occasion of the funeral there, Rev. Dr. Beers, of the Episcopal church, said of the deceased:

> This is one of those rare occasions when truth is eulogy and the language of panegyric does not outmeasure the just meed of appreciation due to high personal character, large and well-applied endowments, and great public service. This is proved, in the present case, by the widespread shock caused by the death of Senator MILLER and the universal sorrow experienced at a loss not soon or easily repaired. If human sympathy can ever avail to alleviate the pangs of irreparable bereavement, these mourning ones may remember that they are encircled with the heartfelt and loving sympathy of a whole people, and that the tears of a community, a State, and a nation mingle with those they shed. Though called away in the meridian of life, our friend lived long enough to outstep the bounds of local and State recognition, and to become a conspicuous figure on the stage of national activities. * * * His achievements as a soldier preceded his career in civil life. His coolness, judgment, and daring in battle brought him warm commendation from his comrades and superiors.
> But Senator MILLER manifested in various ways, official and personal, his fidelity and consistency in another sphere of life and duty. He "adorned the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things," and was a good soldier of Christ, and when words were no more possible signified by gesture that his faith did not fail or falter. And so, full of honors, but not of years, with all earthly ministries that could make life desirable—a home the abode of peace and love, and troops of friends, great gifts, abundance of wealth, and wide influence—our friend has passed away, leaving those who survive the priceless heritage of an example as perfect and pure as is possible to the frailty of man. Senator MILLER died a martyr to duty. What the bullets of Stone River and Liberty Gap failed to do, unmeasured application to the most difficult and delicate work assigned him accomplished, and so the stateliness of earth—soldier, Senator, citizen, Christian—a modern Bayard, passed away without fear and without reproach. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

These sentiments, so beautifully expressed, find a cordial indorsement from all who knew him as a private citizen, a legislator in Indiana, a soldier of the nation, and a Senator from California.

General MILLER'S life was a success. The work he undertook he did well, whether in camp, in commerce, or in Congress. He gained commendation on every side and in every path of duty in] which he walked. His persuasive eloquence, earnest, able, and logical reasoning, were recognized in this Chamber. He took an active interest in everything that looked to the welfare of his State, his party, and his country. He was a progressive man and a warm friend. In politics he was a Republican and a partisan, and never sought to conceal it.

He believed that "he who serves his country best serves his party best." He is gone. Impartial history will delight to place his name, as a private and public citizen, high among those who are worthy examples for their countrymen to admire and imitate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I must beg permission to pay my heartfelt tribute to the memory of our late associate and our always friend.

I did not have the pleasure of knowing him during his most honorable and conspicuous career in the Army of the United States in the darkest hour of its destiny, but all that history tells of it, all that his surviving comrades tell of it, all that his then foes but now friends tell of it, unite in showing how brave and wise and prudent a soldier he was. I have to say rather what I have known of him here in this Chamber, and what I have known of him as a friend and neighbor in our associations during our stay in this city.

It was my pleasure and privilege to be for a long time his associate as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which he was the chairman—a committee, as you know, Mr. President, and as all the Senators know, that often has to do with questions not only of great practical importance but of extreme delicacy. Senator MILLER brought to that duty, coming as he did from the field of business, of politics, and of war, and not from a career of previous diplomatic experience or instruction, a tact, and a quality of suiting things to each other, and of harmonizing difficulties so far as consistent with truth and justice and national honor which would have done credit to any man who had spent his whole life in the training of diplomatic and international intercourse.

Never excited, never astray, patient, persistent in that as he was in his previous career in the Army, he contributed as much certainly if not more than any other member of that committee or any other member of the Senate to the satisfactory progress and adjustment of the affairs that were intrusted to that committee, which as you know is so often and so necessarily in conference with the Executive and his Secretary of State respecting a great many affairs that are never even brought to the attention of the whole body of the Senate.

So I can say of him with a truth and a eulogy that is not exaggerated, that in that most delicate and conspicuous and responsible position he was a man equal to the responsibilities of the place.

His career here we all know, in the public legislation and operations of this body—never a frequent speaker, never a long speaker when he had occasion to address the Senate, but always the man of thought, the man of attention, the man of industry, the man of practical sagacity, who brought to the solution of every question, whether legislative or executive, the patient and persistent energy and intelligence that should produce for his country and for his State the best results.

I think such an American citizen is a model for us all, is an inspiration to all who are to follow us here, or who are to perform the equally important duties of American citizens in their respective spheres.

But, Mr. President, outside of this Chamber and in the intercourse of social and friendly life—that intercourse which gives nearly all the sweetness and happiness and hope that there is in the somewhat weary ways we travel—I think Mr. MILLER was peculiar in the circumstance that with this positiveness of character, this persistence of energy, this solidity of opinion, which did not yield except for good reason, the social and the private side of his character was as sweet and gentle as that of a woman. I knew him well, and with a sincere sensibility I pay this tribute to that part of his life that was not seen in this Chamber.

I saw him often during the distressing hours of his last days. In all the pain and misery that his mortal disease gave to him there was the same steadfast calmness of persistent patience that had exhibited itself on the active side of his life. With no murmuring, no grief, no sorrow except that natural one of leaving behind him those he loved, he faced the door that opens to that mysterious land we all hope to see, and greeted with a happy hope, I am sure, when the door at last opened, that spacious sunshine far from pain to which he felt and knew he was so soon to go.

I lay upon his grave the tribute of my most affectionate remembrance.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the distinguished soldier and civilian whose death we mourn and whose memory we cherish won and wore in his lifetime, and in full and abundant measure, the honors of two great States, far distant from each other. Fifty-five years ago in the beautiful valley of the Whitewater, in Eastern Indiana, JOHN F. MILLER was born. He grew to manhood's bright estate and equipped himself for his brilliant career under the favorable and progressive influences of his native State. He first appeared in connection with public affairs as a member of the Indiana State senate from Saint Joseph County in 1860. He was then twenty-nine years of age, handsome in face and person and attractive in manner. Those who saw him then could best appreciate when they met him in after years the changes wrought by wounds, suffering, and time. He remained but a short time in the civil service of Indiana. The ill-omened roar of artillery at Sumter in April, 1861, startled men from the repose of peace and inflamed their blood for battle as no other opening act of war ever did in the history of nations.

The people of the North and of the South instinctively knew the desperate and fatal meaning of those dread echoes, and they simultaneously sprang to arms for that irrepressible conflict which in the high councils of Almighty God was decreed to be settled by the sword. In that first rush to the field General MILLER was among the foremost. He resigned his seat as a member of the senate in the Indiana Legislature and took command as colonel of the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers. From that day until the war closed he appeared at all times and under all circumstances as the highest and best type of an American soldier. Two hundred thousand of the youth and flower of Indiana took their part in the harvest of death from the Potomac to the Gulf and to the ensanguined plains beyond the Mississippi.

Their record is brilliant and conspicuous for courage and endurance wherever the flag was planted.

But in all the bright array of Indiana soldiers no name has a prouder place or does more honor to the history of his native State than that of JOHN F. MILLER. I need not detail his military services. They are preserved in the annals of his country and cherished in the hearts of his countrymen. He was brevetted a major-general for conspicuous courage in battle, and merited, and should have received, a major-general's commission and full rank. The future impartial historian will notice and record the fact that the military officers of Indiana during the great conflict between the sections did not, as a rule, receive such promotion and advancement to high rank and command as their abilities and services demanded. With material in the field equal to any from Ohio, Illinois, or any other State, yet the just claims of hard-fighting colonels and brigadiers from Indiana were but sparingly recognized by promotion. This, however, is not the time nor the occasion to assign the reason for the fact I have stated.

With the return of peace General MILLER sought the Pacific coast, and made his home in that wonderful State, whose discovery, development, and wealth have flashed upon the world more like a bewildering romance than a stupenduous reality in human history. In the midst of the strong and pushing people of that remarkable Commonwealth, where "the survival of the fittest" is a practical daily law and not a mere speculative theory, General MILLER went to the front and there maintained himself. Indiana may be pardoned for her interest and pride in her sons in distant States. It is a somewhat singular circumstance that when he entered this body he succeeded the accomplished and eloquent Booth, also a native of Indiana.

As a Senator, moving here in the midst of his associates, General MILLER was admired, respected, and beloved. His abilities were of a high order, and he brought to the discharge of his duties the habits and methods of a trained and cultivated mind. His demeanor was full of quiet, dignified courtesy toward all. He was always a gentleman. General MILLER had been for many years an intense sufferer, and there is no doubt that his life was shortened by the shock and severity of his wounds. In the ordinary course of nature, and by reason of a strong physical constitution, death should long have spared him to his family, his friends, and his country. But though prematurely called he met the great inevitable change with the firmness and the faith of a soldier and a Christian. Sir, how thick and fast come the warnings to us all that this earth is not our abiding home; that our lives are as fleeting shadows—a moment here on the shore of time, then launched forever on the illimitable ocean of eternity. On every hand, and keeping time with the days and almost with the hours, our friends and comrades depart, recede from our longing embrace, and disappear from our tearful gaze. How empty and vain appear all the honors of this world at such a time, and how pitiful the conflicts and asperities of human ambition!

Sir, it seems but yesterday when General MILLER walked and thought and toiled in our midst, but we shall see him no more amongst living men. On the far-off Pacific coast all of him that was mortal will repose forever. Indiana joins California as a mourner for the honored dead, and lays an evergreen garland of gratitude for his services, and affection for his memory on his grave.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, in the death of JOHN F. MILLER, of California, a loss to the country has been sustained the full extent of which can now only be realized by those whose good fortune it was to know him intimately. He had arrived at that position in life when, having conquered the difficulties which confront youth at the beginning of its career, he was ready to enter upon a field of broad usefulness, in which he would have earned a brilliant and lasting place in the national annals of his period. But he was fated to be like a gallant general who, after having carried the ramparts of an enemy's works, is stricken down upon the very threshold of well-earned victory. In this Chamber, where he was known and honored, the sentiment that his death was untimely is general and deeply rooted.

The parents of the late Senator MILLER were, originally, citizens of the State of Virginia, whence they emigrated to Indiana at a time when the latter was considered fairly entitled to be designated as the Far West. In this new State, which, in reference to its then recent admission to the Union, may be said to have been still in its teens, JOHN F. MILLER was born, in the year 1831. His youth was passed amid those frontier scenes which have developed some of the strongest characters of American history. At an early age he evinced an unequivocal aptitude for books; and his parents, resolving to give him all of the limited advantages of an education then accessible to the Western boy, sent him to an academy in South Bend, where he obtained such preliminary education as it was possible to furnish. At the age of eighteen he began the study of law, and in the year 1852 graduated with much credit from the New York State Law School, to which he had gone to avail himself of its course. Returning to his home in Indiana he began the practice of law, but soon being seized with the California fever, then fully developed, he joined the immense concourse of people who were flocking to the new El Dorado.

Pursuing the practice of law for a few years on the Pacific coast, he returned again to the home of his youth, resolving to spend the remainder of his days among the friends who loved him so well. In the year 1860 he was elected to membership in the Indiana State senate, but upon the inauguration of the rebellion, being then only thirty years of age, he entered the Union Army, and was at once made colonel of the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers. Evincing military ability of a high grade, he was soon placed in command of a brigade, and served at different periods under Generals Sherman, Rosecrans, and Thomas.

At the battle of Stone River General MILLER exhibited this ability in a very conspicuous manner. Two days before this engagement he had been painfully wounded and was still suffering acutely from the effects of the wound. Having been ordered to the support of General Crittenden's corps at Stone River, he took position with his brigade upon the left of the railroad in an open field, and near the bank of the stream. About 4 o'clock in the afternoon a furious attack was made by the enemy upon General Beatty's or Van Cleve's division, which was then across the river. The latter was compelled to retreat to the other side again through General MILLER'S lines. The enemy had followed the retiring Unionist, and were now upon the opposite bank directly facing General MILLER'S brigade.

A spirited action at once took place between the two bodies of troops across the stream. Under the dreadful fire of General MILLER'S force the enemy began to waver and then to fall back. General MILLER, perceiving his advantage, determined to follow it, and gave orders for an immediate advance. At this moment an order came to him from a general officer, not his immediate commander, to desist from the attempt to cross the river. With the self-reliance marking independent natures General MILLER dashed across the river with his troops, the enemy flying before him in order to gain the cover of the batteries in his rear. On went the Unionist under the lead of the gallant MILLER. Nothing could withstand their intrepidity. A charge was made upon a battery of four guns, with the fire of the pieces fairly blazing in the faces of the attacking party. A hand-to-hand conflict took place; the battery was captured, and with it the colors of the regiment serving it.

The movement of General MILLER was perilous in the extreme; but the importance of the result obtained fully justified the daring attempt. The check received by the enemy through General MILLER'S audacious bravery undoubtedly contributed as much if not more than any other thing in turning the tide in favor of our troops at this battle and prevented the enemy from occupying the heights overlooking Stone River.

He was severely wounded at Liberty Creek, and afterward commanded a large force at the battle of Nashville, where he gained great distinction.

These incidents are selected from the military career of General MILLER in order to illustrate the strong character and ardent patriotism of the man whose loss we have so recently been called upon to mourn.

With no previous military education he entered the Union Army at the beginning of the war, and simply through force of his marked personal characteristics, backed by the fitness for arms which the life of a free-born American citizen is so well calculated to create, he left the Army at the termination of the conflict with the rank of a brevet major-general.

The military career of the lamented MILLER furnishes another interesting example of the resources of the United States when forced to the dread alternative of war. Fortunately the country has not often been called to accept this alternative during the course of its peaceful history; but old England, the most warlike of nations, and old Mexico, the most powerful of the Hispano-American republics, have alike had cause to marvel at the military strength of our country, almost without an army or a military establishment and traditionally devoted to a career of peace.

The concealed military power of the United States, if I may so express it, has been remarkable and an unpleasant development to all of the nations of the world whose sovereigns have been accustomed for so long a period to regard a standing army as the only true measure of the power of the people. Such a spectacle as the American volunteer soldier has never been seen in the history of governments.

Behold a man, quietly following his peaceful avocation, surrounded by family and friends, and with no thoughts save those connected with the routine of an unostentatious life and the faithful fulfillment of the obligations of citizenship. Sixty million people every day, in this broad and happy land, respond to the call of such peaceful duties and the round of such an uneventful life. Not a banner, nor a military trapping, nor the beat of a drum can be seen or heard to break the even tenor of industrial and domestic pursuit. But hark! The shrill note of the bugle has broken the stillness of the air. Look again, and behold a marvelous transformation! The quiet man, who mayhap was clad in homespun vestments and engaged in following the slow course of a plow over a forbidding field, has vanished; and there now stands in his place a grim soldier, attired in the uniform of his regiment and examining the deadly qualities of his rifle. The air is filled with martial music, and the roads and streets resound to the tramp of the American volunteers as they go forth to certain triumph. The ringing of the steel; the even tread of moving regiments; the clatter of horses' feet; the rolling of artillery wheels; the swelling strains of the bands; the waving banners; the shouting of the masses—all indicate the irresistible moving of an army that has sprung into martial completeness with the suddenness of the birth of Minerva from the brain of Jove.

This is no strained figure of a patriotic imagination. An actual fact is represented, which has demonstrated upon more than one occasion the utter disparity between a merely hired soldiery and an army of freemen, moving with all the elements of successful war to the defense of their principles, their homes, and their cherished institutions.

It is safe to say that no foreign power can subdue a nation thus defended; and so long as the free spirit of American institutions is preserved untainted and untrammeled, so long as the people continue to feel that they are the sovereigns and the directors of the Government of the United States, so long will that Government continue invincible to the attacks of enemies, whether they be foreign or domestic.

At the termination of the late war General MILLER found himself still suffering from the effects of wounds received during the course of his honorable service. One of these was of such a nature as to induce the diseased action which ultimately put a premature end to his useful life.

In the year 1866 General MILLER was appointed collector for the port of San Francisco, and this appointment led to his permanent removal to the Pacific coast. Of energetic character, he believed that his field of activity would be enlarged in a section of country still needing strong arms, broad minds, and courageous hearts for its permanent development. From the date of his arrival General MILLER became a prominent man upon our Western coast, both in its industrial and political progress. His official administration won for him the good-will of all parties and classes, guided as he ever was by the strict principles of honor and justice.

His efforts, however, were not limited to the mere perfunctory discharge of the duties of his Federal office. At all times and at all seasons he was ready to aid with his influence and his means every feasible plan for the unfolding of the industrial and social interests of the Pacific slope. Firmly believing with the quaint writer, Swift, that "whoever could make two ears of corn or two blades of grass to grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before would deserve better of mankind and do more essential service to his country than the whole race of politicians put together," he sought to call into development previously unknown elements of wealth; and when finally freed from the cares and restraints of office he became the leading spirit of a business enterprise that has largely added to the wealth and commercial interests of our whole country.

But a man of such activity and of such large capability could not remain unsought to aid in the political interests of his party. In 1872, in 1876, and in 1880 he occupied a place upon the California Republican electoral ticket. In 1879 he was elected by a handsome vote to be a member of the convention to form a State constitution. In 1881 he was selected by the California Legislature to represent that State in this body, and his service in the capacity of Senator dates from the 4th of March of that year, when he took the oath of office. From that time to the date of his death his colleagues here became familiar with the man whose career, though previously bristling with usefulness, was now about to yield its fullest fruition. An active worker, a far-seeing counselor, a genial friend, a magnanimous opponent—one and all came to respect and love him for his strong mind, his manly worth, and his gentle qualities of heart.

During the five years that he held membership in this body Senator MILLER was a silent sufferer from the wound he had received in the defense of his country; and it was this suffering alone that prevented him from filling the sphere of activity offered by his national character as fully as he certainly otherwise would have done.

The progress of his malady at length began to demonstrate that the career of our colleague was doomed to suffer untimely abridgment, like—

> The bud bit with an envious worm,
> Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air,
> Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.

Suddenly, upon an inhospitable day, when the very elements seemed hung with weeds of sorrow, the frost came and with ruthless touch withered a life that held within its clasp probabilities extending far beyond the limits of any ordinary career.

Senator MILLER was a true type of the American freeman, of manly form, strong of mind, with quick perception, and rapidity of decision; with iron courage, and a gentle nature, that melted enmity into friendship and opposition into compliance, he was a marked man among his fellows. He was at home among the humble, and always a peer of the best.

His life was full of promise, and his sudden death was rounded by melancholy disappointment. The life was instructive, and the death suggestive to his friends.

We are here to-day to render a tribute of appreciation and of sorrow in presence of a calamity which extends beyond the limits of the family threshold and invades the circle of the national interest. We are here to drop the tear of sympathy, and to pronounce the encomium, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." In bewailing our colleague's loss we can not be unmindful of the circumstance that death is the common lot of all. To play our parts well upon life's great stage is worthy of the loftiest ambition. But the time comes when, standing in presence of such a catastrophe as we are now contemplating, we are profoundly impressed by the reminder of the immortal dramatist:

> Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
> As I foretold you, were all spirits, and
> Are melted into air, into thin air;
> And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
> The cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces,
> The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
> Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
> And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
> Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
> As dreams are made of, and our little life
> Is rounded with a sleep.

Departed colleague, sleep on! thou hast earned thy rest, and thy country is better that thou has lived. The nation mourns thee and thy friends bewail thee; but having passed the portals of the mysterious realm, they would not call thee back. Thy work belongs to thy country and thy rest to thee. To thy colleagues is left the remembrance of thy gentle spirit; but to them also is given the exquisite pain of pronouncing the most terrible of all words:

> Farewell!
> For in that word—that fatal word—howe'er
> We promise, hope, believe—there breathes despair.

Mr. FAIR. Mr. President, in the brief time that I shall occupy the attention of the Senate I will be unable to give a fitting tribute to the life and services of Senator MILLER. I can not, however, allow this occasion to pass without giving expression to the feelings of respect and admiration I have for his memory.

It was my good fortune for a number of years to know Senator MILLER well, and we became warm friends. His death, therefore, to me was not simply the passing away of a distinguished citizen, but was a personal bereavement.

JOHN F. MILLER has passed away at the age of fifty-five years. How much of effort, achievement, yea, of suffering, have been crowded into that short period of time.

Mr. President, the career of this man may well be pointed to as an example and incentive for the rising generation of the Republic. Few men of our time have filled as he has, with heaping measure, the requirements of every public and private station. With the true ambition for success and fame, he early fitted himself for the great intellectual struggle of life.

Entering upon the practice of law in his native State of Indiana, he soon conceived the idea of establishing himself in California, whither he went and remained for a period of three years. He then decided to return to Indiana, where he was soon chosen to the honorable position of State senator. He occupied this position at the time that the opening of our great civil war startled the country. Resigning his duties as a legislator he entered with patriotic enthusiasm into the great struggle for the Union and led to the field a regiment of infantry.

I will not descant at length upon his military career; but it is well known that in this field of endeavor he displayed those noble traits of character—coolness, courage, and resources—which in time of war make heroes of men.

At the great three days' battle of Stone River it fell to his lot to occupy the key of the position. With the true military instinct he took in the situation, and without orders he made an assault which opened the way to victory, and in this terrible struggle he received the wound from which he suffered so much and which no doubt finally contributed to his death. This, however, did not end his military career. At Nashville he was intrusted with a larger command, and with conspicuous gallantry aided in the overthrow of Hood's army.

Successful in war, it was left to him to be equally successful in peace. Again becoming a citizen of California, he was chosen to conspicuous and responsible positions under the national and State governments, and was finally chosen to represent that great State in this Chamber. Here his ability received a fitting recognition when he was placed at the head of one of the leading committees of the Senate.

As a man of business and of affairs he was always recognized as possessing large ability. In the private walks of life and in the social circle he made hosts of friends. In fact it may be said that here was a conspicuous and distinguished man without an enemy. It would seem that the life of Senator MILLER was a series of unbroken successes; this statement necessarily includes the idea that his combination of good qualities entitled him to succeed.

He was a man of fine intellectual endowments; he possessed an admirably balanced mind, and a heart full of consideration for his fellowman. He was a man of patriotism, of honor, and honesty, and I join with his warmest friends in deploring his untimely death.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, there seemed to be an appropriateness in the suggestion made to me some days ago by the senior Senator from California that the representatives of the State of Indiana in this Chamber should take part in these memorial exercises. JOHN F. MILLER was born in Union County, Indiana; received his education and spent his early manhood in that State. It was there that he entered public life as a senator from the County of Saint Joseph, and from that State, bearing the commission of its great war governor, he went into the Army of the Union in August, 1861, as colonel of the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He did much to make the name of the State illustrious in that great and protracted struggle. Indiana will always cherish his memory, and will write his name high upon that tardy monument which she is yet to build to the memory of her dead soldiers. The highest achievements of his conspicuous and useful life are associated with the history of his native State. His removal very soon after the close of the war to California gave to that State the high privilege of crowning his service and sacrifice for the Union with the highest civil honors in the gift of a State. He was worthy of this high preferment, and had already in the senate given evidence that he was a leader in the field of thought and statesmanship as well as in the field of arms.

When the war broke out General MILLER was a member of the State senate of Indiana, and when that body was assembled in special session to devise such measures as were necessary to collect and equip the war quota of the State, he at once, though a very young man, attracted the attention of his colleagues and won the confidence of Governor Morton. A defensive campaign was not compatible with his bold and aggressive spirit. He was impatient with timidity and half-heartedness. He defended the cause of the Union in debate as he afterward defended Nashville, by going out of his intrenchments and whipping the enemy that was gathering to besiege him. The debates at this session of the Indiana senate were sometimes characterized by great excitement and acrimony, and the part taken by Senator MILLER quickly gave him a reputation for ability and courage. He was, while still in the Senate, appointed aid to Governor Morton with the rank of colonel, and gave most efficient help in organizing the first troops that were sent into the field.

But his high spirit was not long content with a home service. He organized the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Infantry, and in August, 1861, was mustered in as its colonel. It is not my purpose to follow the military history of General MILLER. A few incidents will suffice to show how rapidly, almost intuitively, this young lawyer, untrained in military schools, became a skillful and successful commander. I do not doubt that if the severe wound received at Liberty Gap, resulting in the loss of an eye, had not forced his retirement for a time from severe military duty, he would have risen to the command of an army. His personal courage was of the highest order, yet no man was more free from brag or bluster. He was reserved in speech, but spirited and resolute in action. In the battle of Stone River he received a severe and almost fatal wound in the neck, but refused to leave the field. Tying a handkerchief about the wound, he was seen the next instant riding in the thick of the fight encouraging his men to hold the desperate situation confided to him. At Liberty Gap, while leading his brigade, he received a bullet wound in the eye, which was at first thought to be fatal. The sight of the eye was destroyed, and it was not until many years after the war that the bullet was found to be lodged in the eye-socket and extracted.

From a military sketch of General MILLER, in the second volume of Indiana's Roll of Honor, I take two or three extracts relating to the part taken by him in the battle of Stone River.

Speaking of the desperate assault made upon his line during the first day's fight the author says:

> During this entire engagement and under all these terribly appalling circumstances Colonel MILLER displayed the most admirable coolness and bravery, setting an example of heroic daring and cool courage that has seldom been equaled, never surpassed, and could not but find a response in the hearts of his gallant men. Though severely wounded, he persisted in remaining on the field despite the remonstrances of the surgeon; and had his resistance to the enemy been less obstinate, and had they succeeded in forcing a passage through his lines, the whole right wing of the army, which had been driven back, would thus have been cut off from all support and either captured or dispersed; but they were enabled by the fierce, protracted, and gallant struggle of Colonel MILLER to gain the rear of the army and there reform their shattered lines.

Of the gallant and timely countercharge afterward made by Colonel MILLER'S brigade, when assaulted by an overwhelming force, the same author says:

> It is now generally conceded by most military men that this bold and dashing bayonet charge into the very heart of the enemy's lines, which was conceived, ordered, and led by Colonel MILLER, and carried into execution solely upon his own responsibility, was the great event of the battle, and tended, perhaps, more than any other, to dishearten the enemy and to crown our standards with another glorious victory.
> Too much can not be said of the skill and ability, nor the distinguished bravery, of the colonel in this bloody battle, nor of the gallantry of his veteran troops.
> These qualities were recognized and appreciated by the commander-in-chief, General Rosecrans, who awarded the post of honor to the Seventh Brigade in being the first to enter Murfreesborough, and telegraphed to the President from the field of battle, recommending Colonel MILLER'S promotion for "gallantry on the field."

> But few officers have been so fortunate in securing the love, respect, and confidence of their troops as General MILLER, and history, which sooner or later awards justice to all men, will wreathe around his gallant deeds in this great struggle for freedom and nationality an immortal halo of renown.

But the skill and dash of General MILLER had perhaps its best display in the defense of Nashville, Tenn., where he had an independent command. His sudden and successful dashes upon the enemy at Gallatin, La Vergne, Neeley's Bend, and other points, in all of which he was successful, tended to maintain the spirit and efficiency of the garrison and at the same time to impress the enemy with a wholesome respect for this isolated but plucky command. At times food and forage became very scarce, so much so that the inhabitants were suffering and the troops upon half rations. The only source of supply was the surrounding country, which was occupied by the enemy. General MILLER was compelled many times to go out with half his command as an escort to a foraging train, but his movements were so skillfully concealed and so quickly and boldly executed that they were always successful.

The last active service rendered by him was in the great battle of Nashville in December, 1864. He was given by General Thomas, who thoroughly trusted him, a prominent command, and throughout that severe engagement bore himself with the same gallantry that characterized his early service.

After the close of the war he went again to California, and after exercising for some years high official trusts under the Government with fidelity and credit, he was in 1880 elected a Senator from that State.

Immediately upon his entrance into the Senate General MILLER took a position of influence not often awarded to new members of that body. Every one who was brought into contact with him observed his quick and fine perception and his clear and logical judgment. He had evidently studied with great care and research many public questions, especially those affecting the commerce of the Pacific coast in its relations to the nations of South America and the East. He was bold enough to give hospitable entertainment to the most progressive ideas, and believed that the time had come when the kindly but powerful influence of the United States should be exerted in bringing about closer commercial and political relations with the governments of Central and South America.

To him a diplomatic tradition of our younger and weaker days was not a necessary rule of action for a nation of fifty millions. That European influence should be dominant in the near-lying American republics fretted him. That European merchants should fill with their wares the markets so much needed for our own surplus, and by neighborhood so clearly our own, stimulated him to seek for the cause and a remedy. He was not sparing of himself, and the hours of early morning often found him at his desk. He had always risen in effort and achievement with every promotion in life, and the demands which his onerous and dignified position as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate made upon him were responded to with spirit and fidelity. He was not a frequent or a fluent speaker, but always spoke with the most careful and ample preparation and with remarkable force and clearness.

In his private relations General MILLER was loved by all who knew him. His heart was full of sympathy and all kind impulses, and his hand was its willing and generous servant. His affection for wife and child was not effusive, but it was very tender, watchful, and enduring. His sense of honor was high and imperative. As an adversary he was open and brave; as a friend he was true and steadfast. His love of country was a passion; its unity, its honor, and its prosperity were dearer than life to him. He had twice shed his blood in its defense. He did this because he loved his country; and we can not doubt that his love for the flag, the Constitution, and the Union were deepened and intensified by the sacrifices he had made in their defense. Another of the great soldiers of the war has departed. Wrapped in the flag he loved, and covered with laurel wreath and flowers, his scarred body has been laid to rest by loving hands. Indiana mourns her son, the nation one of its most gallant defenders, and we a friend.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to attempt anything like a biographical sketch of our deceased brother. I shall leave that to others who were more intimately associated with him in social life and in the labors of this body and are better qualified for the task; but I can not forbear on this occasion to give expression to the deep sense of the loss I feel at the death of him we mourn to-day and to add to the eloquent eulogies already pronounced my feeble tribute to his memory.

When the last session of Congress, during which our lamented brother had been one of the most active and useful members of this body, closed, how bright his future seemed. Fortune smiled upon him, and everything which could minister to his comfort and pleasure and gratify a cultivated and refined taste were his. Honored and trusted by the people of his State, beloved and respected by his fellow Senators, in the prime of life, his star in the ascendant, his career as a Senator apparently just begun, how little we then thought that he would never again occupy the seat in this Chamber he had so honorably filled and would never more enter this Senate Hall alive. But death is no respecter of persons. The strong and the brave are stricken down side by side with the feeble and the timid; rich and poor, noble and base, peasant and king, are subject alike to his fatal shafts and meet upon the level of the tomb. Indeed, often the poetic sentiment appears to be justified that,

> Like other tyrants, death delights to smite
> What, smitten, most proclaims the pride of pow'r,
> And arbitrary nod. His joy supreme,
> To bid the wretch survive the fortunate;
> The feeble wrap the athletic in his shroud;
> And weeping fathers build their children's tomb.

As was said by one of the greatest of American statesmen:

> One may live as a conqueror and king or a magistrate, but he must die as a man. The bed of death brings every human being to his pure individuality, to the intense contemplation of that deepest and most solemn of all relations, the relation between the creature and his Creator. Here it is that fame and renown can not assist us, that even friends' affection and human love and devotedness can not succor us.

For, as was said by an eminent writer:

Nature intends that at fixed periods men should succeed each other by the instrumentality of death. They are allowed to keep it at bay up to a certain point, but when that is passed it will be of no use to make new discoveries in anatomy or to penetrate more and more into the secrets of the structure of the human body; we shall never outwit nature; we shall die as usual.

My personal acquaintance with Senator MILLER commenced in 1879, in Oregon, upon the occasion of the visit of General Grant and party to that State, of which General MILLER and family were members, and although casual from that time until I became associated with him in the Senate, it was of the most pleasant character. During the Forty-eighth Congress he always manifested a warm interest in my personal welfare; and in the measures presented by me to advance the interests of the State I in part represented I had his hearty co-operation and valuable assistance.

When I reached this city in February, 1883, he was one of the first to welcome me and to extend to me the hospitalities of his home. It was my good fortune to meet him during the recess of Congress, early in July last, at Port Townsend, Wash., where, while waiting for the sailing of the Alaska steamer, he and his family were sojourning in the hope of recruiting his already failing health. We were fellow-passengers upon that July trip to Alaska. During the long and pleasant days spent together upon that more than delightful voyage we had several conversations, embracing a wide range of subjects, but more particularly relating to national questions and matters appertaining to the Pacific coast. He was enthusiastic concerning the future of the coast, well informed as to its resources and wants, and thoroughly interested in every practical scheme for its development. I left him, when our routes separated upon our return, invigorated by the trip and hopeful for the future.

The improvement in his health proved to be only temporary. He believed his presence was required at the capital of the nation, and, as the time for the opening of Congress approached, he made the journey from his distant home with the expectation of occupying his place in the Senate, an expectation never to be realized. The last enemy of the human race, the insatiate archer, had already sent the fatal shaft, with unerring aim, which was to pierce the citadel of his life. Neither his indomitable will, the skill of physicians, nor the kind offices of loving friends could do more than to postpone for a time the final catastrophe. He desired to live to serve his State and to enjoy the society of his loved ones, and manfully clung to hope from the first, and heroically endured the pain and confinement of his illness. With great fortitude he strove against the progress of the disease, and with thoughtful solicitude encouraged his wife and daughter to hope for his recovery. But as he neared the end, evidently conscious of that fact, he is reported to have said, "It is not worth the fight," and with perfect resignation yielded to the last of human foes; no doubt realizing, as he reviewed the incidents of his life ere his spirit winged its flight, that "every man has lived long enough who has gone through all the duties of life with unblemished character," and that "that life is long which answers life's great end."

Death is sad to contemplate at best. Even under the most favorable circumstances "we start and fear to die." But death is relieved of half its terrors when the dying, as was our departed brother, are surrounded by friends and receive those kindly offices which only affection can suggest and pass from their presence across the boundary that separates the living from the unknown beyond.

Senator MILLER achieved great distinction as a soldier. When the angry clouds, which had been gathering in our political sky for three quarters of a century, burst in the storm of civil war and the fate of the Union hung upon the fearful arbitrament of battle, and when, animated with one purpose, the preservation of the Union, from farm and shop and factory and office and store, the patriotic sons of the North hurried to its defense, Senator MILLER, then a lawyer and State senator in Indiana, was commissioned colonel of the Twenty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, by Governor Morton of that State, and took the field.

His personal bravery, firmness, and skill soon won for him the confidence of his superior officers and the affection of his men. He participated in the battles of Stone River, Liberty Gap, and Nashville, and greatly distinguished himself on those fields. He was wounded in the neck at the battle of Stone River and severely wounded at Liberty Gap. Retiring from the Army and removing to California, by enterprise and energy he acquired a competence and became one of the foremost men of the coast, and his election to the Senate of the United States was a just recognition of his ability and merit. It is supposed that his life was shortened by the wound he received in the war. He was a man who preferred to wear out rather than to rust out, and it is possible that his days were cut short by overwork. There is so much indolence and so many aimless and purposeless lives in the world that I can hardly consider an excess of energy a fault.

Our lives are measured by deeds, not years, and how more than true is it that "fame is not won on downy plumes nor under canopies; the man who consumes his days without obtaining it leaves such mark of himself on earth as smoke in air or foam on water."

Rather than one who is content to drift with the current down the stream of life—

Give me a spirit that on life's rough sea
Loves to have his sails filled with a lusty wind
Even till his sailyards tremble, his masts creak,
And his rapt ship runs on her side so low
That she drinks water and her keel plows air.

The leading characteristics of Senator MILLER were great energy, a strong will, and a high sense of honor, but with all an extreme modesty, which upon a casual acquaintance created an impression of stiffness of manner, but which disappeared upon better acquaintance. He was well informed and possessed decided opinions upon public questions, and expressed himself with fluency, freedom, and force. I have been told that when he canvassed the State previous to his election as United States Senator, although he made numerous public addresses no two of them were alike.

He did not often occupy the time of this body, and when he did address the Senate there was little attempt at rhetoric. His speeches were the earnest expressions of well-matured opinions and strong convictions, and, without circumlocution, were directed to the points involved, and if they did not always carry conviction, they never failed to convince all who listened to them of the earnestness and sincerity of the speaker. He was honest, just, faithful, direct, unostentatious, modest, considerate, kind, and courteous; true to country, his constituents, and himself. Such characters always have and always will command respect and homage. His was an example worthy of imitation by the youth of the land. His life illustrated the possibilities which, under our form of government, lie within the reach of the humblest. The history of his life and of his gradual rise to fame, fortune, and position would be but a repetition of the history of the lives of many of the illustrious men of this country. Such experiences as his are more valuable to make men suited for great emergencies, qualified to control great enterprises, and to fill responsible public positions than all the aids of birth, fortune, schools, and influential friends.

These oft-recurring occasions in this body naturally awaken serious reflections. We are reminded that death is the inexorable law of our being, and that as it is with our brother, whose loss we to-day deplore, so will it shortly be with us. The bow is already drawn and the arrow let loose which is to pierce the citadel of our mortal lives. Would we escape from the fatal archer, we can not. "Death is everywhere, and procured by every instrument." In such an hour, when our thoughts are withdrawn from the labor and conflict which so absorb us, and directed to the end of all human labor, successes, and conflicts, and we are brought face to face with the "unsparing grisly King of Terrors, sole universal monarch, whose powers no prowess can resist, whose peremptory call no artifice can evade," how insignificant seem the greatest human achievements, how unsatisfactory the rewards of business and political endeavor; how the prayer of the psalmist comes unbidden to mind and is breathed in silent accents from the lips:

Lord, so teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

Brave soldier, honored statesman, true friend, farewell! Peace to thy ashes! Over their last resting-place in the beautiful "city of the dead" at the great metropolis of the Pacific, fanned by the breath of the tropics, may flowers bloom earliest in spring and linger latest in autumn, and by the people of a grateful country may thy memory, as a sweet fragrance, long be cherished. Neither the din of the great city nor the roar of the ocean waves that break on the shores of the Golden Gate can disturb thy repose. Though the body is mortal, we know the soul is immortal, and that, safe in the abode of the blessed, beyond the reach of praise and censure, of the mutations of time and the ills of life, thou shalt enjoy a state of eternal felicity. From that bright abode, if it is permitted to the spirits of the departed to behold the affairs of earth, look down upon our sorrow, "exalt our minds from fond regret and unavailing grief to the contemplation of thy virtues. Those we must not lament; it were impiety to sully them with a tear. To cherish their memory, to embalm them with our praises, and, if our frail condition will permit, to emulate thy bright example will be the truest mark of our respect, the best tribute we can offer."

Mr. HEARST. Mr. President, the Senators who have preceded me have spoken of Senator MILLER as a soldier and a statesman. It now becomes my privilege to speak of him as a citizen, in which capacity also he served his country.

He and his associates were the recipients of one of the most important franchises in the gift of the Government. Out of this grew an enterprise which has been carried on to the best interests of all parties therein concerned, in proof of which the books have ever been open for the investigation of any authorized agent; in fact, to my knowledge, such investigation has always been invited.

The management not only protected the Government, but a system was created which enabled the helpless and ignorant Indians engaged in the work to save such a proportion of their earnings that there is to-day to their credit in the banks of San Francisco $100,000, which amount might have gone into the coffers of the company for the simple consideration of five barrels of bad whisky.

This instance alone is sufficient to show the purity and integrity of the man's life. Such an example should be written on the mile-posts of the highway, chiseled in the cliffs along the trails of the Rocky Mountains, graven on the granite of the Sierras, hewn on the tall pines of the Pacific slope, and commemorated in the flowers in the valleys of the dead Senator's adopted State.

Now, Mr. President, as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned to to-morrow, Friday, May 28, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 27, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

H. P. M'FARLIN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3848) for the relief of H. P. McFarlin with Senate amendments.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that instead of referring that bill to the committee, the House now concur in the amendments of the Senate, which are but mere verbal changes.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Senate will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 26, 1886.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 3848) for the relief of H. P. McFarlin do pass with the following amendment:

"In line 2, strike out the words 'restored to' and insert 'reinstated upon.'"

There being no objection, the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the following titles, with Senate amendments; which were severally referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, namely:

A bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney;

A bill (H. R. 4688) granting a pension to Josephine De Costa Thomas; and

A bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, namely:

A bill (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs;

A bill (S. 1078) granting a pension to William C. Wait;

A bill (S. 1201) granting a pension to Louise Armbrecht;

A bill (S. 1207) granting a pension to Caroline Sees;

A bill (S. 1997) granting a pension to Mrs. Abbie B. Heath;

A bill (S. 2045) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Hamilton;

A bill (S. 2144) granting an increase of pension to Grace F. Edes;

A bill (S. 2215) granting a pension to Martha J. Todd, widow of Dr. R. N. Todd, late of Indianapolis, Ind.;

A bill (S. 2232) granting a pension to Mary Martin;

A bill (S. 2263) granting a pension to Col. James H. Blood;

A bill (S. 2267) granting an increase of pension to Laurinda G. Cummings;

A bill (S. 2269) granting a pension to William Dickens;

A bill (S. 2336) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Benson;

A bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan; and

A bill (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions of certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

The bill (S. 2030) granting a pension to Miss Margaret Stafford North was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ADDITIONAL LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations, with amendments of the Senate disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and a conference asked for on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said bill.

On motion of Mr. IRION, the Senate amendments were non-concurred in, and the request for a conference was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. IRION, Mr. CRISP, and Mr. DUNHAM as managers at said conference on the part of the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STONE, of Missouri, indefinitely.

To Mr. CABELL, for two days.

To Mr. OUTHWAITE, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOUK, for five days, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WELLBORN, by request of the Indian Office, asked and obtained unanimous consent that all papers relating to Indian-depredation claims submitted to the House of Representatives at this session of Congress by the Indian Office and now in the custody of the Committee on Indian Affairs be returned temporarily to the said Indian Office, to be hereafter returned to the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is proceeding with the regular order.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 16) granting a pension to Nancy L. Ribble;

A bill (H. R. 413) granting a pension to George Schaefer;

A bill (H. R. 424) to amend the record of Giles C. Hawley, and to place his name on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 515) granting a pension to Althea A. Frasner;

A bill (H. R. 550) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Adam Gaston;

A bill (H. R. 567) granting a pension to Mary A. Little;

A bill (H. R. 1184) granting a pension to Stephen Gardner;

A bill (H. R. 1330) granting a pension to Martin Taylor;

A bill (H. R. 1576) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock;

A bill (H. R. 1585) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Colbath;

A bill (H. R. 1592) for the relief of Sarah A. Vaughn;

A bill (H. R. 1816) granting a pension to Mary Ann Miller;

A bill (H. R. 3193) granting a pension to Mrs. Edna Roberts;

A bill (H. R. 3205) granting a pension to George W. Guyse;

A bill (H. R. 3376) granting a pension to Thomas Sampson;

A bill (H. R. 3906) for the relief of Catharine Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 3982) granting a pension to John Pennington;

A bill (H. R. 4462) granting a pension to Martha Downs;

A bill (H. R. 4490) granting a pension to H. W. McDonald;

A bill (H. R. 4631) granting a pension to Mary Merrill;

A bill (H. R. 4976) for the relief of Tobias M. Coon;

A bill (H. R. 5127) granting a pension to Mary A. Repley;

A bill (H. R. 5961) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Vigus;

A bill (H. R. 5995) granting a pension to David T. Elderkin;

A bill (H. R. 6003) for the relief of John H. McClelland;

A bill (H. R. 6192) granting a pension to Mary Norman;

A bill (H. R. 6331) granting a pension to George Anna Lippe;

A bill (H. R. 6650) granting a pension to Samuel Robbins;

A bill (H. R. 6655) granting a pension to Stakely D. Dagley;

A bill (H. R. 6126) granting a pension to Henry G. Ballinger;

A bill (H. R. 6688) for the relief of William Bishop;

A bill (H. R. 7118) for the relief of Bailey Hascall;

A bill (H. R. 7298) for the relief of Charles Schuber;

A bill (H. R. 7300) for the relief of Randolph Seaman; and

A bill (H. R. 7617) granting a pension to Solomon J. Grisson.

SHIPPING LAWS.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4838) "to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 24, and 26, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment striking out section numbered 3, and agree in lieu thereof to insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That section 10 of the act entitled 'An act to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine and encourage the American foreign carrying-trade, and for other purposes,' approved June 26, 1884, be amended by striking out the words, 'That it shall be lawful for any seaman to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of any portion of the wages which he may earn to his wife, mother, or other relation, but to no other person or corporation;' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'That it shall be lawful for any seamen to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of all or any portion of the wages which he may earn to his wife, mother, or other relation, or to an original creditor in liquidation of any just debt, or board, or clothing which he may have contracted prior to engagement, not exceeding $10 per month for each month of the time usually required for the voyage for which the seaman has shipped, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, but no allotment to any other person or corporation shall be lawful.' And said section 10 is further amended by striking out all of the last paragraph after the words 'vessels of the United States' and inserting in lieu of such words stricken out the following: 'And any master, owner, consignee, or agent of any foreign vessel who has violated this section shall be liable to the same penalty that the master, owner, or agent of a vessel of the United States would be for a similar violation.'"

And the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the following new section in lieu thereof:

"SEC. 14. That section 4418 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by striking out from the nineteenth and following lines thereof the words 'and to indicate the pressure of steam suitable steam-registers that will correctly record each excess of steam carried above the prescribed limit, and the highest point attained,' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'And suitable steam-gauges to indicate the pressure of steam.'"

And agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "the edition of eighteen hundred and seventy-five" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "As the sections of title 33 are numbered in an act to reduce internal revenue-taxation, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1883, and the provisions;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "the," after the word "suspending" and before the word "concessions," and insert in lieu thereof the word "such;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its several amendments changing the numbering of sections, and agree to the numbers proposed by the House; and that the Senate further recede from its votes numbering the last five sections and substitute the numbers in order; and the House agree to the same.

NELSON DINGLEY, JR.,
P. DUNN,
BENTON McMILLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.
WARNER MILLER,
J. N. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask that the statement of the House conferees may be read.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the Senate amendments to the bill of the House (H. R. 4838) "to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action herein recommended on each amendment in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment numbered 3 modifies the tenth section of the shipping act of 1884, which prohibited the payment of advance wages to seamen, so as to allow a seaman to allot, in his shipping agreement, wages not earned to an amount not exceeding $10 for each month of the time usually occupied in the voyage for which the seaman has shipped, to an original creditor in payment of any just debt for board and clothing previously incurred—this allotment to be in addition to that which the seaman is now permitted to make to his wife or other relative.

Amendment numbered 5 extends the limited-liability rule to canal-boats, barges, and lighters, thus making the rule apply to all vessels on inland waters, as well as on the ocean and lakes.

Amendment 8 adopts section 7 of the bill as passed by the House, by which a vessel of the United States without the usual papers is subjected to a fine instead of forfeiture.

Amendment 22 repeals so much of section 4418 of the Revised Statutes as requires steam-vessels to be provided with patent automatic steam-registers that will record the pressure of steam, and substitutes therefor a provision requiring only the ordinary steam-register.

Amendment 23 gives to whaling and fishing vessels of the United States the benefits of the provisions of sections 2510 and 2511 of the Revised Statutes, as numbered in the tariff act of 1883, and of the provisions of section 16 of the shipping act of 1884.

Amendment 24 provides that rule 12 of section 4233 of the Revised Statutes shall not be construed to require row-boats and skiffs on the River St. Lawrence to carry lights.

Amendment 25 authorizes the President to withdraw commercial privileges in our ports from the vessels of any foreign country to the extent that such privileges are denied to the vessels of the United States in the ports of such foreign country. This section simply extends the authority given the President by the act of 1883, which covers only discriminating charges and duties, so as to cover cases where vessels of the United States are discriminated against as to commercial privileges.

Amendment 26 provides that the United States shall allow steamships the regular steerage-passenger rate, not to exceed 2 cents per mile, for the transportation home of shipwrecked American seamen in cases where such steamships are required by law to transport such seamen at the expense of the Government; and also exempts steamships from the obligation to receive and transport seamen having a contagious disease.

NELSON DINGLEY, JR.,
P. DUNN,
BENTON McMILLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. If there is no further explanation asked for and no gentleman desires to discuss the report I will move the previous question on its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine demands the previous question on the adoption of the report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It seems to me there ought to be some explanation.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered there will be thirty minutes for debate, fifteen minutes on each side.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But this seems a matter far too important to be carried in haste through the House. The question that is really at issue is not merely to confer on the President of the United States the right, but to impose the duty——

Mr. DINGLEY. I withdraw the motion for the previous question and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, personally I do not desire the time, but I would like, if in order, to move that this report be printed, and that its consideration be fixed for some other day at such hour as may be ordered, that we may have an opportunity of looking into it. It is not my desire to submit any observations upon the report myself at this time.

Mr. DUNN. If my colleague on the committee will allow me I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that the amendments of the Senate to this bill have been printed for two weeks and there has been ample opportunity for the members of the House to read them; so that if any debate is desired I hope my colleague on the committee will give the opportunity for it now. And I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not insist on the postponement of a disposition of the report of the conference committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. If there is to be any debate on this report I prefer it should be now. If the gentleman from Kentucky desires to make any remarks I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is it in order to move to postpone the consideration of this report to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order when the gentleman has the floor for the purpose of making it. The Chair understood the gentleman from Maine to yield the gentleman from Kentucky five minutes——

Mr. DINGLEY. Merely for debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine still retaining the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am in this attitude: I do not understand the proposition that is made in the conference report, although I have read the bill offered by the Senator from Maine in the Senate and offered now under this conference report. It is much broader I think than the House may at first blush think.

It is not merely conferring a privilege, it is imposing a duty upon the President of the United States to withdraw from the vessels of a foreign country whatever privileges he may think have been withdrawn from vessels of the United States by that foreign country. It arises out of the recent troubles on our Canadian frontier about our fishing vessels, but there is not a word in this bill about the fishing vessels or the fisheries. Those vessels may not have any commercial privileges at all under our treaties, yet this bill relates wholly to the commercial privileges of commercial vessels. Nor am I sufficiently advised, sir, though I have looked with some care at this bill, as to the meaning of the phrase contained in it "of like vessels." I do not know whether that means vessels of like build, as, for instance, steam-vessels, so classified as distinct from sailing vessels, or whether it means vessels in like trade. I do not know whether the classification is as to similarity of construction or similarity of trade. What is the precise meaning that may be affixed to these terms is, I confess, to me a matter of doubtful construction.

I desire to submit but a single observation upon this bill, for I suppose there is no part of America that, in a narrow and selfish sense, has less interest in this question than the part that I represent; but we are interested in the broad sense that we all constitute one country, one people, and that therefore the prosperity of our commerce concerns us all.

The only observation I desire to make at this time is that a matter so important as this ought to be submitted with fuller explanation, with ampler time for discussion, so that the House may fully understand the entire question before it is called upon to act. There is no hurry for this legislation, Mr. Speaker. There is no reason why it can not be acted upon next week or the week after just as well as to-day, while there are some reasons which should make us hesitate about acting in a hurry.

The matter on our Canadian frontier is under examination; the executive department has it under consideration. There is no danger of a war. Our rights are to be regarded——

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say to him that this provision in the bill does not involve or affect that question at all. It does not pretend to deal with that question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then, Mr. Speaker, if it does not affect that question there can be no occasion for hurry, because we have no other question pending about commerce with any foreign country. The sole question now at issue that threatens to give us any trouble is this fishery question, and, if this bill does not apply to that question, certainly there can be no need for haste. But I will ask the distinguished chairman of the committee if this does not apply to the fishery question, in the name of God what question does it apply to?

Mr. DUNN. As the gentleman has asked that question, I will answer it. It simply supplies an omission in the reciprocity arrangement and laws of 1823, as my colleague on the committee [Mr. DINGLEY] will explain more fully when he comes to address the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now, Mr. Speaker, the law of 1823 has been in existence for sixty-three years, and as we have managed to get along very fairly all this time under the casus omissus of that law, I do not see why we are not capable of getting along in the same way a few days longer.

But does this provision apply to that? It requires the President of the United States to put an embargo on Canadian vessels in return for what is supposed to be an outrage committed on the fishing vessels of America. I have no objection, sir, to proper action on that question. Not only have I no objection, but I will go as far as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] or any other gentleman in this House to protect the fishing interests of Maine or of Massachusetts as I would go to protect the interests of Kentucky or any other portion of the country. All I desire is that before acting the House shall know just what this proposition is, and shall have that knowledge in such a way that we can fully understand it, and not merely in the form of the report of a conference committee.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire further time?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If it is agreeable to the gentleman, I would like to have five minutes after he has made his explanation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be regarded as opposed to this bill, except certain features of it. If it were in order, there are two amendments that I would like to offer. I dislike to put upon the President of the United States the duty, I dislike to give the President of the United States the power, to shut the ports of America to the vessels of any foreign country merely upon his judgment that certain privileges have been withdrawn from American vessels.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. He is willing to accept the responsibility.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly he is. With the President now in power, I might and would be entirely willing to trust this discretion; but, Mr. Speaker, we are not legislating for to-day, we are not legislating for one quadrennial, we are legislating for all the contingent Presidents that may be elected under our form of Government; and I confess that I feel great reluctance to vote not only to clothe President of the United States with the privilege but to impose upon him the duty of closing the harbors of America to the vessels of foreign nations merely upon his own judgment that certain privileges have been witdrawn from American vessels.

I should prefer to leave that power where the Constitution leaves the war-making power, in the hands of Congress; and if it can not be always exercised at all times because Congress is not always in session, then I should prefer to have this provision of the bill take effect only during the vacations and recesses of Congress. I look with reluctance upon any increase of executive power, and Mr. Speaker, I look with reluctance upon every form of legislation that is revengeful and retaliatory. I believe more and more in the power of diplomatic intercourse, of friendly interchange of opinion, of patient, honest, candid correspondence and negotiation, with the view of reaching a common settlement, than in legislative or executive interference by retaliatory measures. The day of exclusive legislation is growing smaller and smaller, and the day of this frank intercourse and diplomatic negotiation is coming nearer and nearer to its full dawn. Therefore I look with regret and reluctance upon any legislation of this character that is not absolutely necessary. And now, when we are in profound peace, when there is no question that gives us any trouble except this fishing question, I do not see the need for hurried legislation of this character.

As to the question of the fisheries, it is not going to give us anything but a momentary irritation. I have no doubt in the world that it is to be settled satisfactorily. Two great Anglo-Saxon, English-speaking peoples like Great Britain and America are not going to fall out and have war and bloodshed over a matter of fishing that can be better settled by peaceful negotiation. Therefore, as I have said, in the midst of profound peace I do not feel willing, if it can be avoided, to pass an act like this in such haste that it can not be properly understood by the House; and if it be in order I shall move at the proper time to postpone this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not now?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am on the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], and I have not the power to do it now.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], before he proceeds, allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. Under which section of the Revised Statutes is it that the President now has a right to issue his proclamation where there is a discriminating duty or charge made against American vessels?

Mr. DINGLEY. The act of 1823.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the gentleman remember the section?

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not state it just now; I will refer to it in a moment.

I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] misapprehends the whole scope of this amendment. It is true that the necessity for it is suggested by recent denials of commercial privileges in Canadian ports to American fishing vessels; but the section itself ought to be on the statute-book without regard to the present fishery trouble. Prior to 1823 the principle of exclusive maritime privileges with respect to the vessels of each nation prevailed throughout the world. About the year 1823 the United States inaugurated and tendered to the world the principle of maritime reciprocity, offering to place the vessels of any foreign nation upon the same basis in our ports as our own national vessels if the foreign nation in question would place American vessels on the same basis in its ports. The principle of maritime reciprocity looked to giving to the vessels of foreign countries in our ports commercial privileges to the extent and only so long as the same privileges were given to American vessels in foreign ports. In order to insure reciprocity in 1823 we accompanied the tender with an act giving authority to the President of the United States to issue his proclamation reimposing discriminations against vessels of certain countries in our ports whenever such country should make discriminations against the vessels of the United States. That is the law to-day. The President of the United States, whenever he shall be satisfied that discriminations are made against vessels of the United States by certain foreign countries, has authority to issue his proclamation imposing upon the vessels of such country in our ports parallel discriminating charges.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman will allow me to say that the power given to the President under the law of 1823 is not a power of exclusion, but simply a power to increase the duties.

Mr. DINGLEY. A power to reimpose the former discriminations.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is all. He can not prevent commerce, but simply impose additional burdens upon it.

Mr. DINGLEY. At that time the discriminations against American vessels were usually in the form of charges and duties; and the imposition of those discriminating duties and charges was equivalent to a discrimination in commercial privileges; and the act of 1823 was intended to reach forms of discriminations then existing. A new form of discrimination has been disclosed by the action of the Canadian authorities, and this section simply extends the principle of the act of 1823 so as to cover this new mode. It does not require the President to issue his proclamation, as the gentleman from Kentucky alleges, but simply authorizes him to do so when he has received satisfactory information that our vessels are discriminated against by any country.

Now, it appears that the fishing vessels of the United States are being denied commercial privileges in the ports of another country—the privilege of buying supplies, the privilege of buying ice, the privilege of buying bait, and all commercial privileges except those of shelter, repair, the purchase of wood, and the obtaining of water.

In view of the fact that Canada is attempting to discriminate against American fishing vessels by depriving them of certain commercial privileges which we freely allow Canadian vessels in our ports, it is proposed by this section simply to extend the authority already given by the act of 1823 so that the President may issue his proclamation withholding from the vessels of any country which discriminates in respect to commercial privileges against our vessels precisely the same commercial privileges that the foreign country withholds from our vessels and to the same extent; no further. In other words, if Canada persists in excluding American fishing vessels from her ports except for the four purposes named, then the President will be authorized by this section to grant Canadian fishing vessels in our ports precisely the same privileges, and no more, that she grants us.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman will allow me to ask, for information, whether there is any country that now attempts to exclude any vessels of the United States from any privilege such as the gentleman indicates except the Dominion of Canada with reference to our fishing vessels?

Mr. DINGLEY. No; none at present; so that at present this would apply to such a state of things as that. But the section is general, and will apply to any country which hereafter discriminates against our vessels as to commercial privileges.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let me ask another question. I understood the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. DINGLEY] to say that this bill had nothing to do with, did not refer to, or apply to, the pending fishery question.

Mr. DINGLEY. It does not refer to the fishery question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But I understand it does apply to it.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is a general provision, applicable to any country at any time that discriminates against any class of our vessels as to commercial privileges, and it ought to be on the statute-book without reference to the present fishery difficulty. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether he thinks this country ought to allow Canadian fishing vessels to come into our ports for certain commercial purposes when our American fishing vessels are denied corresponding privileges in the ports of Canada?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am perfectly frank to say that I am in favor of having, as far as possible, the most free and unrestricted commercial relations with our brethren abroad—of letting Canadian vessels come into our ports as freely as they let us go into their ports, to buy or to sell.

Mr. DINGLEY. As freely as they let us go into their ports. That is just what this section proposes; that, and nothing more.

Mr. BURROWS. The selling question is not up at present.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I want to put selling and buying together, for they are indivisible.

Mr. DINGLEY. The principle of maritime reciprocity demands that we give concessions and privileges to foreign vessels in our ports to the same extent as, and no longer than, such concessions or privileges are given to our vessels in the ports of the foreign country. If Canada or any other country should come to understand that her vessels can obtain full privileges in our ports without any corresponding return on her part, then we shall have her vessels coming into our ports and claiming these privileges, while our vessels in her ports are denied similar privileges, and she will simply laugh at us. But when she comes to understand that this Government proposes to apply to her vessels the principles of maritime reciprocity as understood by the founders of the Government, as practiced all these years, and to give concessions and privileges to her fishing vessels only to the extent that such concessions and privileges are allowed to our vessels in her ports, then she will have a pressure put upon her to recede from the unwarrantable course she is pursuing toward American fishing vessels. To-day Canadian fishing vessels are in the port of Portland and other ports of the United States freely exercising every commercial privilege. We ask that Canada give the same privileges to American fishing vessels. If Great Britain, in whose hands the decision is, says "no" to our appeal to her sense of justice, a decent self-respect, as well as a regard for the essential principle of maritime reciprocity, demands that we place the fishing vessels of Canada in our ports on the same basis as Canada places our fishing vessels in her ports.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am perfectly willing to go with the gentleman and make all the concessions to Canada that Canada will make to us; but let us do it by the diplomatic branch of the Government, and not in this manner.

Mr. DINGLEY. I believe I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DINGLEY. If there is no further debate desired I demand the previous question.

Mr. DUNN. I want a few minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hope the House will not sustain the demand. We should have an opportunity of discussing this matter more fully.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will withdraw the demand for the present, and yield ten minutes to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I stated to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] correctly that this amendment does not pretend or undertake to settle the pending controversy in regard to the fisheries between the United States and Canada. That trouble has sprung out of the termination of the treaty of 1870, under and by operation of which this Government paid to Canada a large annual subsidy for the privilege of fishing in her waters, and remitted our country, as they claim, to the provisions of the treaty of 1818 and the reciprocity law of 1823, by which our vessels, as they claim—our fishing vessels—had only the privilege of landing for shelter, wood, water, or repairs. They claim that our fishing vessels have none of the commercial rights and privileges secured by the treaties and by the reciprocity laws. An examination of the statutes of 1823 and of the reciprocity laws shows that the power conferred upon the President was to withdraw simply the exemption granted to vessels of foreign governments entering our ports of such fees, dues, charges, and burdens as foreign governments removed from our vessels, or relieved them from, and to reimpose as much as they might reimpose upon us.

The question of commercial privileges which might be withdrawn by foreign governments was not provided for; and as to the question now pending—the fishery question—all that it has to do with this subject is that it furnishes merely an instance which develops the fact that Canada is in an attitude as well as all foreign governments to withdraw from our vessels commercial privileges, while under our law there is no authority conferred upon the Executive to retaliate by withdrawing similar commercial privileges from them.

I am asked if we are willing to confer such a dangerous power upon the Executive. I answer we have conferred upon him similar powers in regard to other matters; for instance, in regard to the imposition of fees, burdens, and duties, and to reimpose countervailing tariff duties on the imports of foreign countries who have imposed discriminating duties upon our commerce. Can the power proposed to be conferred here be justly deemed more dangerous than that? I, Mr. Speaker, am as far as any one in this House can be from entertaining any desire to confer upon the Executive any power to enable the Executive to tamper with the commerce, the trade, and the finances of this country. I think it is a most dangerous power in any man's hands.

But here we are face to face with a very different question. Are we to tie and fetter our Executive, and allow ourselves no relief? Shall we fetter the Executive, tie him hand and foot by our reciprocity laws and treaties, leaving the foreign shipper and the foreign merchant and foreign governments free to flay, literally flay, our commercial interests, and the Executive standing idly by with his hands tied, unable to relieve against it until Congress sees proper in its wisdom, which is usually dilatory, if present, to remedy the mischief? There is the whole situation.

I am not in the habit on this floor of making the American eagle scream. It has not been my custom; but, Mr. Speaker, I am for my country and for my country's interests. I am for maintaining and placing our Government, through its Executive, always on a basis to protect against the injustice and unfair discriminations of foreign governments. I am for the freest commercial intercourse. No one in this country has been left to doubt my attitude on that question. I am for the freest, most unrestricted commercial intercourse; but I am not unmindful of the law of self-preservation. I would preserve all the interests of the country under the law, and be sure to have law to do it.

Mr. BELMONT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DUNN. Certainly.

Mr. BELMONT. I only wish to ask whether the gentleman from Arkansas does not agree to the statement of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that this amendment has nothing directly to do with the pending fishery question?

Mr. DUNN. I state that most positively; and the only link that can connect it with it is that that incident has developed the possibility or probability—the fact indeed—that a foreign power can, under the reciprocity laws, unjustly by a violation of them deprive our vessels of commercial privileges, while our Executive is powerless to retaliate by withdrawing similar privileges from them.

Now, this country has never suffered by the indiscretion or recklessness of the Executive in exercising such power as that; and I do not think Congress could feel any hesitancy or alarm on that score. Our laws in regard to our shipping, God knows, have been unfriendly enough. If we take the whole system of laws applied to our shipping interests, the vast catalogue of unnumbered burdens that have been imposed upon it, the avenues that have been opened to inventors and every other class of people to leech it and skin it and absolutely consume the shipping interest with taxes and burdens and injustice that we have imposed upon it in every direction and in every form, it is enough to indicate that our Government has heretofore regarded that interest always in the light of a public enemy.

It has been the office of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman in this Congress to do what might be done to relieve these burdens, to take off these taxes, to remove these fetters, and to give greater freedom and a fairer chance to the shipping interests, to give it a show in the contest with the maritime powers of the world for some share in the maritime—over-sea—transportation of the world.

We have worked in that direction, and I am gratified to know that we will have accomplished much if this bill passes. We will have removed a large mass of burdens and taxation exceeding $2,000,000 per annum; it may exceed three millions per annum if foreign governments respond to another provision in the bill which does away with all tonnage tax so fast as foreign governments remove similar tonnage charges on our shipping in their ports.

That was a war tax, imposed for revenue, unknown to our laws till the act of 1862. I regret that my distinguished colleague on the committee and those on his side have not seen proper to go with the majority for that last great crowning act which shall emancipate American shipping—free ships and free material. I trust this measure will not be postponed.

Mr. HEWITT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to point to the authority under which the President now can impose countervailing charges. The gentleman from Maine referred to the act of 1823. I do not find such authority in that act and I have not been able to find it in any other act.

Mr. DUNN. The act of March 1, 1823, does confer that power on the President.

Mr. DINGLEY. That act was read in another body by Senator EDMUNDS and I have sent for it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to read that act?

Mr. DINGLEY. That was the act authorizing the President to remove discriminating charges.

Mr. HAMMOND. And there is no other act on the subject; no act authorizing the President of the United States to proclaim a duty on anybody. There are acts allowing him to take it off. There is the act of 1824, now found in section 4228 of the Revised Statutes, amended in 1828, which is now the law. The fourth section of the act of 1824 I hold in my hand.

Mr. DUNN. That does not affect the question. The question is, shall the President be empowered to withhold from foreign governments such privileges as they withhold from us?

Mr. HAMMOND. But the argument for giving him the power to do that is an argument that he has already the power to do certain other things; which assumption is not true, if I have read the statute correctly.

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. I only desire to say a word in this discussion. It seems to me that the discussion here has taken almost too much of a diplomatic turn. We know that certain privileges have been denied to American vessels in the ports of Canada; and this couples itself with not very pleasant memories. There is no one who has examined the treaties between the United States and Great Britain, especially on the subject of the Canadian fisheries, but must feel humiliated by the fact that we have been always cheated. I do not object to the action which this committee has taken, and trust the House will sustain them in it—for this reason: The Canadian Government, or the British Government if you please, now puts the pressure upon us in engaging in diplomacy of putting our fishermen's vessels at a disadvantage and of holding that pressure on them to get the advantage in any future diplomatic arrangement that may be made for a full settlement of this question.

I trust Congress will show to the executive department of the Government and to the British Government that we mean to insist on equal privileges and equal fairness between Canadian and American vessels. If we become so diplomatic as to help to unnerve the executive department and strengthen the aggressiveness of the British cabinet on this subject we may expect another treaty, in which we will be again cheated. And while I am as anxious as any person can be to preserve the most friendly commercial relations with Great Britain and all other countries, I suppose the best thing to do is to show we mean to preserve the rights of the American Government and the American people. [Applause.] If we are always to be diplomatic, to place our own people and our own Government at a disadvantages by the action both of Congress and the executive department, we may always hereafter expect the results which have heretofore occurred in our diplomatic arrangements on this subject with Great Britain.

I only desired to say this much, in the hope that the House will sustain the action of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia two minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to fight the report of the committee, except that I think they have gone too far in one thing. It is not true that the President of the United States has ever had the power to declare a discriminating duty upon any nation. The act of 1824, which was an act to repeal certain discriminating duties which we had theretofore had against foreign nations, in its fourth and concluding section gave the President the power, whenever he was informed by any foreign nations that they had repealed their discriminating duties, to proclaim that ours should stand in abeyance so long as theirs did. That is its extent, and no more. That fourth section is as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That upon satisfactory evidence being given to the President of the United States by the government of any foreign nation that no discriminating duties of tonnage or impost are imposed or levied within the ports of the said nation upon vessels wholly belonging to citizens of the United States, or upon merchandise, the produce or manufacture thereof, imported in the same, the President is hereby authorized to issue his proclamation declaring that the foreign discriminating duties of tonnage and impost within the United States are, and shall be, suspended and discontinued, so far as respects the vessels of the said nation, and the merchandise of its produce or manufacture, imported into the United States in the same; the said suspension to take effect from the time of such notification being given to the President of the United States, and to continue so long as the reciprocal exemption of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, and merchandise as aforesaid, thereupon laden, shall be continued, and no longer.

Now, this not only declares that the President may, but it declares that it shall be the duty of the President immediately, whenever there shall be any discriminating conduct against this Government, to issue a proclamation at once making a like discrimination on like vessels. We may be forced into war unwittingly by the President obeying this peremptory statute if it should become a law.

The word "duty" ought to be struck out. The discretion given to the President is certainly large enough. The statute ought not to require him peremptorily to issue his proclamation.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] that he is mistaken in saying that this section requires the President to issue his proclamation. The language is that "he is hereby authorized."

Mr. HAMMOND. "It shall be the duty," is the language.

Mr. DINGLEY. "Is hereby authorized," is the language.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I have been misinformed as to the language of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The bill as read says that "it shall be the duty."

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman is mistaken. He is reading from the original bill. It was changed in the committee from "it shall be the duty" to "is hereby authorized." Let me read the section as it stands, and the gentleman from Kentucky will see that he is in error:

That whenever any foreign country whose vessels have been placed on the same footing in the ports of the United States as American vessels (the coastwise trade excepted) shall deny to any vessels of the United States any of the commercial privileges accorded to national vessels in the harbors, ports, or waters of such foreign country, the President, on receiving satisfactory information of the continuance of such discriminations against any vessels of the United States, is hereby authorized to issue his proclamation excluding, on and after such time as he may indicate, from the exercise of such commercial privileges in the ports of the United States as are denied to American vessels in the ports of such foreign country all vessels of such foreign country of a similar character to the vessels of the United States thus discriminated against, and suspending the concessions previously granted to the vessels of such country.

I now have here the act of March 1, 1823, to which I referred. The section of this act to which I referred as already giving the President authority to withdraw by proclamation from vessels of certain foreign countries certain privileges denied by them to our vessels reads as follows:

That this act (act removing certain discriminations against British colonial vessels) shall be and continue in force so long as the above enumerated British colonial ports shall be open to the admission of vessels of the United States conformably to the provisions of the act of Parliament of the 24th of June last. But if at any time the trade and intercourse between the United States and all or any of the above enumerated British colonial ports authorized by the said act of Parliament should be prohibited by a British order in council or by act of Parliament, then from the day of the date of such order in council or act of Parliament, or from the time that the same shall commence to be in force, proclamation having been made by the President of the United States, each and every provision of this act, so far as the same shall apply to the intercourse between the United States and the above enumerated British colonial ports, in British vessels, shall cease to operate in their favor.

I yield five minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as this matter may come up hereafter, I do not think that I shall waste the time of the House if I state the case as it appears to me. Under the treaty of 1870, the fishermen of the United States were put at a disadvantage and the people of Canada at an advantage. When that was made fully manifest, the Congress of the United States gave notice of the abrogation of that treaty. The treaty was abrogated in July. The people of Canada are very desirous that they shall obtain the same advantage which they had under the treaty, and are now struggling to put us at some disadvantage, so that we may be forced and obliged to yield to their wishes.

In order to do it they go back to the old treaty of 1818, which limited our rights on their shores and within their waters. In doing that they undertake to ignore a great change which has come over the commercial relations of the world. At that time the rights of foreign nations in the home port all over the world were exceedingly limited.

To-day throughout the Christian world the rights are the same for foreign ships that they are for ships in the home port. The Canadians are attempting to ignore this advance in civilization, are endeavoring to send us back to the year 1818. Now, these fisheries are conducted all along the waters in front of the coasts of the United States and Canada. Those fisheries are participated in by American fishermen in waters opposite the Canadian shores and by Canadian fishermen in waters opposite the American shores. The bait which is used to catch fish is in its nature perishable. It therefore becomes a great advantage for the fisherman to be able to go into the port which is opposite his fishing ground in order to get bait and supplies. That right along our coast is to-day freely conceded to Canadian fishermen. They come in and out of our ports and purchase their supplies and their bait. But that right or privilege, so freely granted to them and so advantageous to them, they are refusing to our fishermen in like case, and the proposition here is simply to arm the President of the United States, after he has exhausted all diplomatic power and opinion—to arm him, I say, with the right to deprive the Canadian of the privileges of which they deprive us. That is the whole case. I ask you gentlemen, as members of Congress of this United States, are you prepared, any one of you, to refuse to treat the people of foreign nations as they treat us when their object is to force us into a disadvantageous position and gain of us rights which belong to us?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. REED. Surely.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The bill on its face does not apply to the matters of which the gentleman from Maine has spoken, and if the contention of the Canadian authorities be correct, that these fishing vessels have no commercial privileges, then this bill can not apply to that question. Now, is it not proper, is it not best, that we shall in good faith introduce a bill that will meet the precise point stated by the gentleman from Maine—and I will gladly unite with him in passing it, gladly help him to do anything that is required to put our fishermen in the most advantageous position—is it not better, I ask, to introduce a bill for that express purpose, instead of acting hastily here upon a bill of this general character?

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Kentucky, instead of asking me a question, has expressed his opinion. Mine is to the contrary.

Mr. DINGLEY. I now move the previous question on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to recommit this report?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The failure of the House to agree to the report would have precisely the same effect as the adoption of a motion to recommit.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRUST FUNDS, ETC., IN CUSTODY OF DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. HEWITT, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back favorably the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney-General, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior be required respectively to furnish this House with a full and complete schedule of all trust funds in their custody, from whom and when received, to whom due, where held, and amounts of same; the amount of the unexpended balance of the Geneva award available for the payment of the judgments of the court of Alabama Claims, and all other unexpended balances in the custody of the above-named officers of the Government; the estimated amount required for repayment to importers of ex cess of custom dues, and any and all claims, of whatever nature, estimated and ascertained, which may within the fiscal year become a liability against the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HEWITT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is for the call of committees for reports.

WINE FOR EXPORT.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, in lieu of several bills referred to the committee, a bill (H. R. 9114) to provide for the fortification, for exportation, of wine free from internal-revenue tax, and to prevent frauds in connection therewith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INSPECTION OF TOBACCO, CIGARS, ETC.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8585) to provide for the inspection of cigars, tobacco, and snuff, and to repeal section 3151 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS SORRELL.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8950) to remove the political disabilities of Francis Sorrell, of Roanoke County, Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

EUGENE E. M'LEAN.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported a bill (H. R. 9115) for the relief of Eugene E. McLean, of New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back favorably a resolution fixing days for the consideration of business of the Judiciary Committee; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 5911, a bill (H. R. 9116) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Texarkana, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 5911 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE-STOCK.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably a resolution directing the Committee on Commerce to make inquiry concerning the evils connected with the transportation of live stock; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 177) appointing managers for the National Homes for Disabled Soldiers, to fill vacancies in the board which occurred by expiration of terms on the 21st day of April, 1886; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MOBILE AND GIRARD RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. VAN EATON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 5202, the bill (H. R. 9117) to forfeit certain lands of the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company, to confirm the title to the purchasers, and to absolve said company from its obligation as a land-grant railroad company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 5202 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

SPECIAL SESSION UTAH LEGISLATURE.

Mr. HILL. I would like to report for consideration at this time a bill from the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to ask for the consideration of a bill during the morning hour.

Mr. HILL. Very well; then I will report the bill and at some subsequent time ask for unanimous consent for its consideration and passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send his bill up to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on the Territories, reported a bill (H. R. 9118) to authorize a special session of the Legislature of Utah; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, STAUNTON, VA.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6318) for the erection of a public building at the city of Staunton, Va.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBECCA HOLLINGSWORTH HUMPHREYS.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1625) granting a pension to Rebecca Hollingsworth Humphreys; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, also presented the views of the minority on the foregoing bill; which were ordered to be printed with the majority report.

THOMAS J. OWEN.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1289) granting a pension to Thomas J. Owen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BONDS OF EXECUTORS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1422) to amend the law relative to the bonds of executors in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS DENMEAD.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7903) for the relief of Francis Denmead; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHEYENNE AND NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 222) to authorize the Cheyenne and Northern Railway Company to build its road across Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported back with an amendment a joint resolution (H. Res. 174) authorizing the printing of 25,000 copies of the report of the National Board of Health.

The resolution authorizes the printing and binding, under the direction of the National Board of Health, of 25,000 copies of the said report; 16,650 for the use of the members of the House and 8,350 for the use of the Senate.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "report" the words "for the year 1885;" also amend the title to conform to the joint resolution.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. EVANS moved the following amendment:

Add: 2,000 for the use of the National Board of Health.

Mr. BARKSDALE. That is a proper amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to conform to the joint resolution.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 7167) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Hunter; when the Speaker signed the same.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5681) for the relief of F. M. Fitzhugh, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

INCREASE OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the following resolution; which was referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the bill of the House No. 6664, entitled "A bill to increase the naval establishment," be made the special order for Wednesday, June 9, after the call of committees for the consideration of business, and its consideration be resumed at the same time on Thursday, June 10, and at the same time on Saturday, June 12, on which last day it shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule until half past 3 o'clock p. m., when the previous question shall be considered as ordered on all pending amendments, the engrossment, and the third reading of the bill. If for any reason the consideration of said bill shall not be had and completed as above, then this shall be a continuing order, and the said bill shall be considered as above on the first three days which can be devoted thereto.

SEAL ROCKS, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8107) to grant certain seal rocks to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in trust for the people of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER. Under authority of the act of February 15, 1879, the Chair announces the appointment of Mr. NORWOOD, Mr. LORE, and Mr. HARMER as Visitors on the part of the House to attend the next annual examination at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. REAGAN, Mr. HOLMAN, and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. REAGAN. This is too important a paragraph to limit the debate to ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first state the question to the House. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and pending that motion moves that all debate on the pending section and all amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. HATCH. And on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. The section is too important a one to be closed in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a statement.

Mr. HATCH. One at a time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that to-morrow morning the Committee on Appropriations will ask to take up for consideration the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana if it is possible to complete this bill to-day we will be glad to assist him in getting it up.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend will have it completed in time.

Mr. REAGAN. The third section is the important section of the bill, and so far debate upon it has been upon a single amendment. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to allow thirty minutes for the purpose of discussing other amendments which are ready to be offered.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. This section contains three paragraphs. It is a revenue bill. Under Rule XXIII can a limitation be put upon debate on all paragraphs when the third paragraph has not yet been reached?

The SPEAKER. No point of order has been made against the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am making that now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HAMMOND. Perhaps I stated it as a parliamentary inquiry. My point of order is that the debate can not be limited on the whole section, containing as it does three distinct paragraphs.

Mr. WELLBORN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. WELLBORN. On the 19th day of April the House, under a suspension of the rules, agreed to this resolution:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 27th day of May, and Saturday, the 29th day of May, after the morning hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees, be set apart for such business as may be presented or indicated by the Committee on Indian Affairs, &c.

From the temper of the House, as manifested on yesterday and the day before, it is quite obvious that it would be utterly useless for me to attempt to get to-day for any Indian business, and I shall not ask to do it; but I do ask unanimous consent of the House that so much of this resolution as relates to this day be continued over, and apply to Saturday, June 12.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is fair.

Mr. HATCH. I hope that will be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that this bill is being considered by paragraphs under the rule, and that the motion to limit debate can apply only to the first paragraph of the section under consideration, and not to the entire section.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard for a moment on that point.

To meet the views of the gentleman from Texas, and other members who desire further debate on this section, it will be well for the House to understand that we have already had a long debate (fifty minutes) on this section alone, in addition to the three days and one night consumed in the general debate.

Now, if the House by unanimous consent will agree that all debate shall be considered as terminated at 4 o'clock to-day, and that we may then go into the House with the bill, I am willing that no further limitation to the debate shall be fixed upon any section of the bill; but if it is the purpose of gentlemen simply to waste a large portion of the valuable time of the House, as was done on yesterday, by dilatory motions, I shall insist upon the consideration of the bill in the House under the rules.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. My point of order is that pending the consideration of the question of order the gentleman has no right to talk of getting the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri to be asking unanimous consent.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I will stop that at once by interposing an objection.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Georgia generally does that except when on the floor himself.

Mr. HAMMOND. Now as to the point of order: This section when reached on yesterday, containing as it does three paragraphs, I raised the point of order at once that each of the three paragraphs was subject to the action of the committee and to limitation of debate by itself. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole said that he would have the three paragraphs read, but that this third section should be considered only by the paragraphs into which it was divided. To apply the limitation of debate on the whole section therefore would have the effect to cut off debate except upon the paragraph immediately under consideration, and such motion would therefore be out of order.

There has been a number of decisions upon this particular point. A long discussion took place heretofore upon a similar proposition. There was a notable effort made here in February, 1882, to cut off debate upon a tariff bill, but it was not persisted in. There were many arguments made against it, one of the strongest being by Governor Robinson, of Massachusetts, and it was determined that the committee could not pass beyond the paragraph, nor limit debate beyond the paragraph immediately under consideration. My point of order, therefore, is that this section, being divided into three paragraphs, is entitled to have a separate consideration for each paragraph.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman point out what he claims to be the three paragraphs or divisions relating to independent subjects?

Mr. HAMMOND. This section contains three paragraphs, the first being a tax on the manufacturers of oleomargarine, the second a tax and certain regulations as to dealers——

Mr. HATCH. Wholesale dealers.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir; and the third has reference to retail dealers. Now, we have under consideration the first paragraph relating to the tax on manufacturers. The other two paragraphs were read with the statement by the chairman of the committee that the reading would not prevent the consideration by paragraphs under Rule XXIII, and that reading was consented to because of that statement.

Now the gentleman from Missouri proposes by his motion to limit debate on all the paragraphs in that section when only one has been under discussion. Such a motion to limit debate is not in order.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I only desire to say in reply to the gentleman from Georgia that the entire section has been read in committee and has been under discussion, and without any objection or point of order, except that made by the gentleman from Georgia, which was overruled by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAMMOND. I submit it was not. The Chair expressly held that it might be read, but would be considered under the rule by paragraphs. I stepped to the desk and asked if the Chair meant to rule adversely to me, and he said he did not.

Mr. HATCH. I certainly so understood him. That point of order was overruled.

Mr. HAMMOND. It was not.

The SPEAKER. Clause 6 of Rule XXIII provides:

The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph—

That is, upon the section or paragraph upon which the five-minute debate has begun. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point that no debate has taken place on any part of the section except the first paragraph.

Mr. HATCH. Let me call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the RECORD shows that an amendment is pending to the second paragraph reducing the tax on the manufacturers of oleomargarine from $600 to $200, and that that has been debated by several gentleman.

The SPEAKER. That is the first paragraph of the section. The Chair finds on examination of the RECORD that when the reading of the first paragraph of the third section had been concluded in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] arose for the purpose of arresting the further reading; but the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union thereupon announced that the entire section would be read, but amendments would be received to the paragraph. The Chair thinks, inasmuch as every bill must consist of one or more sections—appropriation bills, for instance, containing in a single section one hundred or more paragraphs—the House can not close debate on a paragraph till debate has begun upon it.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw the call for the previous question for the purpose of amending my motion so that all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto shall be limited to one minute, and upon that I demand the previous question.

But before the question is taken I again ask, as I believe the request was not submitted to the House, unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as ordered upon this bill and all amendments at 4 o'clock this day.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 111, nays 12.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 181, nays 55, not voting 86; as follows.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, with Mr. RICE.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. BURNES with Mr. CASWELL.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. PIRCE.

Mr. WAIT with Mr. EDEN.

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. MCKENNA.

Mr. WINANS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. ELY.

Mr. FORAN with Mr. LONG.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. LITTLE. If present, Mr. DIBBLE would vote against the pending bill.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. DAVIS. Mr. ARNOT would vote for this bill and Mr. DAVIS against it.

On this vote:

Mr. MCRAE with Mr. SYMES.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

For to-day:

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. O'DONNELL.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, for two days—to-day and to-morrow.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to limit debate on the paragraph under consideration and on all amendments thereto to one minute.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill No. 8328, defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3 by striking out, in line 2, the words "six hundred" and inserting "one hundred." To which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] proposes an amendment, striking out "one hundred" and inserting "two hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto is limited to one minute.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] to have a dispatch read.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, what gentleman from Indiana offered the amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that it was offered by Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. DUNHAM. He withdrew the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk did not hear the gentleman from Indiana withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the telegram which I send to the Clerk's desk be now read.

The Clerk read as follows.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Hon. W. W. MORROW, CHARLES N. FELTON, BARCLAY HENLEY, JOSEPH MCKENNA, J. A. LOUTTIT, or H. H. MARKHAM, Washington, D. C.:

The dairy interest of this State, in which is invested upwards of $25,000,000, is deeply interested in the passage of the bill levying a heavy tax on all imitations of dairy products. The undersigned, representing the dairymen of the State, respectfully urge your best efforts in the passage of this measure.

(Signed by:) Wheaton & Luhrs; Dodge, Sweeney & Co.; C. E. Whitney & Co.; Getz Bros. & Co.; Brigham, Hoppe & Co.; Gage, Shattuck & Co.; J. B. Wooster & Co.; Robert Haight & Co.; S. McHenry & Co.; Von Ronn & Heucke Bros.; Hegler, Johnson & Co.; Martin, Feusier & Co.; H. N. Tilden & Co.; F. Martens & Co.; O. B. Smith & Co.; E. W. Forsaith & Co.; Witzel & Baker, Herman Joost, Norton, Risdon & Co.; C. F. Bassett & Co.; Russ, Sanders & Co.; M. T. Freitas & Co.; Grangers' Business Association, E. Van Every, manager; Coffer, Hill & Co.; Henry & Osgood, Ross & Hewlett, L. Feiling & Co.; W. X. Price & Co.; W. H. Rouse.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] withdrew the amendment offered by him yesterday to the pending amendment. The question therefore is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] which the Clerk has read.

Mr. DUNHAM. I certainly understood that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] had withdrawn his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be considered as withdrawn unless some other member renews it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I renew the amendment. I did not understand that it was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] renews the amendment. The question, then, is on that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The amendment to the amendment is to strike out "one hundred dollars" and insert "two hundred dollars."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] to amend the bill by striking out in line 2, section 3, the words "six hundred" and inserting "one hundred."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 100.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 119.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 2, by striking out "six hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two hundred and fifty."

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 51, noes 86.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WARNER, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HATCH.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 90.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in section 3, line 2, after the word "oleomargarine," by inserting the words "or uses the same or any part of the ingredients which enter into the composition of the same in the manufacture of butter."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment which will precede that. I propose to amend, in line 2, by striking out "six hundred" and inserting "three hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. All amendments to this paragraph will be entertained by the Chair.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD, and there were—ayes 36, noes 84.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. BLANCHARD, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HATCH.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 119.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is that a quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I ask for the vote of a quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I demand that the roll be called.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted on this question, the Clerk will call the roll for the purpose of ascertaining the absentees.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Aiken,	Clements,	Gay,	Landes,
Anderson, C. M.	Cole,	Gibson, C. H.	Le Fevre,
Arnot,	Collins,	Gilfillan,	Little,
Barbour,	Compton,	Glover,	Louttit,
Belmont,	Comstock,	Goff,	Markham,
Bingham,	Crain,	Grosvenor,	McRae,
Brumm,	Davis,	Guenther,	Milliken,
Burleigh,	Dibble,	Hayden,	Mills,
Bynum,	Dougherty,	Holmes,	Muller,
Cabell,	Eden,	Houk,	Norwood,
Campbell, J. E.	Felton,	Hutton,	Oates,
Clardy,	Frederick,	Kelley,	O'Hara,
Outhwaite,	Robertson,	Thomas, J. R.	Wait,
Pirce,	Rogers,	Thompson,	Warner, A. J.
Reid, J. W.	Skinner,	Trigg,	Winans,
Rice,	Steele,	Van Schaick,	Woodburn.

The Committee of the Whole rose in accordance with the rule; and Mr. WELLBORN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, had found itself without a quorum; whereupon the chairman had ordered the roll to be called, as required by the rules, and now reported to the House the names of the absentees to be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the report made by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole shows the presence of a quorum, the Committee of the Whole without further order will resume its sitting.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole and resumed the consideration of House bill 8328.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], on which no quorum voted. The vote will be again taken.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry—whether those who voted on this question before the committee rose should now vote again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that, in order to avoid any misunderstanding, the vote should be taken de novo. The Chair appoints as a teller, in the place of the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. BLANCHARD, the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. GIBSON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 32, noes 140.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out "six hundred" and inserting "three hundred," so as to read, "manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay $300."

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question). In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Simply to ascertain the feeling of the House, and without any desire for delay, I ask for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 51, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to amend by striking out "six hundred" and inserting "three hundred and fifty;" so as to make the tax to be paid by manufacturers of oleomargarine $350.

The amendment was not agreed to, there being—ayes 26, noes 125.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to amend by striking out "six hundred" and inserting "four hundred."

The amendment was not agreed to, there being—ayes 18, noes 130.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I move to amend by inserting after the word "oleomargarine," at the end of line 4, section 3, these words:

Provided, That for the purposes of this act no one who makes out of pure articles an imitation of butter, and who properly stamps the same as herein required, and who makes not more than 10,000 pounds a year, shall be deemed a manufacturer.

The CHAIRMAN (after putting the question). In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (in his seat). I call for a division.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that no gentleman has risen in his seat in accordance with the rules of the House to ask for a division.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (rising). I will comply with the rules and rise in my place. I call for a division.

Mr. HATCH. All that I ask is that the rules may be complied with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair always recognizes any gentleman demanding a division whether he rises from his seat or not.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 32, noes 130.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, were appointed as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 20, noes 145.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have another amendment to offer.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Most fruitful man! [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 3, line 2, strike out "six hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that we have already passed that.

The CHAIRMAN. We have not passed it.

Mr. HATCH. I did not hear the amendment. Let the Clerk report it again.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to strike out "six hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. HATCH. Has not that been already voted on?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is the amount fixed for brewers. I wish to equalize this.

Mr. NELSON. We have voted on $100, and can not go below that now.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been passed, and the amendment is in order.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 118.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and Mr. HATCH were appointed as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 19, noes 145.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 3 by striking out "six hundred" and inserting "four hundred and seventy-five."

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 124.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "oleomargarine," in line 14 of section 3, the words "and that the provisions of this section shall apply to watered milk, adulterated butter, ancient eggs, sanded sugar, glucose sirup, artificial honey, candles and soaps of less weight than they are sold for, bottles of wines and liquors of less quantity than they are represented to contain, adulterated wines, brandy, or whisky, shoddy cloths of all kinds, shoes with brown-paper soles, or any other article for food, drink, or wear which is or may be represented as pure, unadulterated, or genuine, or of full weight or measure, if it is, in fact, impure, adulterated, or of different quantity or quality than it may be represented to be by the seller.

[Great laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. REAGAN. If the Chair desires, I wish to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. HATCH. I do not desire to take up any time in discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion this amendment is not germane to the section under consideration. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to know what the decision of the Chair is. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Has the Chair made a decision on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Chair hear me on the point of order? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" "Regular order!"] I desire to be heard. ["Regular order!"] This is a revenue bill.

Mr. HENLEY. Wait a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided the question of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose I have a right to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to place on record the reasons why the amendment has been submitted to the committee. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I appeal, then, from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests members to be in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to be heard on the point of order. Can I get recognized by the Chair to know whether I can be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HENLEY. Regular order!

Mr. REAGAN. Before he made his decision I asked the Chair to be heard on the point of order. I think that courtesy should be extended to me. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

A MEMBER. Read the riot act.

Mr. REAGAN. I think the ruling of the Chair was arbitrary and unjust and a disrespect to me when I was asking to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman if he will permit him—— [Cries of "Regular order!"] Will the committee be in order?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will suspend for one minute. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman desired to discuss this question.

Mr. REAGAN. As soon as the point of order was made by the gentleman from Missouri I stated that if the Chair desired to hear anything I asked to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear that remark; but will now hear the gentleman.

Mr. HENLEY. Does it require unanimous consent? The Chair has ruled once already on this subject. How is this, then?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House purports to be a revenue bill.

Mr. HENLEY. By what means does the gentleman get the floor to discuss the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is speaking to the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I have the floor in my own right now.

Mr. HENLEY. Some of the balance of us have rights here too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will repeat that the gentleman from Texas stated, before the Chair decided the point of order, that he would like to be heard upon the point of order. The Chair did not hear the statement of the gentleman, and therefore proceeded to rule against the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I was on my feet when the amendment was read and asked to be heard.

Mr. STRUBLE. But it was coupled with the proposition "if the Chair desired to hear an argument upon the question of order."

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take the word of the gentleman from Texas for it.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope now that I may be permitted to proceed for a few minutes without interruption, and that gentlemen will be able to hold themselves in check.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether the right of the gentleman from Texas to address the Chair now depended upon his demand to be heard or upon his recognition by the Chair before the announcement of the decision was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman to move an amendment, and he was on his feet for the purpose of submitting the amendment. The point of order was immediately made by the gentleman from Missouri, and the Chair, without hearing the gentleman from Texas express a desire to discuss the point of order, ruled against him, or rather sustained the point of order. The gentleman from Texas now states that he did desire to be heard.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the gentleman was not recognized by the Chair, and the Chair has already decided the question.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman was on the floor and states he was desirous of being heard.

Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to make the further point that he said if the Chair desired to hear anything on the point of order. The Chair expressed no such desire, but ruled immediately on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take the statement of the gentleman that he desired to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SOWDEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOWDEN. I wish to ask whether the gentleman from Texas can proceed now to argue the question when the point of order has been already decided by the Chair and that decision announced to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. But if the decision was made in ignorance of the fact that the gentleman desired to be heard the Chair is ready to correct what might be an injustice to the gentleman from Texas. It has been customary to allow an explanation of the amendment on which the point of order is made. Debate upon points of order is always in the discretion of the Chair, and the Chair will therefore hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the House is a revenue bill or it is a fraud. The pretense is that it is a revenue bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCOTT. The point of order is that the gentleman can not discuss the merits of the bill when taking the floor upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that the gentleman must confine himself to a discussion of the question of order; and the Chair sustains it.

Mr. REAGAN. Perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania would like to make my speech for me; if so, I will desist.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not hear the remark of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I said if the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to make my speech for me I will give him the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. No, sir; I would not like to adopt anything you say. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that I may now proceed without interruption. I have never committed such a discourtesy to any gentleman upon this floor since I have been here.

I have stated that this bill is reported as a revenue bill. If it is a revenue bill, if its purpose be honest, then the amendment which I propose is in the line of legislation proposed by the bill, for it seeks to collect the revenue from other things of a similar character. It is to collect the revenue from a large number of articles mentioned in the amendment. Is it not as legitimate under a revenue bill to collect revenue from watered milk or diluted butter as it is from oleomargarine? I put that question to the Chair.

The whole amendment goes to the point, if the object is revenue, of increasing the revenue to be derived from the bill, for my amendment will give much more revenue than the bill of the committee. If the object is to protect the people against frauds and impositions, then my amendment goes further than the committee's bill in the line of protecting the people against such frauds and impositions, and protects them against many frauds of the same kind and general character instead of but one. If the object is to prevent injury to the public health—for I shall meet the opposition to this amendment on all points—by the use of adulterated foods and drink, the amendment I have offered proposes to protect the people more extensively and generally against diluted, adulterated, and injurious foods or drinks than does the bill of the committee. If the object is to accommodate the wishes of the people—and of course nobody here has any selfish motive in this thing—then my amendment accommodates the wishes and the interests of an infinitely greater number of people than the committee's bill. If the object is to secure the advantages of impartial legislation and avoid class legislation and unjust discriminations, then my amendment goes to the point of being impartial and just, for it is applicable to all the frauds that belong to that vast class of diluted and adulterated foods and drinks, as well as to the sale of shoddy goods.

So that, take it in any view in which the committee has presented it to the House or can present it, the amendment is in the same line as the committee's bill, and in my judgment is germane.

But the first proposition I made is a full answer to the point of order made against the amendment. This is a revenue bill, if it is not a fraud. It is a revenue bill, if it is not here by false pretenses. And as a revenue bill I propose to give it more power, more virtue, and secure more revenue by taxing the various sorts of frauds and impositions of the class that it is said this bill intends to prevent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas is not germane to this part of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair and ask that the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas was not germane to this part of the bill. From that decision the gentleman from Texas appeals. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 123, noes 28.

Mr. REAGAN. No quorum.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. HATCH and Mr. REAGAN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 131, noes 32.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like to have the yeas and nays on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not have the yeas and nays in committee, and the question does not go to the House.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to offer an amendment, to strike out, in line 15, section 3, "$48" and insert "$25."

The CHAIRMAN. That paragraph is not yet reached.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I offer an amendment to the pending paragraph, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 5 and 6 of section 3 strike out "$480" and insert "$100."

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in good faith, and beg leave to give notice now that as the reading of this bill is proceeded with I shall offer an amendment at the proper stage to repeal all revenue taxation on fruit brandy, and also to repeal all internal-revenue taxation upon tobacco.

In the first place, it is my desire, in no spirit of faction, however much I may be opposed to the bill in its present shape, to make it such a bill as it pretends and as it legitimately might be designed to be. And let me say, sir, that if this bill, in its present shape, with a tax of 10 cents upon oleomargarine in any form, is passed, I conceive the gentlemen who are seeking to protect the people against adulterated foods are themselves committing the very evil which they seek to aim at, by adulterating legislation; and that by their adulterated legislation they will not succeed by so heavy a tax in preventing adulterated food from being sold, but will themselves encourage the thing which they design to suppress.

It is conceded, Mr. Chairman, that there are many species of oleomargarine. It is conceded, and it is demonstrated, that there is a compound called oleomargarine concocted of entirely wholesome and palatable substances. It is conceded also, and therein comes the great evil, beyond the evil of a counterfeit, that there are very noxious compounds likewise styled oleomargarine.

Now, sir, it is also a fact that the wholesome article of oleomargarine may be manufactured at some 7 or 8 cents a pound. If you tax all species of oleomargarine, that which is wholesome and that which is poisonous and noxious alike, the result will be that those who continue to manufacture this compound will palm off the noxious upon the market, and that the people will suffer the evil of deleterious food more after this bill is passed than before.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Can the gentleman state what per cent. of the oleomargarine manufactured is pure and what per cent. is noxious?

Mr. DANIEL. I have never seen any oleomargarine in my life to my knowledge. It presents a field which is yet unexplored by science except in a very partial degree.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then how does the gentleman know that any of it is pure?

Mr. DANIEL. I know it to be pure, just as I know some of it to be impure, by the statement made upon this floor by gentlemen who pretend to be familiar with the subject and who ought to have been familiar with the subject before they introduced this bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me further ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HITT. This is a revenue bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] proposes to modify the amount of revenue by reducing the license fee of the manufacturer provided in this section, and treats the bill as a revenue bill, which it really is, though he may, with others, oppose it on the pretext that it is not for revenue, but to destroy what they call an innocent and proper industry in making their excellent oleomargarine. The gentleman's argument, like that of many others here, and his amendment contradict the position of our opponents on both sides of the House, who have resisted the bill as being not a revenue bill, but a bill for the destruction of a particular industry. This is a bill to draw money into the Treasury. Whether it is to be more or less than the committee estimate I can not tell, but money will be collected by it, and it therefore comes clearly within our constitutional power to pass revenue bills. I am willing to accept the judgment of the committee as to the amount of tax to be laid on this spurious butter. That Committee on Agriculture is composed of fifteen able, earnest men from both sides of the House, Democrats and Republicans, who, after many weeks of careful examination, after having heard the representatives of all those interested in the manufacture and sale of this new, strange counterfeit, and having heard those who represent the myriads of the people who are the consumers and that great army seven millions strong of the farming interest, that are so deeply interested as producers, have fixed the taxes at these figures.

Why can not we accept them rather than the hap-hazard suggestions and amendments of gentlemen who oppose the whole bill and whose aim is to defeat the measure which the committee have so carefully framed in response to the demand of the country? The whole land is searching for some legislation that will check the blighting influence of this deceitful traffic. Twenty States have tried, but ineffectually, to reach it by State laws. There are the names of one hundred and four thousand people on petitions now before Congress asking for it. The creameries, half-dozen to a county, all through our Western country are languishing under the destroying influence of cheap and nasty bogus butter. The sheriff is knocking at their doors. The wagons that collect milk for 5 miles around, affording a home market to farmers, and daily paying out money at every door, have stopped. The production of wholesome butter is falling off. The great export trade in butter is diminishing by tens of millions of dollars, and a vast source of national wealth is drying up. The cows on the farms, no longer profitable for milk, are being killed for beef. The committee state that one thousand cows a day are now slaughtered in one city alone; and it is increasing. The suspicion attached to honest butter by the fear of the vile counterfeit makes even it less salable. It seems to be the hour of the complete triumph of fraudulent traffic. And there is no hope that it will ever be corrected by the mere operation of the laws of trade without the intervention of the strong arm of law, for there is no means within the reach of the ordinary consumer to detect the false from the genuine. The dealers will not willing give up the immense advantage they have in perfect impunity from detection. No one wants to buy and eat oleomargarine himself. But how is he to be sure that he is buying butter and not oleo? He knows there is real butter still made and sold although there is also butterine by the hundred million pounds. But he must supply his table; he can not take with him an apparatus for chemical tests; he has not the scientific knowledge for such experiments; so he buys hoping it is butter, but utterly unable to know. He takes the chances; it is all he can do.

This is the position to-day of the whole people. It is time that we should act, and I rejoice to believe that this revenue bill will prove also a bill to secure fair dealing. It will compel open trade under true names. The system of inspection follows this oleomargarine from the beginning of its manufacture to the moment it is sold to the customer from the store, marking at every step by its name oleomargarine, and punishing any one who sells it as butter.

We already have similar legislation, if gentlemen are doubtful of our constitutional power, to tax imitations. There is a law, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROUT] stated, imposing an internal-revenue tax of 10 cents a pint on imitation wine—not adulterated wine—but imitation, just as this bill taxes imitation butter or bogus butter.

I confess there is some truth in what has been said by gentlemen as to taxation upon the table if it is a general proposition. I am averse to all such taxation, and I will suggest to gentlemen who oppose this bill in that view and accord with me in this, would it not be better, since we tax the table so much now, that we should relieve it on that side which is honest, and put the load on the part that is fraud? Take $20,000,000 of the tax off sugar and impose it on bogus butter. [Applause.]

This sugar tax, too, comes out of the consumer; the tax on oleo will come out of the maker and seller, for they sell it at the price of butter now, and they will not sell it for more when it is marked and taxed.

We collect forty millions or more that comes from the sugar on the table. I believe we will collect a very considerable sum from oleomargarine if this bill becomes a law, though then the article must be sold under its own name. I will not assume that all these gentlemen who have talked here so earnestly on behalf of wholesomeness and healthfulness of olemargarine have told us what is wholly untrue. I suppose there is some truth in what they have said, and it may be that, as one gentleman has said, this bogus butter has "come to stay." If it is so innocent and excellent there is no injustice to any one in compelling it to go under its true name. Then let people buy the enticing compound.

Whether good or bad, brand it, and let it pay a tax, just as you now impose an internal-revenue tax upon bogus wine; not, I repeat, as adulterated wine, but as imitation, false, bogus wine, just as this is to be taxed as bogus butter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to yield if I had the time, but only a few moments are left to me and I beg that he will excuse me if I decline to yield the floor. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] has indulged in interrogation here for two days. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I simply wanted to know whether oleomargarine, if sold as such, would be imitation anything?

Mr. HITT. No oleomargarine is ever sold as such, and in the simple state of pure oleomargarine, without doctoring, for the reason that pure oleomargarine is repulsive as tallow and can be distinguished from butter by a child, by anybody. Even if offered for sale under the name, it will be treated so as to color and flavor that it may look like sweet butter and tempt by its appearance and cheapness. It never was and it never will be offered for sale in its pure state. It is colored. I do not say that the coloring is necessarily of unhealthful elements or a noxious addition to it, but it is always added. Anybody and everybody can distinguish pure oleomargarine, wholly free from all doctoring or change in appearance, from butter, and it is by disguising the article with flavor and with color that people are deceived; just as the fineness of the engraving on a counterfeit note makes it such that the ordinary purchaser or the ordinary dealer may be cheated by it. This is a bill that I trust will secure honest dealing, secure fairness and openness between men, stop wholesale roguery. If this oleomargarine is sold under its own name and is not disguised as butter it will find its proper level in the market.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 135, noes 10.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, Mr. WELLBORN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue. Pending that, I move that all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 125, noes 8.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 141, noes 24.

So the motion was agreed to and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to limit debate upon the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto to ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, &c., and the Speaker announced that the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD and Mr. DUNHAM both rose.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side of the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 137, noes 23.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. BLANCHARD, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HATCH.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 145, noes 20.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 28 voting therefor.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 8328.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 5 and 6 of section 3, strike out "four hundred and eighty" and insert "one hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto has been limited to ten minutes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the introduction of this bill and the probable action of a majority of the House upon it constitute one of the best illustrations I ever saw of the old adage that extremes meet, both in the physical and the moral world. Here we have extreme protectionists and ultra free-traders uniting in support of an unprecedented measure. This bill is simply protection gone mad. Not tired of protecting our industries and people against foreign competition, the public judgment, the judgment of Congress, has been perverted and debauched by the protection which has so long been given to the whisky and tobacco manufacturing monopolies, and now it is sought to protect another industry by discrimination, by concentration, by monopoly, by consolidation of the manufacture and sale of both butter and oleomargarine in the hands of a few rich men, without regard to the interests of the poor and small producers and consumers.

This bill is proposed for one of three purposes: either to protect the public health, or to protect cream butter against oleomargarine, or it is a revenue bill. I am sorry that in the brief time I shall be permitted to talk I can not enter upon the proper consideration of this question. Not dreaming that a majority of this House, especially the Democratic side of it, would ever favor this monstrous legislation, I did not until the last two or three days put myself to the trouble of either reading upon this subject or conversing with those who have specially studied it or reflecting carefully upon it; but, sir, if I had time I have faith in my brother Representatives here to believe that I could present some aspects of this question which would at least make them pause until the next session of Congress so as to allow us to gather the facts and the philosophy applicable to this proposition.

I have hardly time even to allude to the idea of this being a revenue bill. The public health needs no protection against oleomargarine, which is a discovery of science for which the world ought to be grateful and proud. [Laughter.] Ah! you laugh, but you laugh from ignorance. [Renewed laughter.] Half of you do not know even how to pronounce the word. [Laughter.] Why, when we were boys we were taught that "g" before "e," "i," and "y" has the soft sound like "j," but before "a," "o," and "u" has the hard sound. Margarine is spelt m-a-r-g-a, like Margaret; yet half of you pronounce it "oleomarjareen," as with a double "e" for "a." [Laughter.] You know about as much in regard to the materials and the method and processes of its manufacture and the science of chemistry involved in it as you know about the pronunciation.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does the gentleman think that anybody knows what ingredients enter into the composition of the article?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want to be interrupted, unless you give me time. If you will give me one hour, you may all cross-question me, and I will answer your questions and confute you.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We would be glad to see the gentleman direct his attention to the chairman [Mr. HATCH] and the majority of the committee who reported this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Ay! The "true-blue" Democrats, as they call themselves, like the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. But this is too great a question for me in the brief time allotted to indulge in personalities. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, twelve or fifteen years ago a chemist in France discovered the process of making oleomargarine. A German chemist about the same time discovered how to make glucose sugar and glucose sirup. That German chemist by discovering the process of boiling Indian corn in sulphuric acid has reduced the price of sugar and sirup until the poorest man and woman in the world can get as much as they want, and will be able to do so to the end of time. So with oleomargarine. It is a healthful food, made out of tallow, hog's lard, cotton-seed oil, and peanut oil, churned in unskimmed milk. It is first frozen before fire is applied to it. Then, according to the sworn statement of Mr. Armour, the largest manufacturer of it in the world, it is subjected to a heat of 150 degrees Fahrenheit, and after it has been pressed it is subjected to a second freezing operation. If there were any animalculæ or parasites in it two freezes and 150 degrees of heat would destroy them. [Laughter.] This treatment and churning it in sweet milk produces a chemical change in the mixed materials—in fact, a new substance—resembling and tasting like butter, making a cheap, nourishing, and palatable food for the poor. I wish I could go into the details of how it is done, but I can not. I am sorry on account of the members here, and on account of the country, that I can not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. I shall get another chance at this question, I hope.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I heartily sympathize with the purpose of this bill. There is a question of method involved, and to that I desire to address myself for the five minutes allotted to me.

There are three classes of persons directly interested in this controversy. First, there are the manufacturers. They are not numerous, but their just rights ought to be sacred. Secondly, there are those who deal in the articles mentioned in this bill. How many are dealing in oleomargarine as wholesale and retail dealers I doubt whether they themselves know, owing to the impossibility of determining when they are dealing in that substance and when they are dealing only in butter. The third class of persons interested in this manufacture consists of the vast army of consumers. My colleague, General BROWN, and myself represent a number of manufacturers and a great many dealers, besides nearly a million of consumers. We desire impartially to represent each class—to do as nearly as may be justice to all and injustice to none.

This, in my judgment, and in the judgment of this House, is a revenue bill, and therefore this House has, under the Constitution, jurisdiction of the subject-matter with which it deals. I take it, it does not make against its constitutionality that while with one hand it brings to the national Treasury an increase of revenue, it brings in the other hand a larger and more conspicuous blessing by protecting the consumers of this land against what is alleged to be a spurious and deleterious article of food, and which is being offered in every market in the land for what it palpably is not——

The incidental purpose of this bill, the incidental blessing that it brings with the revenue it creates, is that it will effectually disentangle and separate two industries which have become blended together and intermixed through the fraud and deceit practiced by one of those industries upon the other. The result of such separation will be that each industry must stand or fall, flourish or languish according to its intrinsic merits.

This bill would be utterly indefensible if its object was to strangle one legitimate industry merely to build up or maintain another and a rival industry. If oleomargarine was not posing in every grocery and on every breakfast table as "prime dairy butter," but was, as it ought to be, made and sold to the consumer for what it really is, oleomargarine, and the distinct proposition was submitted to this House to tax that industry out of existence because it was a competitor of the dairyman, it would not receive 25 votes.

A MEMBER. Not one, sir.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not one, says my friend. And probably he is right.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the palpable purpose of this bill, incidental to the revenue, is not to destroy the oleomargarine industry as an honest competitor of the butter industry, but to prevent the former from destroying the latter industry by a competition which is not only dishonest and a fraud upon its competitor, but is an outrage upon the consumers who purchase in the open market.

When gentlemen say the bill is unconstitutional by reason of this most desirable result, incidental to the raising of the revenue, I answer that if in addition to the revenue this greater and even more desirable benefit to the country results I am gratified that it is so, since it so seldom occurs that taxation carries with it such manifest blessings.

If what a large number of the friends of this bill assert is true with reference to the character and quality of this competitor of butter, the tax proposed by the terms of the bill is inexcusably high. My honored friend from Illinois [Mr. HITT] has said that oleomargarine is a noxious compound, unclean and unhealthy. I do not know that it is noxious and unclean, but he says this noxious compound would be rejected by every man, by every consumer, if he knew it was oleomargarine and not butter. Judging from my own experience and observation, what the gentleman says in regard to consumers is largely true, that most persons who purchase oleomargarine for consumption at home buy it in the firm belief that they are purchasing butter. The plain and obvious corollary to this is, that the dairyman, the butter industry, needs no other or further protection than is afforded by compelling the manufacturers and dealers in oleomargarine to make it and sell it to consumers only for what it really is. Butter will then have a clear field. Butter will from choice remain in its own domain, while oleomargarine will be kept on its reservation by the provisions of this bill. [Applause.] Then, since for no purpose that ought to find favor with this House is the enormous tax proposed required, why is it proposed, the requirements of the revenue being met by a small tax? The fraud being rendered impossible by a small tax, the high rates named in this bill can not be defended. What is the end sought and which finds such general favor in this House? Simply that this compound shall not steal the livery of butter and in that well-known garb defraud the dairyman and deceive and impose upon the unsuspecting purchasers who are consumers. We simply insist it shall strip off its borrowed garment and stand before the world for what it is, oleomargarine.

You tax the manufacturer of whisky only a hundred or a hundred and fifty dollars, and retail dealers of whisky only $25.

Then why make this tax four or five hundred per cent. higher? Now, sir, if, as some of my constituents who are good and worthy men allege, oleomargarine is clean, is nourishing and healthful food, wholesome and cheap, we have no right to impose needless burdens upon its production. Those who want it have a right to purchase it, and it is fortunate if it can be produced so cheap as to be within the reach of all. This burden is placed upon it, in other words the revenue is laid upon it, because it has placed itself under the ban. For some reason it is ashamed to appear under its own name. This bill, modified as proposed, and as will be proposed, tears off the mask, and it becomes impossible for oleomargarine to be made or sold as butter or to enter the lists again as a fraudulent competitor of the products of the dairy. To go further and impose a tax to destroy the industry merely because oleomargarine can be used in place of butter is utterly indefensible, and ought not to find a moment's favor in this House. Tax oleomargarine, not because it is a competitor of butter, but because it is a fraudulent and pretentious counterfeit of butter, and because we can while raising revenue punish and in fact prohibit such counterfeiting. But if the counterfeit unmasked proves to be the equal in point of merit of the butter, why let it circulate and be of "sufficient volume to meet the wants of trade?"

Mr. MILLIKEN. What is the tax on whisky per gallon?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Ninety cents; but the cases are not parallel.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I hope by unanimous consent a few minutes longer will be allowed to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain a motion for unanimous consent. By order of the House all general debate had been limited to ten minutes.

The question recurred on Mr. DANIEL'S amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. DANIEL. I move to strike out the last word of the pending paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order on this paragraph.

Mr. DANIEL. The vote has not been taken on the second amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order, as the committee has not reached that part of the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I move to strike out "$480" and insert "$200."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I rise to speak to the paragraph when I can be allowed to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order on this paragraph.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it in order to move an amendment to the next paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Not now.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I move an amendment to section 3, line 7, to strike out the words "in original manufacturers' packages," and insert in lieu thereof the words "in larger quantities than 10 pounds at any one time." I wish I could have two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And no California or foreign oranges shall be offered for sale in any market or store in this country until the dealer in said oranges shall have paid the license tax prescribed in this section, and each box or package of California or foreign oranges shall have tax-paid stamps affixed thereto at the rate of 1 cent for each orange contained therein.

[Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order——

Mr. FINDLAY. I offer this as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which is the pending amendment.

Mr. FINDLAY. I submit this as a substitute and ask to have it read.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I would like to hear the ruling of the Chair again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I would like to be heard upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then I withdraw the amendment to offer it at another time.

The CHAIRMAN. It is withdrawn. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINDLAY. I now ask that the substitute which I send up be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

Manufacturers of glass eggs shall pay $1,000, and every person who manufactures or procures to be manufactured glass eggs shall be deemed a manufacturer of glass eggs. [Laughter.] Wholesale dealers in glass eggs shall pay $1,500 a week. Every person who sells——

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting the reading). This amendment is not in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINDLAY. Let the amendment be read; how does the Chair know?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests members to remember that we are now in the transaction of the legislative business of the country; and the Chair will entertain all motions relating to the legitimate business pending before the House. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], who has submitted a proper amendment, which will be again read.

Mr. FINDLAY. But I certainly have the right to have my amendment read; because there may be a point of order raised against it, and we can not discuss the point of order understandingly upon the amendment until we know what it contains. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has heard sufficient to decide that it is not an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], which opinion the Chair would submit to the gentleman from Maryland for his own judgment and approval.

Mr. FINDLAY. But I submit to the Chair that this is a substitute which I propose for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. FINDLAY. Upon that I wish to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order; and the Clerk will again report the pending amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. After the Clerk has reported the pending amendment the Chair will hear the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the seventh line the words "in the original manufacturers' packages" and insert in lieu thereof the words:
"In larger quantities than 10 pounds at any one time."

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Read the paragraph as it will stand if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

So that it will read:
"Every person who sells or offers for sale oleomargarine in larger quantities than 10 pounds at any one time shall be deemed a wholesale dealer in oleomargarine."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia rises to a parliamentary inquiry and will now submit it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to ask whether the Chair could of its own motion rule an amendment out as not being in order, or whether the Chair should wait for the point of order to be made against such amendment before the ruling can be made?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will always endeavor to protect the integrity of the business of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to another parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Under what rule of procedure is the Chair made the judge of the integrity of the business of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is required to see that the rules of the House in the committee are enforced.

Mr. HAMMOND. The question I put is, What is the authority for the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The general-welfare clause of the Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The general principles of parliamentary law would justify the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will refer the gentleman to the rule.

Mr. HAMMOND. I would be glad to have it read, or any rule that authorizes the Chair to judge of the integrity of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. FINDLAY. I make the point that we can not discuss any question of order until the amendment is read.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The House has a right to vote upon the decision of the Chair; and how can that be done until we know what the Chair decides upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the second clause of the first rule of the House, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read, as follows:

He shall preserve order——

Mr. VAN EATON. I rise to a question of order. You can not hear anything that is being read; and I would like to be informed as to what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and the Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. He shall preserve order and decorum, and in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries, or in the lobby, may cause the same to be cleared.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Chairman, we are not in the gallery. [Laughter.] We are on the floor of the House; nor are we in the lobby. [Renewed laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to preserve order on the floor of the House also.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia rises to another parliamentary inquiry and will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is that the only rule the Chair can find for his recent decision?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state in response to the gentleman from Georgia that he has indulged gentlemen in their levity in regard to this bill and in the discussion; but now desires to enforce the rules of the House, which require that each amendment offered shall be germane to the subject-matter under consideration and that the committee shall proceed in order with the transaction of the public business. [Loud applause.]

Mr. VAN EATON. Then I move that the galleries be cleared, that we may proceed in order, and that the lobby also be cleared. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to know if the members of the House have not a right to pass upon an appeal from a decision of the Chair?

Several MEMBERS. "Of course."

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Then I want to know further how any member of this House can pass upon the judgment of the Chair when the Chair refuses to allow the question he decides upon to be submitted to the committee?

Mr. HENLEY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I therefore demand the reading of that amendment which was excluded by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is willing to entertain all appeals that are made from his decisions.

Mr. RANDALL. No appeal is made from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 14, section 3, the following:
"All manufacturers of incubators shall pay a tax or license of $10,000; and on every chicken hatched by artificial means there shall be imposed a tax of $2 for roosters and $1 for pullets, in order that the great American hen may be properly protected."

[Laughter.]

Mr. HAMMOND. I make the point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. STRUBLE. Was the point of order made on the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not entertain that amendment.

Mr. VAN EATON. I desire to debate the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] to move an amendment.

Mr. VAN EATON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I am in favor of protecting the great American hen and want to debate the question. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized for debate when debate is in order. Debate is not now in order.

Mr. VAN EATON. Did not the Chair rule the amendment out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair presumed that it was not before the committee, but that the gentleman from New York had it read as a part of his remarks. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph the following:
"Provided, That the tax imposed by or the limitations of manufacture or sale contemplated by this act shall not be imposed upon or apply to any of the product or manufactures obtained from cotton-seed or articles the principal ingredient of which is the product of cotton-seed."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 125.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 136, noes 25.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, and Mr. TILLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 35 members voting therefor; and Mr. HATCH, and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 147, noes 25.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. WELLBORN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays and demand the previous question.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. And pending that motion, I move that when the House does adjourn it be to meet on Saturday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MILLS. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 127.

Mr. MILLS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, 44 members voting therefor; and Mr. MILLS and Mr. HATCH were appointed.

Before the count was completed the hour of 5 o'clock arrived, and the Speaker pro tempore declared the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 28, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GIBSON. I present a memorial in the form of a concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, relative to the establishment of a navy-yard on the Mississippi River near the city of New Orleans, just below Algiers.

I wish to say that about eight years ago I introduced a bill while a member of the House of Representatives for the establishment of such a navy-yard, and I have continued at every session of Congress since to offer such a bill, for the reason that about the year 1856 the Government of the United States purchased land within the limits of the city of New Orleans near Algiers for the establishment of a navy-yard. It is highly important that some such establishment should be made there, because when most of the navy-yards in this country were established iron rifled cannon, long-range guns, had not been invented, and now a hostile fleet would be able to anchor near several of our navy-yards and destroy them. Iron and steel hulls were not then invented, which rapidly deteriorate in salt water, while in fresh water they can be preserved with but little expense and no hazard.

New Orleans is the gateway of the valley of the Mississippi River, at which stores of all kinds, wood and coal and iron, all materials for the construction of vessels, could be furnished from the West, together with skilled labor and perfect security from any sort of disturbance from any foreign foe. That place is not only the best for supplies of every kind in material and men, but in a strategic point of view necessary not only to the defense of the Mississippi Valley—the heart of the country—but also to command the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of John P. Kinard, a citizen of Newberry, S. C., praying Congress to reimburse him for losses sustained and damages inflicted by United States soldiers since the war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask leave to present a telegram which I have received from the Merchants' Exchange of the city of Charleston, and, as it expresses so well my views upon the subject of which it treats, I shall read it. The telegram is as follows:

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 27, 1886.

The committee appointed by the Merchants' Exchange to investigate the important subject of the proposed dairy legislation in Congress would respectfully report: Your committee have as carefully as they were able examined this question in all its bearings and recommend the following action by the exchange:

Whereas efforts are now being made to secure enactment by Congress under bills pending providing for imposing a special tax of 10 cents per pound upon the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine, with additional restrictions in the form of heavy license assessments against dealers in these articles and the placing of their production and sale under charge of the Internal Revenue Department; and

Whereas it has been well and clearly shown that these products are proper ones for food purposes, and their manufacture has proven to be a great public convenience, as well as furnishing an important acquisition to the volume of commercial operations, thus promotive of the business interests of a large number of merchants throughout the country, as well as conferring incalculable benefits upon consumers: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Merchants' Exchange of Charleston, S. C., That it would be against sound public policy to carry out the proposed legislation, calculated to operate against the oleomargarine and butterine industries; and that as these articles are manifestly proper ones to be manufactured and sold for food purposes, any special tax would be an unjustifiable discrimination against legitimate domestic industry and should not be imposed.

Resolved, That all imitation butter products should be sold on their merits, and that measures providing against their being offered for sale as ordinary butter should be enacted and enforced by State or local authority.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE W. BELL, Secretary.

I move the reference of the telegram to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, where the question to which it relates is being considered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by the Elgin (Ill.) Board of Trade, representing the creamery and farming interests of Illinois and Wisconsin, in favor of the passage of the bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of imitations of butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of Hiram H. Kingsbury, late a private in Company D, Eighth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, praying that his name be placed on the pension-roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, presented the petition of William L. Amoss and other citizens of Fallston, Md., praying for the passage of the bill placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and taxing them 10 cents per pound; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of Knights of Labor of Washington, D. C., praying for the passage of the bill to provide for leaves of absence to naval employés, and other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of farmers, mechanics, and dealers of Greenville and Mason, in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the passage of the bill concerning oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VANCE presented a petition of colored citizens of North Carolina, praying for aid to emigrate to Liberia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DAWES presented a resolution adopted by the New England Shoe and Leather Association, favoring the issue of small bills; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Herman L. Allen and other farmers of Windsor, Mass., praying for legislation to protect the dairy interest against imitations of butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Whatcom County, Washington Territory, praying for the annulment of an act of the Legislative Assembly of that Territory providing for the permanent location and construction of a territorial penitentiary at Walla Walla, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 600) for the relief of the assignees of Addison C. Fletcher, moved its indefinite postponement, which was agreed to; and he submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 2560) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk, and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. 584) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship Railway Company, and for other purposes, heretofore reported by that committee.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1580) for the relief of Maj. James Belger, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2545) to provide for the confinement of inebriates in the Government Hospital for the Insane, reported it with amendments.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2122) for the relief of John P. Walworth, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jacob Fritz, of Oregon, claiming certain lands now included in the Fort Dalles military reservation, Oregon, reported adversely thereon; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

COURT-HOUSE IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6965) to authorize Columbia County, in Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house, instruct me to report it favorably, and I submit a written report.

There are reasons why this bill should be passed at once, and I ask for its immediate consideration. I ask for the reading of the bill and the report, which are brief, for information. I think there will be no objection to the bill after they are read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the county of Columbia, in Washington Territory, to issue its bonds, payable in not less than five nor more than fifteen years, at 8 per cent. per annum, to the amount of $40,000, for the purpose of building a county court-house, in accordance with the vote of the people of the county at the general election held in November, 1884.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted this day by Mr. PLATT:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 6965, being an act to authorize Columbia County, in Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house, having considered the same make the following report:

Section 1924 of the Revised Statutes has the following provison, namely:

"In addition to the restrictions upon the legislative power of the Territories contained in the preceding chapter, section 1851, the Legislative Assembly of Washington shall have no power to incorporate a bank or any institution with banking powers, or to borrow money in the name of the Territory, or to pledge the faith of the people of the same for any loan whatever, directly or indirectly. Nor shall the Legislative Assembly authorize the issue of any obligation, scrip, or evidence of debt, by the Territory, in any mode or manner whatever, except certificates for service to the Territory."

Such being the law the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory holds that it has no right or power to authorize a county, nor the Territory, to borrow money and issue bonds for any purpose whatever. And your committee, without passing upon the question of whether the Territorial Legislature is precluded by the statute from authorizing a county to borrow money and issue its obligation for necessary county expenditures, is clearly of the opinion that it would be unwise for it to attempt to confer any such authority upon a county.

Columbia County was duly organized in the year 1875 and now is, and for some years has been, paying rent for its court-house and public offices in a sum equal to 8 per cent. per annum on $40,000. At the general election in the year 1884 a vote was taken in said county upon the proposition to build a court-house at a cost not to exceed $40,000, the result of which was as follows:

For the building of such court-house, 986 votes.

Against building of such court-house, 588 votes.

Said county desires to issue bonds and build a court-house rather than to burden the people with an increased tax sufficient to raise the sum required.

The total assessed value of the property of the county in the year 1885 was $2,569,380; made up of real estate, $1,514,900; personal property, $1,054,480.

The county memorialized the Territorial Legislature for authority to issue such bonds, and the Legislature, declining to act thereon, has memorialized Congress to pass the legislation necessary to carry the wish of the county into effect.

The population and assessable property of the district is rapidly increasing.

The Territorial Delegate strongly indorses the passage of the act, and your committee recommend the same.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISSUE OF A DUPLICATE CHECK.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2395) to authorize J. G. C. Lee, a major and quartermaster in the United States Army, to issue a duplicate check, and the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York to pay the same, to report it favorably without amendment.

The bill is very brief, and we have the assurance of the Secretary of the Treasury that it is all right. The reason for the passage of the bill is that under the existing law only a check of $2,500 can be duplicated upon its loss. This happens to be over $2,500, being $2,679.53. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSURANCE COMPANIES IN DAKOTA.

Mr. HARRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Territories to report favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies, and for other purposes, and to authorize and empower the Legislative Assembly of said Territory to pass such general laws.

I ask leave to state that the situation of that Territory is one very urgently requiring such legislation. The Legislative Assembly some years ago, assuming that they had power to charter insurance companies, passed a general law, and several insurance companies having a large capital were formed—one of them having as much as three millions of insurance—and have been in operation in that Territory. It is now believed that the legislation is inoperative for want of authority from Congress. This is a bill simply to legalize the acts organizing those companies. As amended it consists of a single section, and unless there is objection I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Territories was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories shall have power to provide by general laws for the incorporation of companies for insuring against loss by fire, lightning, hail, and tornadoes, and also of life-insurance companies.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state that this provision, giving the other Territories authority, is incorporated in another bill, and therefore we have stricken it out here.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read now as amended. It is a short bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all general laws heretofore enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota providing for the incorporation of insurance companies are hereby legalized and made valid, and are declared to have the same force and effect as if the said Legislative Assembly had had full power and authority to enact the same; and all insurance companies incorporated under said laws and in accordance therewith are hereby declared to have been legally incorporated.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies, and for other purposes."

Mr. HARRISON. I desire in that connection to move for a committee of conference on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HARRISON, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. GRAY were appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CALL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2561) for the relief of Mrs. Catharine Odlum; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2562) granting a pension to Henry F. Kaiser; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2563) granting a pension to Lyman H. Walker; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2564) granting a pension to Eleanor S. Lawson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2565) for the relief of the legal representatives of William Johonnot, Joseph Torrey, and Thomas Blackwill, respectively; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2566) for the relief of George F. Rider; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2567) granting a pension to Michael Lane; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 2568) for the relief of James C. Rudd; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2569) granting a pension to Helen H. Harrell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. STANFORD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the bill (S. 2072, Forty-seventh Congress) for the further protection of public property from fire, &c., in various public buildings in the District of Columbia be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORT ON EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the Senate Executive Document No. 85, "A report on education in Alaska," 6,000 additional copies be printed; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for distribution under the direction of the Commissioner of Education.

INDIAN TRADERSHIPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair lays before the Senate a series of resolutions which come over under objection.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions submitted yesterday by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, as follows:

Whereas it is stated in the matter of the administration of the powers and duties of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in respect of the appointment of Indian traders acts have been done, or permitted to be done, in disregard of law and the rights and proper interests of citizens: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and hereby is, directed to investigate the subject of the appointment of such traders, the granting of licenses to them, and the refusal to extend such licenses to persons engaged as such traders, and the methods which have been practiced in that regard since the month of April, 1885, and the reasons and influences affecting the several instances of such granting or refusing of such licenses, to whom licenses have been granted since said date and to whom refused, why granted and why refused, and whether or not any person to whom a license has been so granted has been guilty of conduct or practices prejudicial to the good repute of the public service; and, if so, in what respect, and whether or not the same have come to the knowledge of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Resolved, That in pursuing the said investigation the said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, administer the necessary oaths, and employ a stenographer should it deem it necessary so to do; and such expense as may result from said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the committee is further instructed to report a bill or bills for such legislation as the investigation may disclose to be necessary and proper in the premises.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I do not know that I desire to interfere, but the resolutions would impose upon the Committee on Indian Affairs a very serious duty, and a duty which I should like very much in behalf of the committee to be relieved from.

I wish to say a few words in reference to the necessity of it and to inquire of the mover of the resolutions if he contemplates an investigation here in Washington during the session. If it does, it is altogether impracticable, and must be attended with very great expense, for the transactions alluded to, if they exist at all, have existed in the Indian Territory at a very great distance, and witnesses called from the Territory will be brought here at very great expense. It must be a considerable time before they can reach here, and they will come in the midst of the hurry and whirl of the last days of the session. If there is a need (on which I do not speak) of an investigation of such a kind as this, it should be taken at the leisure of a committee on the spot, where it can be done at much less expense and with much greater prospect of a thorough investigation. Whether the Committee on Indian Affairs are going to be so situated as to make that possible in the vacation or not, I have no knowledge.

The whole subject of Indian traders needs revision. The idea that no man can trade with an Indian except by a license from the Government is fast passing away, if it has not already disappeared. It is a reproach to the statute-book of the United States that there stands on it to-day an enactment which relieves any white man from the slightest obligation of keeping any contract he makes with an Indian. There stands on the statute-book to-day an enactment that no white man is under the slightest obligation to keep his contract with an Indian.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to see that statute.

Mr. DAWES. You have only to look in the statutes to see that contracts made——

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs point it out and read it in the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. Contracts made by Indians with white men are not valid unless they are approved by the Secretary of the Interior. That is the enactment upon the statute-book, and that means this—the English of it is what I state—it relieves every white man from keeping his contract with an Indian, unless the Interior Department says he shall do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Does it not relieve the Indian also?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly, it relieves everybody, but it relieves the white man who knows what his contract is from performing a contract with an Indian. When it was enacted it was supposed that the Indian was incapable of making a contract. It was made in the interest of the Indian, it was supposed, because he was what was called the ward of the nation, and therefore all contracts with him unless approved by the Interior Department are void. He is put at the mercy of the white man; and now, without any reference to this allegation, he is confined in all his dealings with white men on his reservation for the necessaries of life to trade with some particular man who is licensed by the Interior Department. That condition of things, that stage in the Indian's life has passed away, and I trust that it is to disappear entirely.

I have nothing to say about whether, while the system is existing law, anything wrong has been done under it. I only say that the whole system ought to go by the board; and when a man makes a contract with an Indian, whether it has the approval of the Interior Department or not, he should at least be held by the law of the land to perform his contract. In every State of the Union, where a man makes a contract with a minor, it is the minor and not the adult who shall say whether the contract shall be kept or not.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator how he would enforce that contract under existing law, in what court, in what tribunal, as the law now stands, unless the entire law relating to the Indians is repealed?

Mr. DAWES. Repeal the law and the contract between a white man and an Indian will stand as any other contract.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not understand before what tribunal a contract of that kind could be enforced.

Mr. DAWES. I trust that if the Senator will wait until the day after to-morrow he will find that a bill will have passed another branch, which has passed this without opposition, that will put every Indian in this land who transacts business with white men as white men transact business, giving him a position in the courts of the country, State and United States, to enforce every contract made with him; and it is quite time that was done.

Mr. BUTLER. I am delighted to hear that.

Mr. DAWES. I think we shall be gratified. To-day and to-morrow are assigned for that kind of business in another branch, and a bill is pending there which has gone through this body without any opposition, upon full discussion, which has that effect.

The Indian is to be treated now at least as competent to say whether a contract made by a white man with him shall be enforced or not. It is, I repeat, a reproach to the statute-books of the United States that it is left for the white man himself to say whether he will keep his own contract with an Indian.

It is also a reproach that all the Indians are obliged to trade with some particular man licensed by the Interior Department, and further that that man shall not have any Indian blood in him. We undertook to enact a few years ago that a half-breed might open a store on a reservation, and that was defeated; so that the white man must not only be licensed by the Interior Department, but he has got to prove that he has not any Indian blood in him or he can not enjoy the exclusive monopoly of opening a store for the ordinary necessaries of life upon an Indian reservation. It naturally leads to suggestions of evil practices such as are contained in the pending resolutions.

I embrace this opportunity to make these statements in advance and without reference to the suggestions which are made in the resolutions. I renew now the suggestion to the Senator from Iowa that he had better consider how the investigation is to be carried on, if he feels that existing facts justify or require such an investigation.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the resolutions be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK read the resolutions.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest objection to the fullest investigation into the matters stated in the resolutions, but it occurs to me, from the casual reading of them, that they embrace questions which should be investigated by the committee before the adoption of the resolutions. I therefore move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to refer the resolutions to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VEST. I wish to understand the position of the Senator from Massachusetts? These resolutions are simply intended to investigate the present condition of the Indian Bureau as to the appointments of Indian traders. They do not begin to reach the great overwhelming evil which has existed for years. I want to make one remark in regard to the appointment of Indian traders, and I say it without reference to the appointments under the present administration. I have no sort of partisan feeling in regard to it; the same abuses existed under a Republican administration of the Government as exist now, and they are inherent.

My colleague asked the Senator from Massachusetts to point to a statute which put the Indian absolutely at the mercy of the white man who goes in and proposes to trade.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to read the statute.

Mr. VEST. I have it before me, but the Senator can read it.

Mr. DAWES. This is it:

SEC. 2103. No agreement shall be made by any person with any tribe of Indians, or individual Indians not citizens of the United States, for the payment or delivery of any money or other thing of value, in present or in prospective, or for the granting or procuring any privilege to him, or any other person in consideration of services for said Indians relative to their lands, or to any claims growing out of, or in reference to annuities, installments, or other moneys, claims, demands, or thing, under laws or treaties with the United States, or official acts of any officers thereof, or in any way connected with or due from the United States, unless such contract or agreement be executed and approved as follows.

There are six conditions, and one of them is:

Second. It shall be executed before a judge of a court of record and bear the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs indorsed upon it.

Mr. VEST. That is the spirit of the whole system of intercourse laws to be found on the statute-book of the United States. There is another section which more fully illustrates the truth of what the Senator from Massachusetts said.

We are pretending—and I use the term with a knowledge of its full significance—we are pretending from year to year to elevate the Indian, to bring him nearer to civilization, to teach him our methods, our laws, our language, and our religion, and yet we have a system on the statute-book which in every word and line breathes the idea that the Indian belongs to an inferior and a degraded civilization, if you may term it civilization at all; that he has no legal existence except by permission of the Government; that he can not trade, can not barter, can not avail himself of the protection of the law, and he is circumscribed and cut off from the civilization of the white man as by a Chinese wall utterly inaccessible. Now let the Senate listen to section 2135 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 2135. Every person, other than an Indian, who, within the Indian country, purchases or receives of any Indian, in the way of barter, trade, or pledge, a gun, trap, or other article commonly used in hunting, any instrument of husbandry, or cooking utensils of the kind commonly obtained by the Indians in their intercourse with the white people, or any article of clothing, except skins or furs, shall be liable to a penalty of $50.

In other words he can not own property in any way. The ordinary privileges of a human being are taken away from him; practically he ought to be killed, as is the average opinion of the West on that subject. Our legislation absolutely prohibits him from making one single step toward the sunlight of civilization.

But I have something else to say on this subject which I think is exactly pertinent to the resolutions offered by the Senator from Iowa. The whole system of Indian traderships is based upon the idea of making money for the trader without regard to the interest of the Indian at all. If these laws amount to anything they should amount to this, that traderships should be established in the vicinity of Indians or upon their reservations, which should give them the largest opportunity to obtain useful and cheap merchandise at the lowest price.

Instead of that, the whole object seems to be to put just as many traders there as can live on the Indians to the fullest extent and make all the money they can. I say this without any personal allusion to the present incumbent of the Indian Commissionership, who is a perfectly honest and reputable gentleman as I know, and as pure a man (and I have known him for twenty-five years) as lives in the United States, but I speak now of the system; and I say it has degenerated into a system of favoritism and a scramble from one session of Congress to another among Senators and Representatives as to who shall procure for his constituents the opportunity to make money out of the Indians. Applications are made from one day to another by Senators and members to have traderships discontinued for the purpose of making a monopoly in the Indian tribes to put money into the pockets of the favorites of public men in both Houses of Congress. It is a great outrage; it is a shame; and the only wonder to me is that the Indians advance at all. The great wonder to me, after being in the Indian country, visiting it and seeing this system in operation as I have seen it for the last three years in Montana and Idaho, is that the Indians do not become desperate and go upon the war-path and seek extermination rather than exist under the present system. They are systematically robbed.

We give an agent $900 to $1,200 a year, and we expect a man of ability, respectability, and business talents to turn his back upon civilization and go out and live with these savages, and if he is humane enough to take his family with him they are to subsist among them at $900 a year. I believe we expect to get the average Christian virtues in a soldier at $13 a month; and we expect to get in an Indian agent business capacity, integrity, and good executive ability for a pittance such as we do not give to the lowest clerk in any of our Departments.

I am heartily in favor of this or any other resolution in the direction of inquiry and reform. I believe, however, my friend from Iowa, if he will permit the suggestion, ought to ask for a special committee. The inquiry ought not to be sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Let it be a special committee, appointed with power to visit these tribes, examine into this system, send for persons and papers, and make a complete report to Congress, and that report may point in the direction which I hope Congress will soon take.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I have no personal knowledge——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will give me a chance before he makes his remarks I should like to call attention to the statute.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will only occupy a minute.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I do not intend to make a speech or take much of the time of the Senate this morning on the question suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. I propose to do that before this session adjourns, but not to-day. I propose to take time to present to the Senate some of the facts in connection with the intercourse of the whites and the Indians within the last few years, to show what I think are the defects in the statutes and the system of Indian administration as it has existed for many years and now exists.

The statute under which the traders are provided for is:

SEC. 2128. Any loyal person, a citizen of the United States, of good moral character, shall be permitted to trade with any Indian tribe upon giving bond to the United States.

And that nobody shall trade except such parties as are mentioned in the statute, those who have given bond and received their commission from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. For a number of years it was the policy to license one trader in an Indian reservation and only one. Then the Department fixed the prices at which he should sell his goods, but it did not make any difference about that; nobody supposed he ever sold goods at the schedule prices fixed, which were to be posted up somewhere in the store for the benefit of the Indians. The posted schedule was just about as valuable to the Indian as the notice is in the parks here to the dogs, that dogs must keep off the grass. The Indians knew just as much about the schedule; it was a dead letter and amounted to nothing.

Recently, within the last few years, the policy has grown up of giving at least two traders to every considerable tribe, and perhaps in some of them even more than that number. It was supposed that might bring about a little competition. Whether it has had that result or not I do not know. It may have brought about combination. All these people are away off beyond the reach of the Commissioner. I do not care how able the Commissioner may be or how honest he may be, under our present system of Indian intercourse it is impossible that there should not be the greatest abuses. I know of no more abuses under the existing administration than heretofore. I have heard of no complaint that I recollect now. It is the system that is complained of.

We have also a provision in the statutes, which I will not stop to read, that no Indian shall be allowed to sell a yoke of cattle or a horse or anything else to a white man. Some of the Indians raise cattle. The price must be fixed by their agent, who alone is authorized to allow them to sell.

I believe the system is an absolutely bad one; and yet just so long as we continue the system of isolating these people just so long, as was suggested by the Senator from Missouri, this bad system will exist. It is utterly impossible to send any man out there and expect him to go there and not be tempted to charge extortionate prices and sell inferior goods. I do not care what administration you have, there will be just cause of complaint on the part of the Indians. Whether it is any greater now than at any other time I do not know and do not mean to say. I only mean to say that until we have adopted a system allowing the Indian to act for himself, and recognizing the fact that the Indian is a man, these evils will continue; and you may have the best man that God ever made as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and you may have the best man that ever was made agent, and the same trouble will exist. The trouble is in the system, and not in the man who administers the law. It is the law itself, and not the administration of the law, of which complaint ought to be made.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I have no personal knowledge of the facts the alleged existence of which induced me to submit these resolutions to the Senate, but I have had placed in my hands a statement in writing concerning various transactions in connection with this branch of the Indian service. It was my purpose, if the resolution should be adopted by the Senate, to hand this statement over to the chairman of the committee and let the committee consider it.

I have not the slightest objection to the reference of these resolutions and the entire subject to the Committee on Indian Affairs for consideration, that they may consider it in connection with the statement in writing which has been submitted to me; but I am satisfied that if the statements made have any foundation whatever to support them the subject ought to be investigated. Whether it shall be done by the Committee on Indian Affairs during the present session of Congress, or whether it shall be authorized to conduct the investigation during the recess, I have no concern whatever. I am entirely willing that the resolutions and the entire subject shall go to the committee for its consideration and for such report as it may deem proper to make to the Senate. I want the subject considered somewhere, and action taken if it is deemed proper.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the resolutions will not be referred to the committee, because the committee can have no ground upon which to base a report beyond the ground which the Senator himself states to the Senate he has, unless they go themselves in advance into a sort of grand-jury investigation to ascertain whether there is any ground for it.

I want, before I go further, to indorse what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has said in regard to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I think I have known him longer than the Senator has, and I take great pleasure on all occasions in indorsing everything that has been said in reference to his personal integrity and personal desire to do the best possible for the Indians, as has been stated by the Senator from Missouri. Therefore what I say in this matter can possibly have no reference to him personally.

If this matter is referred to the committee to consider whether an investigation ought to be had or not, they must do one of two things, take the statement which the Senator from Iowa holds in his hand justifying him in presenting the resolutions, or go into an investigation in advance. They can not go into the investigation in advance; and therefore if the Senate think that the statement of the Senator from Iowa justifies an investigation, it is only for the Senate to say how it shall be conducted. That they can say this minute just as well as after a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I trust the Senate will not refer the resolutions to that committee merely to bring them back here for them to restate what the Senator from Iowa states, that if there be any foundation for the statements he has made there ought to be this investigation.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. To say the least, they imply the possibility if not the probability of some error in the administration of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I desire to say for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that if there be a doubt upon that question of the propriety of the administration of that office, so far from shrinking he would invite and insist upon the most rigid scrutiny, the broadest and most thorough investigation of every question pertaining to the administration of that office.

I therefore desire that the resolutions shall be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs in order that that committee may put it in such shape as will clothe the committee of investigation with the amplest powers not only to investigate the administration of this office for the last twelve or fifteen months, but as far back as in its opinion the investigation may be necessary to enable the committee to understand what has been the practice of the Indian Bureau under the statutes as they now exist, and necessary to the perfection of a system to be reported by the committee so far as the committee may think legislation necessary to regulate and cure certain evils that seem to be inherent in the system itself as now regulated by law.

For these reasons I desire that the resolutions shall go to the committee and that that committee shall inquire and report the necessity for investigation, the scope of the investigation, the full extent to which the investigation shall be carried in the past as well as up to the present time.

Mr. DAWES. The reason as stated by the Senator from Tennessee renders it altogether unnecessary that the resolutions should go to the committee. I assumed in the outset that the position of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs touching this matter would be precisely what the Senator suggests; and being that, when the Senator from Iowa states that he has that which justifies him in bringing before the Senate these statements, it becomes necessary to meet what the honor of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs would require, that the investigation should proceed; and it is not necessary to have the committee pass on that question. It is due to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that it should not go to the Committee on Indian Affairs to report whether there is ground for an investigation or not—a report which they can not make justly and fairly to him until they have gone to the bottom of it.

A Senator comes up here and makes a statement upon what he deems to be sufficient ground; the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as an honorable man courts the inquiry, and then you refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire whether there is ground for it or not before going into the investigation. It is unjust to him as well as to the Senate that it should go there for any such preliminary examination as is suggested. It should go to that or some other committee clothed with power when they come before the Senate to come before the Senate with the whole case or they should not come before the Senate at all.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me I desire to suggest that the chief reason which controls me in desiring the resolutions to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs is to have the committee put the resolutions in such shape as will clothe the investigating committee with the fullest and amplest power not simply to investigate the administration of the office for a few months, but to investigate the administration as far back as may be deemed necessary, and the extent to which legislation may be necessary to correct any evils which may be found to exist in the laws regulating the same.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Tennessee in the minute he has been talking could put the proposition in that shape. While he has been talking the known facility of the Senator with the pen could put it in just that shape now, without sending it to the committee to come forward and say, "We have reason to believe there are serious grounds of accusation against the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Mr. HARRIS. The information of the Senator from Tennessee in respect to Indian affairs does not induce him to believe that he could put a resolution in shape giving the scope and the precise powers necessary to investigate the Indian question in all the ramifications that investigation may possibly be necessary from the remarks of members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, not in respect to the administration of this particular Commissioner, but in respect to the general Indian policy of the Government as now regulated by statute, and if investigation is to proceed at all, I think it should extend to those subjects that would lead to the development of whatever evils there may be inherent in the Indian policy and in the system as it exists in the statutes of to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. I moved the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Indian Affairs because they seemed to be so far-reaching in their scope as to be worthy of some preliminary investigation by a committee of this body.

It is not simply a question of inquiry. The resolutions, as I understand, are a positive mandate to the Committee on Indian Affairs to make an investigation upon a supposed condition of affairs of which I have no knowledge, I am very frank to say, and I do not suppose there are a dozen Senators on this floor who have sufficient information to enable them to vote intelligently on the resolutions. Hence it was I moved their reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which is supposed to be familiar with the whole subject, and if any investigation is deemed to be necessary they can order it. If on the other hand it be held unnecessary they can so report.

I have not the slightest desire to circumscribe the scope of this proposed investigation in the slightest degree. On the contrary, I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that it is due to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that an investigation should be had fully and completely. If we were simply asked to adopt a resolution of inquiry directed to the Secretary of the Interior or to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I should have no hesitation about voting for its passage; but these resolutions in terms direct the committee to make an investigation upon a supposed condition, true or untrue; and I am not prepared to say that it is true. The Senator who submits the resolutions says he is not prepared to say that it is true. It seems to me the resolutions should not be passed in an inconsiderate kind of way. They ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, who can report in forty-eight hours whether they ought to pass or not in their present shape, and if not in their present shape, in what shape should they pass if at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the resolutions to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

RESTORATION OF NAVAL CADETS.

Mr. DOLPH. If the morning business is over, I move to take up for present consideration Senate bill 2172, Order of Business 706.

Mr. BUTLER. A few days ago I gave notice that I should ask the Senate to consider this morning the bill (S. 371) limiting a portion of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes." After conference with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] I have concluded not to do so; but I give notice now that on Tuesday next after the routine morning business I shall ask the Senate to consider that bill. Meantime several Senators who desire more information about it can have an opportunity of reading the report.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I renew the motion to take up for present consideration Senate bill No. 2172.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VAN WYCK.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to vote either way on that amendment, and I move to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. BUTLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Several SENATORS. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the first section, line 10, after the word "main," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "mountains," in line 14, as follows:

Line which extends from Wallula Junction, in Washington Territory, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, except such of said lands as appertain to and are conterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And branch lines where the railroad required by said act has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act.

So as to make the section read:

That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of its main and branch lines where the railroad required by said act has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act be, and the same are hereby, resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain, and made subject to disposition and settlement under the general laws relating to the public lands.

Mr. VEST. It is contended on the part of some respectable lawyers that the property which was granted to the railroad company has already been forfeited, and that a forfeiture took place at the time the company failed to comply with the terms of the grant, which was some years ago. Now, if this amendment prevails it does away with that contention, because the forfeiture only takes place as from the time of the passage of the act. In other words, it yields up the ground taken by many good lawyers to the effect that this forfeiture took effect at the termination of the time limited in the original grant for the completion of the road. The company was to finish the road by a certain time, the 4th of July, 1879. They did not comply with the terms of the grant, did not finish the road.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the motion to lay on the table debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind the Senator from Missouri that the motion to lay on the table is not debatable. The yeas and nays have been ordered on that motion.

Mr. VEST. I have said all I wish to say—that this amendment extends the time of forfeiture.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. BROWN'S name was called). I was requested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to state that on account of illness he had been compelled to leave the Senate Chamber, and to announce his pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Georgia spoke to me and said he did not care to be paired on this bill. I asked him particularly about this bill, and he said he did not care about my being paired with him on this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I only complied with the request of the Senator from Georgia in announcing the pair.

Mr. DOLPH. He may have made other arrangements after he spoke to me about it.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], who has been called home. I may as well announce my pair now for all the votes that may be taken on this bill. I should vote "yea" on this motion if he were here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES. My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is necessarily absent from the city. He left a request that I should obtain a pair for him; but I am not able to determine how he would vote upon this measure, and, therefore, as I can not get any other pair for him, I will withhold my vote and consider myself paired with him.

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will pair with my colleague [Mr. HOAR], and I vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL. I conferred with the colleague of the Senator from Massachusetts before he left, and he requested me to pair with him. I have not announced the pair, and have not voted. I considered myself paired with him, although he did not make any special request about this particular bill.

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is absent and paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I understood the Senator from Illinois to say that he was paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], and that if he were here the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay." I feel authorized to say under the circumstances that the Senator is at liberty to vote "nay" if he desires to do so.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I cast my vote; I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 28; as follows:

So the Senate refused to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. EUSTIS. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and substitute the following amendment——

Mr. INGALLS. Is not an amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment already pending. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. EUSTIS. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska being a motion to amend the text proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Louisiana, the question must be first put on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. His motion is to amend the text and the Senator from Louisiana proposes to strike out the whole bill. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. DOLPH. The effect of this amendment if adopted, as I tried to show yesterday, would be to prevent the completion in the near future of the direct line of the Northern Pacific Railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound. In the very brief time I occupied yesterday I endeavored to show the importance of this direct line; that there is not now in the Territory of Washington any means whatever of communication between what is known as Eastern and Western Washington; that all the commerce and all the travel between the two parts of the Territory is compelled to go around by the Columbia River in order to reach one portion of the Territory from the other.

I then stated that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was struggling to complete the branch known as the Cascade branch, which will give them a direct line across the Cascade Mountains, will bring the two sections of the Territory into direct communication with each other, and complete a direct line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound.

I then called attention to the fact that just north of the Northern Pacific Railroad the Canadian Pacific by large subsidies from the Canadian Government had been constructed and is now completed through to Puget Sound, and that Great Britain with her usual foresight and energy was about to seize and take out of our very grasp the commerce of the old East and of the Pacific coast. To my mind that is a controlling reason why the Senate of the United States facing these facts should decline to do anything that would place an obstacle in the way of the completion of this through line, and I gave this as the main reasons why the forfeiture of these 75 miles of the land grant through the Cascade Mountains, lands that are of very little value for any purpose whatever, but which are a basis of credit for the company upon which in connection with their constructed road as they proceed to construct section after section they are enabled to sell bonds to obtain the money to construct the next section and to push their road over and through the mountains, should not be declared.

But, sir, there are other reasons, not so important, not so national in their character, not so weighty with me. One of those is that the object for which the grant of lands to this company was made was to secure a through line of road from Lake Superior to Puget Sound. That was a great national undertaking, a great commercial undertaking, an undertaking that was worthy of the attention of Congress and deserving of the Government aid that was conferred upon the company.

I do not at this time propose to undertake to detail the struggles which this company has made to construct the road. I will not dwell upon the obstacles which the Government has placed in their way by inaction. I showed, when another bill was under discussion the other day, that while complaint is being made of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company that they have not taken patents to their lands so that they become taxable, there had been certified to the company and segregated from the public domain but a little over 700,000 acres of land, but that the company had selected over 11,000,000 acres, lists of which lie to-day in the Interior Department awaiting the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The Government agreed that the Indian title should be extinguished, but this company has had to go on under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate treaties with the Indians, pay for their lands for right of way, and to come to Congress for a confirmation of their purchases, before they could get even permission to survey their lands within the boundaries of Indian reservations.

While the Canadian Government has been subsidizing the Canadian Pacific, there have been constant obstacles thrown in the way of the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad and constant threats of the forfeiture of their grant affecting their credit. Notwithstanding all that they completed their road from Lake Superior to the Columbia River and have constructed the Cascade branch for 100 miles westward and they are now tunneling the mountain, and have contracted for the construction of the road over the mountain, a piece of road that is entirely separate from the grant for which it is proposed by this bill as it came from the committee to forfeit, lying many miles north of it upon another branch of the road; and I for one, because I think it is right and in the interest of the commerce of this country and the whole people of the United States, sound public policy and true statesmanship, desire to record my vote against now interfering with the construction of that part of the road.

The land proposed by the amendment to be forfeited is of no value to the Government. In the main at least, it is not fit for homestead and pre-emption claims. It is of some value to the company; it will secure the early completion of this part of its road. On the other hand there are 214 miles of the line running through a much better country the grant for which ought to be forfeited. Another road has been built there without a land grant or Government aid, and running arrangements have been made between the company owning it and the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. It forms a link in the longer route down the Columbia River and across the country to Puget Sound.

Then it appears to me that we owe something to the stockholders of this company, the people who put their money into this enterprise. It seems to me unjust now as an equitable proposition when hundreds of thousands of dollars are being expended upon this very link, this 75 miles in the Cascade Mountains, when it is partly graded, when surveying parties have been seeking to find a practicable route through the mountains ever since the company was incorporated, when a great tunnel is being constructed—it seems to me, I repeat, that it is unjust now to declare that they shall be deprived of that land if the road is not completed when this act shall take effect. If they were not now prosecuting the work with energy, if it could be shown that they were not being diligent in the construction of the Cascade branch, if they were delaying the construction and seeking to hold on to the grant, I would not say a word; but with the diligence that is now being used it appears to me that we ought not to throw an obstacle in the way of the construction.

Something has been said here in regard to the conditions of this grant and the character of it. I do not believe that there is a lawyer in this body and there are very few out of it but what know that this grant is a grant in præsenti, that it transferred the title upon conditions, that when the conditions are performed, no matter whether within the time limited in the act or afterward, the title becomes perfect and beyond the power of Congress to interfere with it; that as this road was to be constructed in sections of 25 miles and it was provided that whenever a section was completed the President of the United States should appoint commissioners to examine it and accept it and then patents should issue to it; whenever a 25-mile section was constructed and commissioners were appointed to examine it and it was approved by the President of the United States, no matter whether the patents were issued or not, the title of the company became perfect to the lands so far as the road had been accepted. The grant is in its nature divisible, and under the provisions of the act every section stands upon precisely the same basis as if there had been a separate act for each 25-mile section; and no lawyer under a grant with such conditions, in my judgment, after a thorough examination of the question, would contend that the provision as to the completion of the entire road at all affects the condition as to the sections of the road which had been completed, examined, and accepted in accordance with the terms of the act. Of course should this amendment be adopted and should the Senate pass the bill in a shape that would forfeit all unearned lands, then the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] would not be either a just or proper one; for when Congress had exercised its entire power in the matter it would be foolish and unjust to hold a threat over the company affecting their credit as to other lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator allow me a moment? If the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is proper as to the land lying between Wallula and Portland, why is it not proper as to the land lying on the 75 miles, the farthest point of the Cascade branch? Why is it not as proper for one as for the other?

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator evidently does not understand the situation. If the bill should be passed in the form in which it came from the committee, forfeiting the lands from Wallula Junction to Portland, and not forfeiting the lands for the 75 miles in the Cascade Mountains, and the company should not complete that branch within a reasonable time, Congress might want to forfeit the 75 miles, or what was left of it. That is to say, if the company should now stop operations and should not complete that road within a year or within a reasonable time, Congress might want to act upon the 75 miles; and therefore the saving clause of the Senator from Kentucky, that this act shall not prejudice the right of the United States to forfeit any other portion of the grant, would be proper. But if the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is adopted, by which the Cascade branch is included in the forfeiture, then there would be, according to my judgment, nothing left for Congress to act upon hereafter, and the provision of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky would be only a threat, something to be held in terrorem over this company, affecting their credit.

I do not propose to discuss this question at length; but after the vote upon the motion to lay this amendment on the table, I do not feel satisfied to allow the vote on the amendment to be taken in silence. I know what I am talking about in this matter. I know what is for the interest of the people of Washington Territory. I know what is for the commercial interest of the people of the United States. I have studied this question, and I desire to record my vote and raise my voice against the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska and to do what I am able to prevent the placing of another obstacle in the way of the construction of this direct line across the Cascade Mountains.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, when the original amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] was under consideration yesterday my attention was somewhat distracted, and I was for a time absent from the Senate in preparation for the discharge of a duty which was to follow later in the day.

I have only one suggestion to make to the Senator from Nebraska about this amendment that is pending. It seems to me that it is broader than he intends. For one, I am ready to vote for the forfeiture of any land grant appurtenant to any part of a railroad that is now unfinished; but this amendment as it is pending reads as follows:

The branch lines where the railroad, required by said acts, has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act.

I understand that a considerable portion of this Cascade branch, as it is called, perhaps seventy-five or a hundred miles, has been constructed, and I do not understand that it is the purpose of even the Senator from Nebraska by this amendment to forfeit the land appurtenant to that part of the branch which has been constructed, but only such lands as would be appurtenant to the unconstructed part of the road, that which is not built and in operation. But it seems to me the amendment upon which we have just voted, and which is pending, relates to the entire branch, and would forfeit all lands upon that branch even though the road was actually constructed and in operation, and had been so constructed and so in operation for a number of years. I do not understand that to be the purpose of the Senator from Nebraska; but that in modifying the amendment from the one first proposed he intended to limit the forfeiture so far as it should be made in this bill; and I do not understand that this is an expression, on the part of any of us who are opposing it, of the limit to which we are ready to go. But the amendment is broader than it has been represented and than has been his design. I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether it was the intention by this amendment to forfeit the lands that lie along that part of the Cascade branch which has been finished and is in operation?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It was not my intention by the amendment to do that thing.

Mr. HARRISON. Very good. Then I suggest to the Senator to remove what seems to be an objection in the minds of some of us by so modifying the amendment as to make it apply to those miles of the road that are unfinished instead of to the branch line as it seems to be now. It appears to me as the amendment is pending now we are voting directly upon the question of forfeiting lands that have been earned, if they can be earned by the construction of the road after the time limited in the original act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the Supreme Court has decided that they can be.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is a little premature at this time to discuss the whole question as to the forfeiture of the land granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad. The Senator from Oregon seems to be absolutely certain that no lawyer would risk his reputation by stating publicly or privately that the failure of this company to complete the road by the 4th of July, 1879, worked a foreiture of the grant of those lands. He says that it was a grant in præsenti, and that the failure of a condition subsequent did not affect the grant. My own reputation as a lawyer may be hardly worth discussion (I leave that to others), but I undertake to say as a lawyer that the failure to complete that road, and the whole road, by the 4th of July, 1879, did work a forfeiture of the grant.

Without going into anything like an elaborate discussion, I will read the eighth section of the act of 1864, which granted these lands, and I will leave the discussion there. After reciting the character of the grant, so many miles in the States and so many in the Territories, alternate sections, &c., section 8 of the act of 1864 is in these words:

And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876.

That is the eighth section of the act of Congress making the original grant. The time was subsequently extended to 1879.

Mr. BUTLER. And they accepted it upon those conditions?

Mr. VEST. They accepted it upon those conditions, and they failed to complete that road, and I say as a lawyer that no respectable court would hold anything else except that there was a forfeiture of that grant. It is now a question for Congress within its own grace and clemency to extend the grant, or, in other words, to do away with that forfeiture.

But I do not propose to go further in this discussion at present. When the question does arise here I shall undertake to show, as I think I can, by absolute legal authority that that would be the construction put upon this grant, whether it be a private or a public one.

As to the amendment pending before the Senate, I voted against laying it on the table because, under the rules of the Senate, while that motion was pending without unanimous consent I could not say what I intended to say upon that subject. I am in favor of the passage of the House bill as a substitute for the bill reported by the Senate committee. I am for it because I believe it is in exact harmony with the legal opinion I have just expressed. I am for it, in the second place, because I consider the argument made yesterday afternoon by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] as conclusive in regard to the price of these lands, the tenure by which the actual settlers should hold them, persons who have gone upon them in good faith. Under the bill as offered by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, the actual bona fide settlers who went upon the lands embraced within the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad, although that forfeiture is declared by the bill now pending here to be absolute, are compelled to pay $2.50 an acre by reason of the fact that that grant was put upon paper to the North Pacific Railroad, although the company did not comply with the terms of it. If that grant is absolutely worthless, as the bill makes it so far as it extends, then the bona fide settler should be permitted to go upon it as if the grant had never been put upon paper.

Mr. BUTLER. How much is to be paid to the Government?

Mr. VEST. He has to pay to the Government $2.50 an acre.

Mr. EUSTIS. Although he may have made a payment already.

Mr. VEST. Although he may have made a payment to the North Pacific Company already, still if we pass the Senate bill declaring that this forfeiture is absolute as to certain portions of these lands, if a bona fide settler is found upon them he is made to pay $1.25 more upon the acre by reason of the fact that the Congress of the United States made a grant the terms of which were not complied with by the grantee.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Is it not a fact that within the limits of this grant, in that portion of the grant which the bill proposes to forfeit, between Wallula and Portland, as reported from the committee, any settlers on those lands may take up 160 acres at $1.25 an acre; and is not this provision requiring payment of $2.50 an acre only to apply to those to whom the greater privilege is given by virtue of the provisions of the bill allowing the taking of 320 acres?

Mr. VEST. That may be so, and yet——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is as I understand the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it exactly.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not think a careful reading of the bill would lead any one to suppose that there was any such provision as that in it. These provisions are in favor of the settlers. They do not affect the land laws at all. Anybody in possession of any of these lands who may wish to take under the homestead or pre-emption laws may do so. He will be in possession and he will have the first right to purchase. But the trouble is that all these companies I think, the Northern Pacific company at least, issued a circular and advertised that if people would go on the lands and settle on them and improve them, when they had been earned by the company by construction of its road they would be graded and settlers should have the first right to purchase at an appraised value or in some cases at $2.60 an acre. Some people went onto these lands under those provisions, and have fenced, cultivated, and improved them, and there are great fields of wheat growing on them to-day. Many of the settlers have exhausted their homestead and pre-emption rights, and if Congress should not make any provision for such persons they would be liable to lose their lands and we should have them coming here at another session of Congress for relief; others would jump their claims under the land laws, and we should have a great deal of trouble growing out of the matter. So the committee undertook to provide for that class of settlers by providing that they shall be given the same amount that one man can take under the homestead and pre-emption laws, namely, 320 acres, at $2.50, the price which was fixed for the land when the grant was made.

That is the first provision of the section, and that is all that it is. It does not interfere in the least with the rights of the settler under the land laws. I would go as far as any one to protect the settlers. I would be as far from interfering with the rights of the settlers in the State of Oregon as any Senator on this floor. Under this bill they will have all their rights under the land laws, and they have the additional privilege of purchasing the lands held by them under the railroad company at $2.50 an acre if they find they are not qualified to purchase the same under the land laws when these lands revert to the public domain.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I wish to say one other word, if the Senator from Missouri will allow me.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I desire to state right in this connection that so far as I am concerned I shall vote for no forfeiture bill of any lands that belong to any railroad company that has not a provision in it which, as I understand it, will give to settlers on those lands all the rights that any settler has on any other public lands of the United States. I understand that this bill does that thing.

As I intimated a moment ago, any settler on any of these lands proposed to be forfeited by the bill has a right to take up 160 acres of land under any of the land laws of the United States now in existence and under the provisions of those different acts. The simple fact is that a privilege is extended to them by virtue of this measure allowing them to take up 320 acres by paying $2.50 an acre. I understand that under this bill a man located on those lands could take up 160 acres under the pre-emption law, for instance, or under the homestead law, or under the timber-culture act. He could take all that any other citizen could take on any public land, and in addition to that, by virtue of the provisions of this bill, he could take up 160 acres more by paying $2.50 an acre for it. That is as I understand the bill, and if I am wrong about that I shall vote for any amendment that will give settlers on the lands all the privileges that settlers have on any other lands in the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But you are not wrong, and our friends on the other side want to squeeze the settlers apparently.

Mr. VEST. My construction of the bill is not that put upon it by the Senator from Oregon who last addressed the Senate. Section 2 reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That in all cases where persons are in possession of any of the lands affected by said grant and hereby resumed by and restored to the United States, under deed, written contract with, or license from the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company executed prior to January 1, 1886, they shall be entitled to purchase the same from the United States, in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to any one such person, at the rate of $2.50 per acre, at any time within two years from the passage of this act, and on making said payment to receive patents therefor.

That is to say, the actual bona fide settler can purchase from the Government any of these forfeited lands in any quantity up to 320 acres by paying $2.50 an acre, which amounts simply to this, that by reason of the fact that this grant, which is now declared to be no grant at all, was made by the United States Congress to the North Pacific Railroad and the company has not complied with the terms of that grant, by reason of that single fact, enough vitality is given to this dead grant to make it cost the actual settler a dollar and a quarter more an acre even if he takes 160 acres. If that is not the construction of it, I am utterly at sea, without compass or rudder, in regard to the measure.

I prefer the House bill, which says that these lands shall be sold to the actual settler by the Government as other public lands, and that this grant shall be what we absolutely declare it to be, worthless, null, and void. That is logical and consistent, and I can only be consistent with my legal opinion by voting against the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, because although I may be an extremist as to these forfeitures and go far beyond what my associates on this side of the Chamber are willing to go, I believe that all these lands are forfeited, if that road was not completed, under the terms of the eighth section of the act of 1864 which I have read. But the Senator from Nebraska is utterly inconsistent with the House bill which he offered yesterday as a substitute, because under his amendment he abnegates and abandons the position that this forfeiture was made on the 4th of July, 1879, by the terms of the act of 1864, and he says now that the forfeiture shall only work from the time of the passage of this bill, giving up and relinquishing what I believe to be the construction of the act of 1864 and taking the illogical and inconsistent position that that forfeiture is not worked but that it is something in futuro, to take effect from the passage of the bill.

Therefore I think that Senators who hold with me in regard to the construction of the act of 1864 can not support the amendment, and I say from my standpoint that I believe the forfeiture was worked on the 4th of July, 1879, as to all these lands, upon the branches and the main road too.

Mr. COCKRELL. I stated briefly yesterday that I could not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska because it went too far. I do not think the Senate understands that amendment exactly, or the effect of it. I will read the clause only using the effective words as the section will be when amended, if the amendment is agreed to:

"That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company," &c., "which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of its main and branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act, be, and the same are, hereby resumed." Then all the lands conterminous with the completed portions of that road at the date of the passage of this bill are hereby confirmed. That is the amendment; nothing more and nothing less. The effect of it, then, is to confirm every acre of land granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company save only between Wallula and Portland and 75 miles of the Cascade branch. That is the amendment pure, simple, and unadulterated. Therefore I am not in favor of it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I urged the same position in regard to the bill as it was reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], that the forfeiture from Wallula to Portland would be a concession to the railroad company, an admission on our part that there was no more of this grant to be forfeited. I took that position and I understood the Senator then to say that that would not be the construction.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unquestionably the bill only deals with the road from Wallula to Portland and declares the lands on that line forfeited and leaves the other lands entirely untouched. Your amendment confirms every acre of land granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad except between Wallula and Portland and for 75 miles of the Cascade branch, and it goes further than I can go.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the forfeiture from Wallula to Portland is not an admission that we propose to do no more, by adding to the forfeiture 75 miles more of the railroad to the line between Wallula and Portland, how does that make any different conclusion in the estimation of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. It makes this difference, that you confirm all the rest of the grant.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Does it confirm any more than did the forfeiture from Wallula to Portland?

Mr. COCKRELL. It does absolutely confirm it. There can be but one interpretation to it. Let me read it again. Let the Senator just listen, and I do not know the English language if it does not mean that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will pause. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Missouri will be permitted to conclude the remarks he wished to make before we go on with the other bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply wanted to read the provision. There can be no misunderstanding of this amendment, and I will read it again so that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] may see exactly what it does mean. There can be no misinterpretation of it. It is too plain:

That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company * * * which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of its main and branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished at the date of the passage of this act be, and the same are hereby, resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain, and made subject to disposition and settlement under the general laws relating to public lands.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will yield.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have yielded to the Senator from Arkansas, and I will then hear the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The subject-matter has passed away from the consideration of the Senate, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply wanted to read the amendment so that it might go in the RECORD, and any one who understands the English language can interpret it.

Mr. BERRY. Does the President of the Senate rule that I can not ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate is upon the pending bill (S. 1812) relative to taxing railroad land grants, and it is not for the Chair to determine. The bill before the Senate will be again stated by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. BERRY. This is not the same bill that was under consideration before 2 o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; that has passed from the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BERRY. I understood that upon the application of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] was allowed to complete his remarks, and I proposed to ask him a question during those remarks, which I supposed would be in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Arkansas as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. BERRY. I simply desire to ask the Senator from Missouri if he is correct in his statement that in case the bill should pass with the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska it would have the effect to confirm to the railroad company all other lands. If the bill passes as reported by the Senator from Oregon without the amendment, will it not have the effect to confirm to the company all other lands than those from Wallula to Portland and the Cascade branch in addition?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. BERRY. The bill is to forfeit from Wallula down to Portland. The Senator from Nebraska proposes to forfeit 75 miles of the Cascade branch in addition to those lands. I think myself that if the bill were passed as it came from the committee without the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] it would have the effect to confirm all those lands that have heretofore been earned, and to that I was opposed. I say that if the bill passes without the amendment it not only confirms them, but confirms 75 miles in addition of unearned lands on the Cascade branch upon which the road is not finished to-day. If the Senator from Missouri proposes to support the bill as it was reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] without that amendment, he not only confirms the lands down to Wallula but he confirms 75 miles in addition of unearned land where the road is being built to-day.

Mr. MANDERSON. Before passing from the proposition that was suggested by the Senator from Missouri I should like to call his attention to section 3 of the bill adopted by the action of the Senate yesterday on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and to call his attention to the fact that that section certainly obviates the difficulty which he suggests. It says:

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be construed to waive or release or in any way affect any right of the United States to have any other lands granted by them to the said railroad company forfeited for any failure of said company to comply with the conditions of the grant.

It seems to me that with that as an additional section to the bill the difficulty suggested by the Senator is certainly obviated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 1812 being before the Senate, the pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have Senate bill 2172 printed with the amendment adopted on motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill as amended and the pending amendment will be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not to be taken out of the Senate so that it can not be taken up if we wish.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, not as a matter of course, but it can be printed before the next meeting of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I do not wish the order to print to be made in such a way that the bill which has now been passed over by the expiration of the morning hour can not be disposed of to-day if there is time. I do not say that I shall want to do that, but I do not wish to have the Senate lose possession of it by the order to print.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nor do I; but I think that it can be printed before we shall have an opportunity to resume its consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to submit an amendment to the bill to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Before the bill passes from the consideration of the Senate I desire to offer an amendment, that it may be printed along with the bill as it stands now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the order to print will include the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. COCKRELL. And also the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have not yet yielded the floor. I ask that my amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not before the Senate, but the amendment will be read if there be no objection. The Senator from Oregon proposes an amendment to the bill which was under consideration at 2 o'clock, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 13, after the word "line," strike out all down to and including the words "eighteen hundred and eighty," in line 18, as follows:

Designated as the terminal limits of the earned portion of said grant easterly from said Wallula Junction by letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the officers of the local land office at Walla Walla, Wash., dated November 17, 1880.

And insert in lieu thereof:

Known as the Harrison line, being a line drawn from Walla Walla, Wash., easterly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 5, in township 7 north, of range 38 east of Willamette meridian.

So as to read:

Provided, That if it shall be found that any lands so resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain lie north of the line known as the Harrison line, being a line drawn from Walla Walla, Wash., easterly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 5, in township 7 north, of range 38 east of Willamette meridian, all persons, or their heirs or assigns, as the case may be, who had acquired in good faith the title of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to any portion of said lands prior to January 1, 1886, or who at said date were in possession of any portion of said lands or had improved the same, claiming the same under written contract with or license from said company, executed in good faith, shall be entitled to purchase the lands so acquired, possessed, or improved, from the United States, &c.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The only object of the amendment is to make plain a description; that is all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before the bill passes from the consideration of the Senate I have an amendment which I desire to offer, that it may be printed. I ask that it be read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read if there be no objection. The bill having passed from the consideration of the Senate at 2 o'clock, it is not before the Senate. However, the amendment will be read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The amendment I propose is to be added to the last section which was adopted yesterday.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 3 the following proviso:

Provided, That no patent shall hereafter be issued for any land included in any grant of lands to aid in the construction of any railroad which at any time has been liable to forfeiture for failure to comply in the time specified with the terms of the grant until Congress shall authorize the issuing of such patent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. T. M. NORWOOD of Georgia, Mr. C. B. LORE of Delaware, and Mr. A. C. HARMER of Pennsylvania Visitors on the part of the House to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., under the provisions of the act of February 15, 1879.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 174) authorizing the printing of 25,000 copies of the report of the National Board of Health for the year 1885; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HOAR to add:

That not more than 640 acres of the lands sold under the provisions of this act shall be purchased by any one person, or shall thereafter be acquired or owned or held in trust for any one person; and any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States, without any act of entry or other process whatever.

Mr. EDMUNDS rose.

Mr. DOLPH. I should be very glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont, but when the bill was last under consideration I yielded the floor to allow the Chinese treaty bill to be brought before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is correct. The Senator from Oregon is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOLPH. I am very glad to yield the floor to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg to thank the Senator from Oregon. I wish to speak to the pending bill as illustrating the bill that has just passed away from the consideration of the Senate. I wish to call the attention of my brother Senators to the circumstance that a bill considered by a committee and reported by that committee, by a majority (I do not know whether it was unanimous or not, probably not), which proposes to forfeit 200 miles or more of a land grant in the rich valley of the Columbia, in respect to which probably all Senators would agree that it ought to be forfeited, has been by a yea-and-nay vote (if I may use such a phrase now) bedeviled, as if we were all employed by a railroad company to bedevil it and do nothing at all by the propositions of amendments and insisting upon considering them, that raise open and difficult and disturbing questions, which our former experience has shown are not likely to be decided in the six weeks that are probably yet left for the action of Congress at this session.

I wish to have the people of Washington Territory and the people of Oregon and the people of New York and the rest of the United States take notice of the proceedings this day, and to see whether they would not fairly suppose that the railroad corporation which does not wish to forfeit this Columbia grant had somehow or other been enabled to bias and hoodwink and mislead the minds of Senators so as to add things which are debatable in order to prevent action upon that on which we are all agreed. That is the way the case stands, and I want the people of this country to understand it.

Then I wish to say to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], with all his zeal for the public interest, which has misled us into the state we now are, where probably no bill will pass at all to forfeit any lands of the Northern Pacific after this yea-and-nay vote of the Senate, that it is only a little while ago since he himself proposed to the Senate to give out of the funds of the United States (for that is what it amounts to) a subsidy to the Union Pacific Railroad Company to build branches all over Nebraska and around there and to guarantee their bonds—not guarantee by the United States but guarantee by the corporation, on every dollar of whose funds and on every acre of whose lands we have by existing law a mortgage and a lien which is far beyond their value—to take really out of the funds of the United States the means for building railroads in that region, while he is so very sensitive, and justly so, about appropriating any more public lands in general for the building of railroads.

Doubtless my friend from Nebraska can explain his consistency, and with that I have really nothing to do; but I submit it to his consideration as a reason why we ought not to go very fast in denying to the people of Washington Territory this opening to the East out of some sort of public treasure, be it land or money, which it seems to be in his mind so necessary should be given out of the funds and property of the United States for improving the facilities of the Union Pacific Railroad Company in Nebraska.

I am not addressing this to my friend from Nebraska in the personal sense, but in the public sense, that if it be a good thing and a necessary thing for the public interest in Nebraska that what are really the funds of the United States shall be expended by the Union Pacific to build branches, &c., might it not be proper to extend facilities to the people of Washington Territory in the way of giving to this company power to finish building their road across to Puget Sound by the use of the mountain lands in a region where the people of Washington Territory and where the people on the whole line of the continent from Puget Sound to New York harbor are interested in building up and finishing this line of intercommunication?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has the floor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator proposes to make a speech I prefer to finish mine, but if he wishes simply to make an incidental suggestion I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to make a statement in reply to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS (to Mr. DOLPH). Oh, yes; let him proceed.

Mr. DOLPH. Very well; I yield.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Vermont appears somewhat solicitous lest the public at large shall suppose that we are all in the employ of the railroad corporations, as I understand the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no.

Mr. VAN WYCK. He is solicitous enough on that point to make the suggestion that we had so bedeviled the bill that the people would think we were all in the employ of the railroads. That, I think, was the language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No.

Mr. VAN WYCK. We will appeal to the RECORD in the morning and see how near I am to the Senator's language. I do not think the people will make any mistake about that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They do not generally make mistakes, at least not more than six years at a time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No. They probably can draw the line of distinction between who are and who are not in the employ of railroad companies. They will be able to do that doubtless.

I do not know how the Senate has bedeviled the bill which the Senator so eloquently alludes to. The Senate in its independence of action has seen fit to make suggestions and amendments of which the Senator from Vermont did not approve; that is true; but it does not necessarily follow that it is a bedevilment of the bill because the Senator from Vermont did not vote for the amendments. I do not know that the Senate should be characterized as bedeviling the thing because in their judgment they thought it better to extend the provisions of the bill and widen them.

It is perfectly evident from the history of this bill from the time it went into the committee to the time it came out that it was intended to give an advantage to the Northern Pacific Railroad, that it proposed only to forfeit what the Northern Pacific Railroad Company were willing should be forfeited. When the bill went into committee there was given by it a certain number of years for the Northern Pacific to finish their road. When it came out it had not that provision, but the author of the bill, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], refused to vote for the amendment which the Senate did approve, and gave as his reason that it would embarrass the Northern Pacific Railroad if the grant for this 75 miles of unfinished road was taken from it. That was the position of the Senator from Oregon, and he antagonized that amendment. He antagonized it on the ground that it would embarrass the Northern Pacific Railroad, did he not?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; he says he did not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Who says he did not?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understood him to say he did not.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I refer to the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought you were speaking of the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was speaking of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], the author of the bill. He refused to vote for this amendment relating to the 75 miles because he said it would interfere with the Northern Pacific in constructing its road.

Mr. DOLPH. Who did?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. You mean I voted to lay it on the table?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is the same thing. You opposed the amendment, if you please, and opposed it on that ground. The Senator from Oregon refused his assent to the amendment which the Senate approved on the ground that it would interfere with the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad in constructing its line.

Mr. DAWES. Where?

Mr. VAN WYCK. On the floor of the Senate. He put it on that ground. Therefore I am justified in saying that the bill as introduced and as conducted here on the floor has been engineered in the interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment——

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I will say that the Senator is neither justified in saying that, nor is it the fact; and the Senator ought to know that it is not the fact.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When the Senator from Oregon based his opposition to the amendment on the ground that it would interfere with the Northern Pacific Railroad what other conclusion can be drawn? It is not in the interest of the people, he says.

Mr. DOLPH. The RECORD will show what I said.

Mr. VAN WYCK. You do not deny it?

Mr. DOLPH. I do deny it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. He does not deny what I said.

Mr. DOLPH. The day before yesterday I went on to show how the Canadian Pacific Railroad was contending for the trade of the Pacific, and I thought I suggested a great national reason why the Cascade branch should be constructed. To-day I went on to show that I thought our commercial interests as a nation required it, and I say that the Senator has no authority to draw any such conclusion as he has stated. The bill was not introduced in the interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. If the Senator knows that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company desire a forfeiture of this grant, he knows something that I do not. On the contrary, so far as I have had any communication with any one interested in that road, I know that they want it retained and would like to retain it until they can build that road and earn it. If the Senator will be kind enough to give us the information when they have asked for legislation to forfeit any part of the grant, I should be glad to have him do it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will do it cheerfully. The Senator, in addition to what I stated, also said, and that I think he will not controvert, that he did not desire to interfere with the construction of the road by the Northern Pacific.

Mr. DOLPH. Because that is the company constructing the road, of course.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not wish to interfere with the construction.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Northern Pacific do not want the land on that 75 miles forfeited, and the Senator substantially said so, because it will embarrass them. He said distinctly that the land was worthless to the Government, but yet valuable to the railroad company as a basis of credit—worthless lands valuable to the company as the basis of credit, from which they can obtain money from the issue of bonds and by that means build the road. That is the position of the Senator, because that is what he said. Now he says that the Northern Pacific do not want this forfeiture from Wallula to Portland.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not say any such thing. The Senator may go on and conclude his remarks; but I remind him of the fact that he wanted to reply to the Senator from Vermont when I gave way before I had finished my speech.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am showing that we are not all attorneys for railroad companies, as the Senator from Vermont would intimate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I did not intimate anything of the kind.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am sorry I misunderstood the language, then. So he did not intimate that all of us—only a part——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not intimate it of a part.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then of some of us.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not some.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator will excuse me, the language will show in the RECORD in the morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it will.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Oregon says the Northern Pacific Railroad Company do not desire, or rather, I understand him, it is not agreeable to their wishes that the land from Wallula to Portland shall be forfeited.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not undertake to speak for the Northern Pacific. I say as far as I know anything about it they desire to retain this grant.

Mr. VAN WYCK. They desire to retain the grant. I ask if it is not one of the most remarkable things ever heard of that the Senator from Oregon should introduce a bill to forfeit a portion of their grant that they did not want forfeited, that they should not remonstrate with him about it, that they should not appeal to the committee of this body as they always do, importunately and persistently, when anything is done that they do not want done?

They never fail for attorneys outside of this body to besiege the committee-rooms to make known their wishes; and the fact that the Northern Pacific has not even intimated to the Senators from Oregon that they do not want this forfeiture, that they have not come with eloquent and able attorneys before the committee to proclaim and argue that this thing should not be done, is certainly as good evidence as we need that the Northern Pacific Railroad is assenting to this forfeiture.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If they were willing to forfeit the land, could they not surrender at any time without any legislation at all?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suppose so, and I look upon this as a surrender of that branch on their part, because they know what is proposed here, and they do not protest against it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if they wanted to do it, if I may interrupt my friend—

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Could they not just file in the Department of the Interior a surrender and renunciation of any claim to that land? It does not require any legislation to make them do that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, not necessarily. Corporations do not always do things as individuals do. They could do that; but is not this really effective here? They make no protest. They concede this. Therefore I say it is in accordance with their wishes that this thing should be done, because the fact that they do not protest, the fact that they give up 200 miles of what the Senator from Oregon says is the best land in Oregon, is good evidence that they do not want it any longer.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Are you unwilling to forfeit it because they are willing it should be done?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I want to do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think from their silence they know in point of justice and right it is so clear a case that it must be forfeited. That they do not renounce it, as they could, in the Interior Department to-day is a fact, and they hope the bill will be so mixed up to do that thing, if it is passed at all, that by and by, when some more hopeful Senators come in, when my friend and I have retired to better and more congenial pursuits, they can probably get the thing fixed so that they will get the land after all.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Suppose the fact is as stated by the Senator from Nebraska, and I do not know whether it is or not. The Senator will permit me to say, when he speaks about communications with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, that the Senator from Oregon has no communication with them, so far as I am concerned, and I do not know that my colleague has. But suppose it is a fact that that company is willing to surrender this portion of the grant from Wallula to Portland. I do not know whether it is true or not. My impression is that the company would like to hold on to it if they could. If they had anything to base a claim to it on, I think they would hold on to it until the last day. But suppose it is a fact that they are willing to give it up, whether because they feel they have no ground to stand on or for any other reason—I wish to know of the Senator from Nebraska what objection there is with him, what proper objection can be urged by Congress, to going on and declaring those lands forfeited in reference to which there is no contest, with some such provision as that submitted yesterday by the Senator from Kentucky, that that action shall not be construed as an affirmation of the remainder of the grant, and then after we have done that thing in reference to which there is no controversy, proceed to contest the rest of the company's grant by another bill? What is the objection to that proposition?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator has conceded very properly what I said, that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had no objection to the forfeiture of this land.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have conceded no such thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He said exactly the reverse.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have stated most distinctly, in the first place, that I know nothing about it, as I was not in communication with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company or any of its officers, but that my impression was and my belief now is that it would like to hold on to the grant between Wallula and Portland until the very last day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And they are likely to do that by this proceeding.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. As is suggested by the Senator from Vermont, if my friend from Nebraska continues to persist in the position he has taken here and the course he is advocating I think the very great probability is that they will hold on to what they have; for, whatever may be the motives of the Senator from Nebraska, I undertake to say that the effect of his amendment and his position here and of his advocacy to-day is to retain in the hands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and under its control some three or four million acres of land in reference to which there is no controversy and which the Senator from Nebraska himself says the company is willing to surrender.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator then, I will say, by inference, taking the whole of his remarks together, concedes that the Northern Pacific do not at this time antagonize the proposition to forfeit the grant from Wallula to Portland.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have conceded no such thing, and I repeat it now for the fourth time that, while I know nothing personally on the subject, my belief is, from my knowledge of the past, that the company are not desirous of relinquishing the lands between Wallula and Portland, but that if they had any ground at all upon which they could stand they would continue to make the claim here and elsewhere and hold on to the land; but that the effect of the course taken by my friend from Nebraska, whatever may be his motives, is to play directly and emphatically into the hands of the Northern Pacific Railroad and against the settlers in Oregon and elsewhere.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That confirms for the fifth time the truth of what I said, because the Senator from Oregon says, if the Northern Pacific believed they had any ground to stand upon they would oppose this legislation. That is all I desire to know in regard to the matter.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand now, and I have always understood, that the position of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in reference to this grant as a matter of clean, naked law was this: By virtue of certain provisions in the charter of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, in the twentieth section, which was not referred to to-day by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], they claim that there is no power in the Congress of the United States to declare forfeited any portion of this grant. That I understand has always been their position. I do not agree to it. I do not think it is a position which can be maintained. I have never believed it; I do not believe it now. I think the power of Congress to declare forfeited any portion of the lands adjacent to the line of the road that is not completed is full, ample, and complete; and that we have the right to declare any portion of those lands forfeited for a failure to complete the road.

I say that I have understood heretofore, and I understand now, that the proposition of the company is that whatever Congress might do in the matter of a declaration of forfeiture, even in reference to those lands lying between Wallula and Portland, it would be a mere declaration that amounts to nothing, and that the courts in the end would hold that the action amounted to nothing. I do not believe that, but that is the position of the company. That is all that I desire to say on that point.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then the Senator knows what the company's views are on one branch of the case.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I certainly do.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am much obliged for that.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I have the amplest reasons for knowing. I acted as the attorney of that company for over six years when I had a right to act as its attorney. I know what its views were then, and I have no reason to believe that its managers have ever changed their views upon that question; and I state now to the Senator and I state to the Senate and the country that I do not believe their position in reference to that matter is good law. I think we have a right to declare these lands forfeited in so far as they are adjacent to any line of road along which the railroad has not been completed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Of course we would expect the Northern Pacific Railroad to entertain the opinion, which railroads entertain generally, that Congress has no such power. That they always maintain, and that we understand.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. As a general rule.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator is correct about that; but yet it comes back again to the fact, which I think the discussion has elicited, that an attempt to oppose this legislation on the part of the Northern Pacific was baseless and they are not making the attempt to do it. The fact that they are not making the attempt to do it will be conceded everywhere, because both the Senators from Oregon say their attention has not been called by the Northern Pacific Railroad to the injustice, the wrong that is proposed to be done them in forfeiting this land. The Northern Pacific find it baseless, as the Senator says, so baseless that the railroad company have not even called on the Senators from their State, on whom they have a right to call, to interpose against it. They have not sent an attorney before the committee, as the Senator knows.

Mr. DOLPH. I will answer the Senator when he gets through. I yielded to the Senator to reply to the Senator from Vermont, but he can go on and when he gets through I shall answer him.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am obliged to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator has his own ideas of Senatorial courtesy and a good many other things. I want him to go on and conclude, and when he gets through I shall ask to be heard.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not know what the Senator means——

Mr. DOLPH. I shall wait until the Senator gets through.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not know what the Senator means as to any discourtesy. Does the Senator mean to intimate that I have protracted my remarks too long for the Senator's convenience? If so, I will give way.

Mr. DOLPH. No; go on and finish your speech.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then I will state, liable and subject to contradiction if I misstate it, that the Northern Pacific Company have sent no attorney to argue their case before the Committee on Public Lands of this body. Every railroad corporation that thinks it has a right which is interfered with or likely to be interfered with by legislation generally overwhelms the committee with attorneys. That my friend knows, and so does every other member of the committee know. They overwhelm them in the committee, and members of the Senate who are not on the committee are importuned in the corridors and other places. The fact that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company have not had sufficient interest to attempt to save three or four million acres of land is evidence that they are assenting, acquiescing; and therefore when we merely forfeit from Wallula to Portland we are doing what they are willing we shall do.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Admitting everything the Senator has said, just for the sake of the argument, in order to go further on that point, I wish the Senator to answer the question put to him a few moments ago, what is the objection to going on and declaring forfeited this land in reference to which there is no controversy, the reservation being all the while that the action shall not be construed as affirming the remainder of the grant, and then have a bill introduced and go on and contest the remainder?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is a very proper inquiry.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. And I wish an answer to it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to finish the other branch first.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator answer now?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will address myself to the suggestion of the Senator, which is a very proper one, as to what objection there is to forfeiting this land. There is no objection to forfeiting it from Wallula down to Portland. That we insist upon. We claim that it is right; but here is a bill forfeiting certain lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and some of us think that other lands should be forfeited as much as the lands from Wallula to Portland. We are considering now the question of the forfeiture of the lands of the Northern Pacific. This has been an agitation in Congress for a long time. I think the Senator from Vermont said yesterday that it had been before his committee some three or four years. The question must be met, and let it be met now, as to the forfeiture of the lands of the Northern Pacific. Does the Senator from Oregon think it would be proper at this session to forfeit the lands from Wallula to Portland?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I most certainly do.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then at the next session would come a proposition to forfeit to the point 75 miles on the Cascade branch. Does the Senator think that would be just the thing?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am in favor of doing that at this session if it should be done.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But it should be done, evidently. That is what I insist upon, and I trust you do also. Then the third session we shall come and take the position which my friend from Missouri and I agree about, that the lands should all be forfeited from the 4th day of July, 1879. Would that be a good time to find out about this matter? If we would not be fishing behind the net it is very strange to me. You forfeit from Wallula to Portland now, 200 miles. The next session you forfeit 75 miles on the Cascade branch, and then the third session you come and raise the question of the forfeiture that ought to be made as we think from the 4th day of July, 1879. My friend does not think that could ever be done. Does he not know that it could never be done? What we forfeit at this session of Congress of the Northern Pacific Railroad is all that the American people will ever see forfeited, and no more.

We divide upon that question, and so I stated. The House bill is correct. I offered that as an amendment, but my friends upon this side and some upon the other side, notably the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], insisted that was wrong. He thought there was a great deal of zeal without knowledge. I will say to the Senator from Missouri who spoke to-day that yesterday his colleague thought there was a great deal of zeal in asking that the House bill should be offered here as an amendment, and he said that it was zeal without knowledge. I took the rebuke kindly and acted upon it, as I did the advice of my friend from Vermont, for whom I always entertain the highest respect; and, yielding to the suggestions, I said, "Very well, as it is the desire, I will withdraw the amendment," which I did with the consent of the Senate, and I offered another proposition, to which I supposed Senators on this side would cheerfully assent; and that is what has been read and is now under consideration, that at least we shall forfeit the lands that are not earned up to date.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to interrupt him just there?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. There are evidently three opinions in reference to this grant in Congress. One is that we should go on at once and declare a forfeiture of the lands between Wallula and Portland. Another opinion is that we should go on at once and forfeit all the lands adjacent to that portion of the line of the road that has not been completed. Still a third opinion is that we should pass an act declaring a forfeiture of all the lands adjacent to that portion of the line of road that was not completed in 1879. Those are the three opinions held by different members of the two branches of Congress. What I wish to know of my friend is this: Suppose there are not a majority of either House in favor of the extreme view of forfeiting all lands adjacent to that portion of the road which was not completed in 1879, is that any reason why we should not forfeit all in reference to which there is no controversy?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Suppose a majority is not even willing to go so far as to forfeit the lands across the Cascade Mountains, would that be a reason why we should not go on and forfeit those lands about which there is no controversy?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Then I fail to see the consistency of the course suggested by the Senator that we must go on and determine the whole business now, when we can throw some three or four million acres of land open to settlers along the line of the road without delay and contest the remainder of the controversy not at the next session or the next year but at the present session.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will in a few words try to explain my position to the Senator from Oregon. He stated the position correctly. I am one of those who believe with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and many others that the forfeiture should date at the expiration of the time fixed in the charter for the completion of the road, and that the forfeiture should commence on the 4th day of July, 1879. My vote will always be to accomplish that end; but it is perfectly evident that a majority of the Senate do not agree in that opinion. The other House probably does. Now, what are we to do? I am satisfied from the vote this morning that a majority of the Senate concur in forfeiting the land adjoining the uncompleted road. That is the second proposition, to forfeit the land adjoining the uncompleted road, and the third is to forfeit only from Wallula to Portland.

I agree with the Senators from Missouri and Louisiana that the land should be forfeited from the 4th of July, 1879, for I have always believed it; but if we can not sustain that position I want the next best thing in that direction, and that is to forfeit everything adjoining the uncompleted road. That is what I next desire, and if we can not get that, then we will take all that is left, the land they do not want us to keep for them, from Wallula to Portland. I trust the Senator understands my position on that matter. Is it not consistent?

The only time we shall ever deal with the Northern Pacific Railroad on the question of forfeiture will be at this Congress, if we do anything at all. If we forfeit the land from Wallula to Portland that ends it. In the mean time they will go on and finish the 75 miles. They will only want a year or two to do that. What then? You propose by the passage of this bill to give time for the Northern Pacific to finish those 75 miles of road and get their hands on that land too. That will be the result of it.

I say to my friend from Missouri, while I am with him, that if we delay action here on forfeiting the uncompleted portion, that ends it. We shall never get the lands on the 75 miles if we delay the matter to another Congress. Three years ago when its was found that the differences in the two Houses were irreconcilable, would it not have been better to have forfeited the lands adjoining the uncompleted portion? The longer we delay the solution of this question the more land the corporation will get, until finally it will get it all except from Wallula to Portland. I trust the Senate understands the position.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, the only criticism I make on his amendment is this: He holds, as I understand, like myself, that the forfeiture was perfect on the 4th of July, 1879, as to the whole grant.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do.

Mr. VEST. Now, his amendment does away with that assumption and that construction of the act of 1864, and says that this forfeiture on these branches shall become effective from the time the bill passes. That gives up our position as to the construction of the act of 1864, and is inconsistent with his support of the House bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Except as to the third section proposed as an amendment by the Senator from Kentucky, which provides that the action on this bill shall not interfere with the consideration of questions of forfeiture hereafter.

Mr. VEST. Still the Senator's amendment is not logical or consistent with his other position. If he holds, as he does unquestionably, with myself, that the eighth section of the act of 1864 worked a forfeiture of the whole grant on the 4th day of July, 1879, then it is simply impossible, if you proceed logically, to say that the forfeiture of the grant on the branches, which come under the same original grant, does not become perfect until the time when this bill is passed; it may be next August or it may not be at all.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask my friend, because we agree in principle on this matter and we desire to get something, suppose it is perfectly evident that this Congress will not pass a forfeiture bill dating from the 4th day of July, 1879; suppose we are satisfied of that fact; what then? Are we to sit down and wait until another year and then come and find the same result? In the mean time the railroad will be building right along and acquiring the land from week to week and month to month. Are we to protract this matter when we find such is inevitably to be the result, and let these gentlemen get the whole of the Cascade lands?

Mr. VEST. In answer to the Senator from Nebraska I will say that I want to do exactly what he wants to do. I want to carry out what I believe to be the irresistible conclusion, the legal conclusion that flows from the eighth section of the act of 1864, and which I understood the Senator from Oregon who last spoke to concur in; but at the same time when that main question comes up I do not want to be confronted with a vote which tells me, "You abandoned that position and you voted for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, which said that there was no forfeiture until August, 1886," if the bill passes then.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If my friend will excuse me just a moment right there, the amendment under consideration if adopted secures two things. The forfeiture from Wallula to Portland is right; I shall vote for that. Then the amendment to forfeit the 75 miles on the other end of the Cascade branch is right, and I shall vote for that. That gives us so much more. Then the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana adopting the House proposition, I shall vote for that, each time, going an advance as far as I can. It would not be in any one's mouth I think when we vote for the House bill to say, "You offered an amendment for 75 miles." So I did. I vote upon each proposition to get all I can in this matter. First, I take the land from Wallula to Portland; then I take the 75 miles; and then I shall vote for the third proposition; and if there be enough in the Senate to carry the third proposition then the Senator from Missouri and myself will feel that the right has prevailed as we understand it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me for a moment?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not wish the Senator from Missouri to have any misapprehension in regard to my views as to the power of Congress under this grant or in reference to the effect of the failure to complete the road in the time limited. In what I said a moment ago in combating the position as I understand it to be maintained by the company, that there is no power in Congress to declare forfeited any portion of this grant, I did not mean to convey the impression that I believed for a moment that the mere failure upon the part of the company to complete its road within the time was of itself a forfeiture or would of itself justify Congress in declaring a forfeiture of all those lands adjacent to the line of road not completed within the time limited. My own opinion is that the law as stated by the Senator from Missouri a little while before 2 o'clock, when this matter was directly under discussion, can not be maintained. I understand that the position stated by the Senator from Missouri is in direct conflict with what the Supreme Court of the United States has decided in more than one case, and notably decided in the case of Knevels vs. Van Wyck, and in other cases, to the effect that a declaration of forfeiture can only take effect upon lands adjacent to the road that is not completed at the time of the declaration.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I trust now I have made myself understood that there is not the inconsistency in my position in this matter which gentlemen would seem to think they have found therein.

This question of the forfeiture of unearned lands ought to find a settlement at some time in the American Congress. For years each political party has placed itself on platforms declaring in favor of the forfeiture of unearned lands, and I would say to my friends from Oregon that I think the people of the State they represent—that portion of them, at least, with whom they are more intimately connected politically—have resolved in favor of the principle of this amendment. The people of Oregon have asked that this much shall be done, that the unearned grant shall be forfeited. The objection the Senators from Oregon both make to my proposition is that I am asking to have forfeited the lands which have not been earned on the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and in 1884, two years ago, at the Oregon State convention in Portland——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I wish to state that as far as I am concerned—I speak for myself—I am quite indifferent personally whether the lands included in the Senator's amendment are forfeited or not. My principal objection is that I believe the proposition is an embarrassment to the passage of the bill, which I think every Senator ought to vote for.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When we are merely annexing an amendment which the people of Oregon want, how will that embarrass the passage of the bill? Will it embarrass it in the other House? The House insists that this even is not enough; the House insists that the forfeiture should date on the 4th of July, 1879, and you send the bill to the House merely forfeiting from Wallula to Portland, and it is an invitation to that body to dissent from your bill. Then why not throw in a little more and make it more in accord with the sentiment of the House, which must unite with us in whatever legislation we have on the subject? Every Senator knows that if the bill is sent to the other House confined to the land from Wallula to Portland it will never be assented to. Then why go through that sort of peformance? Who is to be deceived by that? Who is to be cajoled by that sort of thing? If we know it can not be accomplished in that way, and if we want to make some forfeiture, let us make it better, put on all the unearned lands.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. If we may properly refer to the other House at all, I hope that House will agree to what we do on the same principle.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). So little in order has been said since the present occupant of the chair has occupied it that he has felt a delicacy in interfering at all. The bill before the Senate has not been alluded to in the discussion before the Senate the last hour.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the present occupant of the chair received the proper instructions from his predecessor, the bill pending is the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The debate has very close connection with it. I am speaking by unanimous consent and in relation to the same subject-matter. It has so much application to the other bill that it will not be lost, this part of it particularly.

The Oregon State Republican convention, at Portland, in May, 1884——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. There was a later one than that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; but I thought I would rather go back to 1884. They have done it every year since, but have never got any nearer a solution of it. They have been importuning Congress and their representatives year by year; so have the national Republican conventions; so have the Democratic national conventions. They are all asking for it.

The Republican State convention in Oregon in May, 1884, declared:

Seventh. That all unearned grants to railroads and wagon-roads in this State should be forfeited and opened to settlement by those entitled to the benefit of the land laws of the United States.

There is where I am standing.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is just where I am standing. I am voting to forfeit every foot of land in Oregon.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am reading from the platform of the Oregon Republican State convention at Portland in May, 1884. Everything seemed harmonious. They say in the seventh resolution, which I will read again:

That all unearned grants to railroads and wagon-roads in this State should be forfeited and opened to settlement by those entitled to the benefit of the land laws of the United States.

If I may be allowed to say so, I am representing in these few remarks and in my amendment that sentiment of the Republican party of Oregon. I am representing that branch of it which wants the railroad grants forfeited. The Senator says the year after they passed the same resolution. They have importuned, are reimportuning, the Senators from Oregon to forfeit all unearned land grants.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Republican convention of the State of Oregon have not said in the resolution just read that they are in favor of forfeiting the lands on the top of the Cascade Mountains in this gap of the Northern Pacific in Washington Territory.

Mr. VAN WYCK. They have said that they want all unearned lands forfeited.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. In the State.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In the State, of course.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. These lands are not in the State.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not believe the notions of public policy of the Republicans of Oregon on great questions like this are controlled by State lines.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Their notions of public policy are all right; but as the Senator from Nebraska quotes a resolution I wish him to put the proper construction on that resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will. The Republicans of Washington Territory have done the same thing, they have resolved just as their brethren in Oregon resolved, that all unearned land grants should be forfeited. That is not all. When in the fall following they went to the ballot-box, the Republican party of the Territory of Washington, as an expression of their opinion, elected a Republican Delegate to represent them at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. A Democrat.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; a Democrat.

Mr. DOLPH. Because the convention had adopted the resolution, I suppose.

Mr. VAN WYCK. They adopted the resolution, and the people were just a trifle afraid that when he got here their Delegate would not act in accordance with the resolution. That sometimes happens. Even my brother Senators here do not stand on the resolution of the Republican party of Oregon. If it is good for Oregon it is good for Washington Territory, and the Republicans of that Territory resolved the same thing, and then in their natural disgust they saw their Oregon Republican friends had been beseeching for this for some time without the success which they desired, and so they thought they would try the other party, and they even selected a Democrat who they knew was in sympathy with them upon this question.

I trust my friend will now concede my consistency in this matter. We want all that we can get and that we think we are entitled to; but if we can not get that I do not propose that we shall linger upon this matter. I do not propose that we shall send a bill to the other House which we know in advance they will not accept, and which will make a difference of opinion which will prevent any legislation and allow the railroads to accomplish all they want by reason of the non-action of Congress.

I desire that this great question shall be settled, and settled now. I do not believe in each party amusing the people by resolutions about what they will do, and then take pains not to do it by shaping bills in such way that it can not be done.

One word more by the courtesy of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] and I will yield the floor. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], because this bill had not been fixed as he wanted, was being amended in opposition to his judgment, said it had been bedeviled, and he took occasion to say that the Senator from Nebraska was inconsistent in the bill which he introduced in regard to the Union Pacific Railroad. That makes it necessary for me to say a few words by way of explanation.

We know a great deal about the Union Pacific Railroad; we have heard of it here. For grasping greed of course it has in the past excelled anything on earth. That question may arise when the funding bill comes up, which I suppose the Senator from Vermont thinks to be right. It will be necessary then probably to state more at large the violations of law and the infamous robberies perpetrated by that company under its previous management, which I have heretofore characterized as the greatest criminal of the age.

Mr. DAWES. In what respect?

Mr. VAN WYCK. In 1873 you voted for a law which your colleague draughted, which provided that if any officer of that corporation issued any new stock or bonds or impaired the credit of that company he should be consigned to the penitentiary for not more than two years and pay a penalty of not over $5,000. Their officers did these acts, and there was not power enough in the Government to grapple with the criminals and consign them to the punishment which the law inflicted.

In violation of this law they enlarged the indebtedness of the Union Pacific. They impoverished the people by extortionate charges, and after they had boomed the stock up to 120 they unloaded on the innocent widows and orphans of Massachusetts. And now we are appealed to in sympathy for the widows and orphans of Massachusetts, and we shall hear a good deal about that matter when we come to consider the funding bill.

But the company's control passed into other hands. The odium was so great that the men who had wrecked it desired some one at the head who had a reputation for honesty, and they selected Mr. Adams. I had believed that from Mr. Adams's known views and from his exposition of these men in his Notes on Erie he would conduct, as far as in him lay, an honest management of that concern. The people had a right to believe in his professions; besides, they knew there was nothing left for any man to steal. The company was a wreck. Nothing remained but the shell.

My objection to the funding bill is that you leave a mountain of debt upon the road from which it can never be extricated, and while you leave that mountain of debt, and propose to continue it nearly a hundred years, you keep the people of the territory traversed by the road in a thraldom and servitude for one hundred years as merciless and grinding as Ireland is subjected to now by the dominion of England.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, perhaps in justice to Mr. Adams I ought to put his statement on record here. Mr. Adams testified before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and, upon a suggestion that there had not been very much reduction of rates west of Chicago, he said:

> I think there has. The reductions in rates on the Union Pacific since I have had to do with it have alarmed me, they have been at once so incessant and so heavy.
>
> Senator PLATT. Do you mean rates for through business or for local business?
>
> Mr. ADAMS. For all business. Mr. Kimball can answer better than I. But I am under the impression that within the last year and a half all our rates have undergone a reduction of something like 33 per cent.
> Mr. KIMBALL. From 25 to 33 per cent., taking the average.

I do not know anything about that; but I think when the Senator made the statement that there had been no reductions I ought to put Mr. Adams's statement on record at the same time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will say to my friend in that connection that there may have been some little reduction to competitive points. The Senator from Connecticut discovered that west of the Missouri River about fourfold rates were charged for telegraph and railroad service as east of the Missouri River.

Mr. PLATT. Has not the Legislature of Nebraska reduced passenger rates down to 3 cents a mile where formerly they were as much as 8?

Mr. VAN WYCK. A number of years ago they were 8. I remember when the thing was started, when my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] and myself were in the other House, to reduce the passenger rates on the Union Pacific Railroad, and strange as it may appear the proposition carried in the House. They had not the same confidence in the Senate which I suppose my friend from Vermont would intimate they have to-day, and therefore they did not wait for the action of the Senate; they reduced the rates themselves, and they kept reducing down until two or three years ago they were 4 cents a mile. I will say to my friend from Connecticut that the Legislature had been working at them trying to reach their conscience, but they could not until the Legislature finally passed a law reducing the fare to 3 cents. Then they ran an imaginary line through the State of Nebraska, and west of that line allowed the roads to charge 4 cents a mile.

It is not necessary now to discuss this question. It will be more pertinent hereafter. The people living to-day west of the Missouri River are subjected to rates fourfold those east of the Missouri River. With the mountains of debt that you propose to continue for nearly one hundred years there never can be any hope of relief to the people west of the Missouri River. What Mr. Adams has done or can do I do not know. I should like to put the strong hand of the law in this branch and on the Legislature of Nebraska and other Legislatures to see that the rates are properly reduced. But at all events they were in that attitude; they were begging of Congress, they were complaining that under the terms of the act money was properly placed in the Treasury, but it was drawing so small interest that they said to the people of Kansas and Nebraska and of the Territories, "If we can use this money in the Treasury, if we can make it as secure in the construction of branch railroads, let us do it."

The people of Nebraska desired it; the people of the Territories desired it; and I did draw a bill in which I provided not that the Union Pacific Railroad should build the branches; oh, no, nothing of the kind; I proposed that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior and the president of the railroad should form a board; they should construct the roads, and that they should construct them upon the basis of cash, not a dollar of stock nor a dollar of bonds to be issued except upon the basis of the cash cost of the road. And then I provided certain other things in that bill, and that the rate of charges on the Union Pacific system in the State of Nebraska should not exceed the rates east of the Missouri River. I should very much like to see the Government build roads on that basis.

Mr. PLUMB. Why not allow some other company to build a railroad? Why limit the investment of the Government money to something which is in favor of the Union Pacific Railroad Company? Why not extend it to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, and to the Burlington and Missouri River, and so on?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Burlington and Missouri River Company, or the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Company have any of their money in the Treasury of the United States, put there for the purpose of paying a debt due the United States in the future and it is only drawing 2 per cent. interest, and we may use it to build a branch railroad which will be honestly administered, certainly let it be done.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the money in the Treasury belong to the Union Pacific?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is there to pay the debt of the Union Pacific.

Mr. PLUMB. What debt?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Its debt to the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. Then it is money of the Government.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Money of the Government for the sinking fund, kept there to respond to the debt to the United States when it becomes due. The money is not placed there to be appropriated at once upon the debt due by the railroad company, but it is placed there to take up the debt when it becomes due as far as it will go. If that money can be invested honestly to benefit the people of Kansas and Nebraska and Colorado and the Territories and produce a larger return in revenue than is derived from the interest on the bonds, then certainly there should be no objection from any source to using it as I have proposed.

Mr. PLUMB. All I wanted, inasmuch as the Senator was giving a direction to this discussion, was that he should state why it is that he is not willing to take money out of the Treasury to construct other railroads as well as railroads that benefit the Union Pacific. There are other railroads in the State of Nebraska, and the Union Pacific only forms a small part of the system in Kansas. I want to see if we can not get all the people in the condition of being benefited out of the public Treasury.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I stated to the Senator from Kansas the reason of that. The Union Pacific Railroad is a debtor to the Government for a large amount.

Mr. PLUMB. Why allow the Union Pacific to build railroads out of Government money and not allow other people who pay their taxes to do it as well?

Mr. VAN WYCK. For the reason that under legislation of Congress you have placed a condition from which it never can be extricated. You now propose to extend this mountain of debt one hundred years.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator favor that?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not, by any means.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You ought to have them spend all the money they have now.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, not all of it. Your system will probably be to wind them up in the end, but this money is placed in the Treasury, properly placed there, to respond to the debt when it becomes due; the money is paid by this company for this purpose. Now you want to save this road; that is, you talk, the Judiciary Committee have talked, that they want to save the Government debt; they say they want to save the road from bankruptcy. That is their plea. Therefore it is that they propose to extend the debt seventy-five or one hundred years, from which there can be no escape. That they say is good policy; that is statesmanship, they say, to save the Government debt. Well they have said, and very properly, that a certain per cent. should be placed in the Treasury as a sinking fund to pay the debt when it becomes due. It will not be paid to the Government until the debt becomes due. It lies there to the credit of the Union Pacific Railroad for this purpose. It draws 2 or 3 per cent.

Now, if the Government can be made as secure by the construction of branch roads which are not to be built by the Union Pacific Railroad, but by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and the president of the road, why not? The proposition is that they shall construct them upon certain principles based on honest construction. We have been denouncing the system of stock-watering, which is the one cause of our financial troubles to-day, and that bill proposes as a basis that no stock or bonds shall be issued except upon the actual cost of building. Now you seek, you say, to save the Union Pacific from bankruptcy. They are circumvented on the north and on the south by rival lines, and their territory is invaded and cut off, and unless they have the power to protect themselves by the construction of branches then other railroads must of necessity despoil them by taking away business from the territory which is naturally tributary to them, and what then? That is the attitude, and the people of all that section of country desire it, and in accordance with their wishes I introduced the bill to protect the Government and protect the people by providing that hereafter on the Union Pacific system they should charge no more than the roads between the Missouri River and Chicago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does it protect the Government—if I may interrupt the Senator—that we take out of the Treasury (for that is what it comes to) a couple of millions of dollars to build railroads for the Union Pacific Railroad Company? We guaranteed bonds which are precedent to all the liens of the United States. How does my friend call that a protection of interests of the United States?

Mr. VAN WYCK. What precedence have they of the lien of the United States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bonds have been issued and are guaranteed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. These bonds are no lien except on the branches they build. That is all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But for those branches as far as the money goes it is taken from the Treasury, for that is what it is. These bonds are then lapped on as a mortgage, which overwhelms that much and gives to a mortgage bondholder the right to take those lines as against the United States who put in the bottom money.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I beg my friend's pardon. It is not proposed to first build the branch roads with the money in the Treasury and then put stock and bonds on them, as they have been in the habit of doing, to an equal amount. Oh, no; my friend misunderstands entirely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As little as I know, I think I can read.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I trust my friend will. I trust he will not only read, but see exactly that it is not proposed to build these roads by the Government money and then put stock and bonds on them. Oh, no.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield a moment, as he is speaking in my time?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. I suppose the Union Pacific Company desires the legislation proposed by the bill of which he is speaking?

Mr. VAN WYCK. They do.

Mr. DOLPH. In so far the Senator from Nebraska represents the wishes of the Union Pacific Company?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do.

Mr. DOLPH. I think that would be the certain inference.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, yes; I answer, without any circumlocution, the Union Pacific Railroad Company do desire it, the people of Nebraska desire it, the people of Wyoming desire it, and a portion of the people of Kansas desire it. I am sure now the Senator is answered. It happens at this time that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, driven to the wall as they are, have taken the people a little into their confidence. They are for the first time counseling and advising with the people of Nebraska as to whether they can not——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. They seem to have taken the Senators from that State into their confidence.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, the Senators of that State listen very heartily to the wishes of their constituents, the people, and if the railroad company happens to be in accord with the people they do not resist on that account. Men who have believed with me have been charged with antagonizing railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not heard of that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then my friend does not read. I think the proposition is very plain. My friend misunderstands it entirely. If these branch roads are to be built with the money in the Treasury, there will be no stock and bonds.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have in Vermont several railroads built out of the Treasury at not to exceed the cash cost.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think the citizens of Vermont have been building too many railroads in Western States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You want still more.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; I do. But I would like to get them where the hand of Vermont is not on them. I would like to get them where the capitalists of the East will not seek to wring out from the hardy laborers of the West the last dollar besides actual subsistence, as England does on the ryots in India. If the General Government would build a few roads and not have them stocked and bonded for three times the cost, and then have New England and New York demand that the people who are required to transport over them should pay interest and dividends on three times the money actually invested, it would be well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And yet my distinguished friend, so eager for the interests of Nebraska and its people, while he is willing to take the money of Vermont—Vermont has not any money in any of these roads, for we are a poor people and have no money at all—to take the money of New England (for there is money there that has been earned by labor and is labor in form of accumulated labor) to build roads in Nebraska, will not let the people in Washington Territory have a road built to Puget Sound to connect them with New York city at an expense of a little public land of the United States. If he can only get the money of New England to build his road, that is very well; but to take the mountain land on the Cascade range is quite another thing.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My friend is mistaken there again. It is New England, and I think Vermont especially, that is very heavily embarked in the Northern Pacific Railroad. I think a Vermont man was president of the company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A man born in Vermont, as many other good people have been.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The president of the Northern Pacific Railroad was from Vermont, and of course, being a man of large capital, obtained from great labor, as the Senator says, Vermont gathered around him other Vermont capitalists. There is a large Vermont interest in the Northern Pacific Railroad, and "that is what is the matter."

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does that touch the Cascade question?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will tell you. We gave this munificent donation of land to the Northern Pacific, and Vermont capital was furnished to build the road at a certain time. They did not put a dollar in until they could borrow it. They sold their bonds, and then instead of building railroads they came to Congress and asked an additional law three or four years after their act of incorporation, and they had not thrown a shovelful of dirt; the Vermont capitalists came and asked Congress to allow them to mortgage the road. They got what they asked, as railroads did at that time. In a year or two they came back and said they could not borrow any money on that, that they wanted the law changed, and the law then passed was that they might mortgage not only their road but all their property, even their franchise.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to interrupt the beauty of my friend's discourse, but if it does not disturb him I should like to ask whether he is informed that what he has just said is true, that any Vermont man ever had the slightest interest in the Northern Pacific Railroad Company until Pennsylvania and a good many other people, having been presidents and directors, had failed to build it? It was five or six or eight or ten years, so far as I know, without any Vermont man ever being interested in it at all, and then the Vermont man is a New Yorker, who went from Vermont to California, a most eminent and honorable man, who has devoted his energies to building a highway for the benefit of all the people of the United States from Minnesota to Puget Sound, and which the Senator from Nebraska is now trying to prevent his accomplishing by undertaking to cut off in the heart of these mountains, when everything else is done, a proposed right to some mountain land. That is what the truth is.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Just when the friend of the Senator from Vermont took control of this road I do not know. I knew there was a Vermont man in the presidency of the road for some time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there is now.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understood him to say before that Vermont men did not own railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But he got his money in California and New York.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What I was stating was that in 1864 they had the charter with all this immense donation of land for a road to be constructed in a certain time. In 1869 the company came to Congress and asked that it might be allowed to place a mortgage on its railroad and its telegraph lines. Up to 1869 I think there had not been any work done upon the road—five years. Then in 1870 they came and asked to put a mortgage on all property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, including its franchise as a corporation. That was in 1870. The company was organized in 1864. In 1870 they had done nothing. They got all the authority they wanted from Congress and then they proceeded. They were able when they got that power to borrow some money by mortgage and then they borrowed the money. Then they passed the time for the completion of the road. They passed years and years beyond.

This land was given to the Northern Pacific on the ground that their road would benefit the remaining land and that the benefit to the Government from this donation would be the enhancement of its other property by building the road; but they delayed building the road for reasons best known to themselves, so that it was not completed until the land had become valuable. I think there would be no injustice even now in saying to this railroad company, "Half the grant at the completion of your road is worth more than the whole would have been had you completed the road within the lifetime of the grant."

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much would it have been worth if the road had not been built at all?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Northern Pacific Company had not hedged themselves and surrounded themselves by this immense grant, if we had held it back seven or eight years later, this Government would not have been required to give a donation equal in amount to the one we did give. We gave it because the country was a wilderness.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would not be required to give any at all, probably.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The American citizen went in advance of the road.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And would not that be true in the great and growing State of Nebraska, which through her Senator is now asking Congress to help build railroads there? Would not that be equally true there?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to call attention to what is the very deliberate expression of the Senator's opinion about how railroads should be built as embraced in Senate bill 2395, introduced by him on the 10th of May, 1886; and for the purpose of giving an additional text for him to speak from I will read this bill to the Senate, that we may have the benefit of his mature judgment:

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced the following bill; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill to authorize and empower the Union Pacific Railroad to construct branch roads.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Union Pacific Railway Company is hereby authorized and empowered, for the purpose of constructing branch lines, feeders, and extensions to enable it to secure and hold the traffic and business naturally tributary thereto—

Nothing is said here about the benefit to the people to be derived from it!—

to organize or cause to be organized railway companies under the laws of the several States and Territories into and through which it may desire to build and operate such branch lines and to extend such feeders and extensions, and to aid such companies so organized, and companies heretofore organized for that purpose, and their successors, by subscription to the capital stock, and to gurantee the first-mortgage bonds of said companies—

At this point comes in what the Senator has said about watered stock and overissue of bonds. I desire to have the Senate observe just what he thinks is a protection against evils of that kind:

Provided, however, That such subscription and guarantee of first-mortgage bonds—

That is to say, what the Union Pacific shall issue of their mortgage bonds—shall in no case or under any circumstances exceed the actual cash cost of the roads of said companies—

But it will be observed they may sell all the balance of the stock and all the balance of the bonds to anybody else—

And provided further—

And there is no limit as to the rate of interest the bonds shall bear. They may bear 12, 15, 20, or 50 per cent. if they choose; but the point is that there is no limitation on the amount of bonds, and no limitation on the amount which the Union Pacific may guarantee.

And provided further, That this act shall not authorize the guarantee of any first-mortgage bonds issued prior to the approval thereof. And said Union Pacific Railway Company is hereby authorized and empowered to operate and control the roads of said companies so aided or built as aforesaid, and their successors, either by purchase or lease thereof; but in no case and under no circumstances shall such roads be purchased or leased by said Union Pacific Railway Company except upon the basis of the actual cash cost thereof.

That is a very fine expression, "basis," but whatever that may mean there is no limitation as to the amount to be paid. You may call "basis" $10,000, $12,000, $15,000 a mile; you may make it 50 per cent. of the stock and bonds guaranteed.

And provided further, That such aid by guarantee and subscription shall not be furnished and such lease or purchase shall not be valid until the same shall have been ratified by two-thirds of the stockholders of the said railway companies.

There is some other milk in this very fruitful cocoanut. Section 2 is as follows:

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves to itself the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act when the public interest shall require it; but such repeal shall not affect the validity of any action taken under the power of this act prior to such repeal.

In other words, those companies may be stocked and bonded to just as much as the cupidity of the Union Pacific Railroad may induce them to go; and when they have done that, what is the power of Congress to repeal worth? You can shut the door after everything is stolen, but you can not touch or in any wise impinge upon a single proceeding that has taken place prior to that time. I do not speak of this to complain of it, but I want to have my friend from Nebraska, while he is roaming all over this great field of railroad stock—watering and excessive mortgaging, and so on—take into consideration this little measure that he has offered to the Senate, and while he is scarifying everybody else and denouncing railroads and railroad people and the things they have done to take up a few of the things that have been going on since he came into public life and give the Senate the benefit of his opinion about them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am obliged to my friend for calling attention to this bill. I am very happy for it, because I want attention to the matter and I trust the Judiciary Committee will see to it. I took especial pains to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee. I knew the distinguished Senator from Vermont was chairman, and I wanted it referred to that committee so as to be sure when it came out that it would come out all right.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator was not concerned about how it went in.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No matter so it comes out right. Could I pay a greater compliment to the ability and integrity of my distinguished friend from Vermont? I desired the severe action of his ability on this matter, and so I put the bill in his charge, which would be a guarantee to the people that it would be in all things correct.

Referring to a suggestion from the Senator from Vermont,

Mr. VAN WYCK said: I think there is a ponderosity enough in the Senator mentally and physically to check the momentum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all.

For years upon years there has been a black belt in Oregon and Washington Territory, 120 miles wide, from which the settlers had no protection until the people of Oregon, our Republican brethren in Oregon, the resolution from whose platform I read, and our Republican brethren in Washington have been stretching forth their hands to us and beseeching us that we would forfeit these unearned lands. We have not done it, but we are trying to do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Trying not to do it, I think.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senate will excuse me from going into the argument, because it is just what we are trying to do.

Now as to the Union Pacific, my friend referred to it as a bill to take money out of the Treasury. He says the bill is to allow them to take the money from the sinking fund. The Government is to construct these branch roads; the Government owns them and holds them, giving only to the Union Pacific Company the right to the use of them, and from that right of use to raise a revenue to help extinguish their debt.

We have been told here, and it will be told to you when the funding bill is under discussion by the Senator from Vermont probably and by the Judiciary Committee, that we must adopt the funding bill. Why? Because the Government does not own the branches already built, and it will be in the power of the company to strip the stem of the Union Pacific of the great branches now completed, and therefore we ought to do this in order that the Government may have some claim on the branches. By my bill the branches to be built will be under the control of the Government.

The Union Pacific Company and the people found that they would be benefited by the construction of additional branch roads; but latterly, when appealed to, the company said: "No; our credit can not be used under the act of 1873; our money is tied up in the Treasury." But the people of Nebraska thought it best, and I introduced a bill such as the Senator from Kansas has read, and I had it referred to a committee; and that bill authorizes not the taking of money out of the Treasury, but that they may be allowed to use their credit. The act of 1873, to which I have before referred, said that the railroad company should not use its credit in any way except by permission of Congress. They merely come in under the act of 1873 and ask Congress to allow them to use their credit. The bill was introduced with the view of allowing the corporation to use its credit and, as any other railroad corporation can, to borrow money; but the bill expressly protects the Government and protects the people by providing that under no circumstances shall the road be stocked or bonded or leased or purchased except on the basis of the actual cash cost of the road.

Mr. PLUMB. Read the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Kansas has read it more eloquently than I could have done, and I am content with his reading. It shall not be leased or purchased except upon the basis of the actual cash cost of the road. It will be worth something to get a Congressional declaration that hereafter railroads shall be built upon that basis.

I have now answered all that need be said. I have explained my position, and I certainly have seen no excuse for the attack except that the Senator from Vermont thought it was glaringly inconsistent that a Senator should insist on the forfeiture of all that was due and that at the same time he should be willing to aid a great section of country, not, however, by loaning money or donating lands.

Mr. GEORGE. To whom would the branches belong?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the branches are built with money in the Treasury they would belong to the Government. If built by the credit of the company they would belong to the company.

I now ask pardon of the Senator from Oregon for occupying so much of his time.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senator from Oregon to give way for a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLPH. I yield for that purpose, retaining the right to the floor.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLPH. I will not yield to another suggestion from the Senator from Nebraska for fear he might make a speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After fifty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L.

PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 27th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1394) to provide for the ascertainment of the market value of certain property in the city of Chicago, and to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey said property;

An act (S. 823) granting a pension to Capt. Elihu Jones;

An act (S. 685) granting a pension to Mary Marsh;

An act (S. 983) granting a pension to Michael Daly;

An act (S. 1420) granting a pension to William Powell;

An act (S. 1431) granting a pension to Jane Carr;

An act (S. 1509) granting a pension to William H. Moore; and

An act (S. 1539) granting a pension to Eveline Hunt.

J. D. HAWORTH—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill 1253, entitled "An act granting a pension to J. D. Haworth."

It is proposed by this bill to grant a pension to the claimant for the alleged loss of sight in one eye and the impairment of the vision of the other.

From the information furnished me, I am convinced that the difficulty alleged by this applicant had its origin in causes existing prior to his enlistment, and that his present condition of disability is not the result of his service in the Army.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 28, 1886.

MRS. ANNIE C. OWEN—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill No. 1850, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Annie C. Owen."

The husband of the claimant was mustered into the service as second lieutenant December 14, 1861, and discharged October 16, 1862. It appears that he died in 1876 from neuralgia of the heart. In 1883, the present claimant filed her application for pension, alleging that her husband received two shell wounds, one in the calf of his left leg and one in his left side, on the 1st day of July, 1862, and claiming that they were in some way connected with the cause of his death.

On the records of his command there is no mention made of either wound; but it does appear that on the 8th day of July, seven days after the date of the alleged wounds, he was granted a leave of absence for thirty days on account, as stated in a medical certificate, of "remittent fever and diarrhea." A medical certificate, dated August 5, 1862, while absent on leave, represents him to be at that time suffering from "chronic bronchitis and acute dysentery."

The application made for pension by the widow was rejected by the Pension Bureau February 1, 1886.

There is nothing before me showing that the husband of the claimant ever filed an application for pension, though he lived nearly fourteen years after his discharge; and his widow's claim was not made until twenty-one years after the alleged wounds, and seven years after the husband's death.

If the information furnished concerning this soldier's service is correct this claim for pension must be based upon a mistake. It is hardly possible that wounds such as are alleged should be received in battle by a second lieutenant and no record made of them; that he should seven days thereafter receive a leave of absence for other sickness with no mention of these wounds, and that a medical certificate should be made (probably with a view of prolonging his leave) stating still other ailments, but silent as to wounds. The further facts that he made no claim for pension and that the claim of his widow was long delayed are worthy of consideration. And if the wounds were received as described there is certainly no necessary connection between them and death fourteen years afterward from neuralgia of the heart.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 21, 1886.

REFERENCE OF VETO MESSAGES.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the veto messages of the President of the United States, received by the Senate on the 24th instant on the following bills, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 2186) granting a pension to Louis Melcher;
A bill (S. 363) granting a pension to Edward Ayers;
A bill (S. 1857) granting a pension to Dudley B. Branch; and A bill (S. 1630) granting a pension to James C. Chandler.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY.

Mr. MILLER. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday, June 1.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

George W. Crockett, to be postmaster at Concord, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire.

W. Scott Gillespie, to be postmaster at Kingston, Ulster County, New York.

James F. Elder, to be postmaster at Richmond, Wayne County, Indiana.

Herbert Williams, to be postmaster at North Bend, Dodge County, Nebraska.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

On the 22d of March, 1886, the President nominated to the Senate Herbert Williams to be postmaster at North Bend, Nebr., vice Chauncy W. Hyatt, whose removal is proposed.

The official files containing the papers and documents in the case submitted to the committee by the Postmaster-General disclose the fact that Mr. Hyatt's removal was urged on the ground of "offensive partisanship," and the action taken seems to rest wholly on the political and partisan features of the case.

It appears from the papers and documents in the case that Mr. Hyatt is the editor and proprietor of a newspaper published at North Bend. Several copies of his newspaper were filed in support of the application for his removal. Editorial articles tending to illustrate the offensive partisanship of the editor, whose removal from office was requested, and is now proposed, were indicated by pen and pencil lines drawn around them. In the issue of the newspaper of June 17, 1885, the committee found an article indicated as stated, and here copy it at length, namely:

"Democrats are not offensive partisans, as the following incident will prove: A little boy and girl playing in the yard. The girl finds an apple under the tree, and with an exclamation of delight begins to bite it. 'Hold on,' said the boy; 'throw it away; the cholry is comin', and if you eat that apple you will be took sick, an' you can't talk, an' the doctor will come an' give you some bad medicine, an' then you'll die.' The girl throws the apple down, and the boy, snatching it up, begins to eat it. 'Don't,' the girl cries; 'won't it kill you, too?' 'No,' said the boy, munching the fruit; 'it won't kill boys. It's only after little girls. Boys don't have cholry.'"

It is not difficult to see the point of this offensive article. "Offensive partisanship" does not apply to Democrats. "It's only after" Republicans. Democrats do not have it. It is evident that Mr. Hyatt can not be a very bad man or an inefficient officer when resort is had to such a course to effect his removal. The fact that he has such a keen appreciation of the true character of the oft-paraded reform doctrines of the present times doubtless had no inconsiderable influence in inducing the importunities of the persons who urged his removal.

It appears that the nominee is a person of good character and competent to discharge the duties of the office to which he is nominated. The committee, therefore, recommend that he be confirmed.

Samuel B. Evans, to be postmaster at Ottumwa, in the county of Wapello and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

Samuel B. Evans was nominated December 16, 1885, to be postmaster at Ottumwa, Iowa, vice Augustus H. Hamilton, who was suspended during the recess of the Senate.

The committee requested the Postmaster-General to communicate to it the papers on file in his Department relating to the case. This request was complied with, and on examination of the said papers shows that the suspension of Mr. Hamilton was asked for on the grounds of "offensive partisanship." No other charges appear in the files in possession of the committee, nor does it in any other manner appear that anything has been alleged against him tending in any degree to injuriously affect his character or reputation as a man or his efficiency as an officer.

The nominee appears from the files in the case to be a man competent to discharge the duties of the office. The committee therefore report the nomination of Samuel B. Evans to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate, May 28, 1886.

JAMES MILLENGER.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2036) for the relief of James Millenger; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

DEATH OF SENATOR JOHN F. MILLER.

The call of committees for reports having been concluded, the Speaker laid before the House the following resolutions of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of JOHN F. MILLER, late a Senator from the State of California.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended, to enable his associates to pay proper tribute of regard to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that at some subsequent time I will offer resolutions pertinent to the matter suggested by the resolutions of the Senate just communicated to the House; and now ask unanimous consent that Saturday, the 19th day of June, be set apart for the consideration of such resolutions.

Mr. BEACH. I will ask my friend from California if he will not consent to take an evening session for the consideration of these resolutions?

Mr. MORROW. I could not consent to that, as I do not think it would be a proper observance of such an occasion.

Mr. BEACH. We have now pending very much public business, and I think it is hardly proper to devote a day to the consideration of these resolutions; however, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that as soon as the legislative appropriation bill is disposed of I shall ask the House to take up and consider the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HATCH. I move to dispense with private business for to-day.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. On last Friday the House ordered that the vote on House bill No. 5194, to provide for the settlement of the indebtedness of the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, should be taken to-day immediately after the reading of the Journal. What I desire to ask is, if the motion of the gentleman from Missouri shall prevail if that order will be continued, and if the vote can be taken on this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal on next Friday?

The SPEAKER. That part of the order would necessarily fall with the private business for to-day, because it relates to a particular day; and the bill to which the gentleman refers would come up in its regular order on the next Friday, when business reported from the Committee of the Whole is under consideration by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be properly in order on the next day when private bills come up for consideration on reports from the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That would be the effect of the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the consideration of that bill, or that portion of the special order with reference to it, be continued until next Friday, on which day the vote shall be taken immediately after the reading of the Journal, or before going into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of private business.

Mr. HATCH. Not for consideration, but for its passage.

The SPEAKER. That is consideration; voting upon the bill is consideration.

Mr. DUNHAM. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask this question: Has the previous question been ordered upon the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It has not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. HATCH. I insist now on my motion to dispense with private business for to-day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Does that apply to the night session for the consideration of pension bills?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the House will adhere to the private business.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 90, noes 67.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yesterday I gave notice that the Committee on Appropriations would ask the House this morning to take up for consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Since then that committee has considered the subject, and determined that as a general proposition the consideration of general appropriation bills should not be pressed while a public measure is being considered by the House, and will not ask the House to take up the legislative, &c., bill until the bill now being considered is disposed of, but will then press the appropriation bill for immediate consideration. I will not therefore press the motion to-day, but I will ask the House to take it up as soon as the present bill is disposed of.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, there were on a division—ayes 99, noes 30.

So the motion was agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8328.

If there be no further amendment to the second paragraph of the third section the Clerk will read the third paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Retail dealers in oleomargarine shall pay $48. Every person who sells oleomargarine in less quantities than 10 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in oleomargarine. And sections 3232, 3233, 3234, 3235, 3236, 3237, 3238, 3239, 3240, 3241, and 3243 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are, so far as applicable, made to extend to and include and apply to the special taxes imposed by this section, and to the persons upon whom they are imposed: Provided, That in case any manufacturer of oleomargarine commences business subsequent to the 30th day of June in any year, the special tax shall be reckoned from the 1st day of July in that year and shall be $500.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph of the section. I move to strike out the proviso to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is an amendment to the fifteenth line by the gentleman from Virginia to strike out "forty-eight" and insert "twenty-five."

The gentleman from Georgia is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND. I submit the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. Chairman, this paragraph of the section adopts various sections of the code which regulate the sales of intoxicating liquors, malt liquors, tobacco, and cigars. Section 3237 of the Revised Statutes declares that the fiscal year in these matters shall commence on the 1st day of May; and that every such business beginning after the 1st day of May shall pay its tax in proportion to the fractional part of the year during which the business shall be in operation.

Now, in the first paragraph we place a tax of $600 on manufacturers, which means a tax for one year. This proviso declares that if the business be begun after the 30th day of June the manufacturer shall pay $500 for protection during the year. If it were only one day, he would have to pay $500. For one week, for one month, for two months, it is all the same—$500. Now, if this be really a bill to collect revenue, if it be really a bill to put this article under the same regulations as are applied to the other internal-revenue taxes, this proviso as to the $500 is wrong and the general law that allows the pro rata of the annual tax according to the number of days or months used by the manufacturer is right; and the proviso should be stricken out.

Mr. VAN SCHAICK. I desire to have a telegram read from the Knights of Labor of Milwaukee.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 27, 1886.

Hon. J. W. VAN SCHAICK, M. C., Washington:

At a meeting to-day of the executive board of Assembly No. 3567, Knights of Labor of Milwaukee, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas a bill is pending in Congress to place a tax of 10 cents per pound on oleomargarine or butterine; and

"Whereas the adoption of such a measure would destroy the manufacture of a cheap and wholesome article of food, thus increasing the cost of living:

"Be it hereby resolved, That the executive board of Assembly 3567, Knights of Labor, do most earnestly protest against the adoption of such a bill, and pray Congress to defeat it, believing that this proposed tax is asked simply to further the dairy interests, to the injury of the people at large.

"Resolved, That copies of resolution be sent to our Representatives in Congress."

JAMES J. McNALLY,
Chairman Executive Board.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I rise to oppose the amendment. I propose not only to oppose this amendment, but any other amendment to any part of this bill. I regard the whole bill as a fraud, and all amendments as simply aiding to carry out that fraud. It professes to be a bill in the interest of the farmers, while in fact it is a bill in the interest of a few rascally dairymen around the big cities who notoriously water their milk and make mean and nasty butter for the people. It in no sense helps the butter interest, because it is a known fact butter has been increasing in price for a number of years.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. It is now 16 cents a pound.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I can not understand how a Democrat can advocate this bill. I remember having heard the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], who seems to be the wet-nurse for this measure, the child of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on more than one occasion denouncing the protection theory as a system of plunder and demagogery, and yet now we find him the standard-bearer of these plunderers and demagogues whom he has denounced for years. What has become of his Democracy? What has become of the principles he has professed here for years? Is it because some of this plunder is going to his people that all his principles of Democracy have fled from him, and he is willing to become the leader in the advocacy of a measure the most infamous ever introduced into the American Congress?

The gentleman from Missouri has been here session after session denouncing the internal-revenue system as a system of spies and oppression on the people; and now forsooth he wants to perpetuate this system and put the spies around the home of every old woman in the country. [Laughter and applause.] He has talked here of the oppression of the Federal courts, and yet he drags the people from their domestic hearths miles away that he may carry through this monstrous fraud on the American people, and that at the very time when the high price of living is disturbing and destroying all American interests; when the laborers of the country are demanding increased wages that they may live. At such a time these people are legislating to add 10 cents a pound to this article that the overgrown monopolists may fatten upon the oppression of the people. And that comes from a Democrat—a man who has proclaimed himself a free-trader. He comes forward as the advocate of the protection of one industry against another.

That these gentlemen are not honest in their effort to pass this bill is apparent. It is not to promote the health of the people that this measure is urged. We offered amendments here to apply this test to all food and all commodities, but these gentlemen do not want that. They are willing to let a man sell rot-gut whisky under a retail license of $25 a year. But those who want to sell a healthy food to the poor man to eat must pay $48. A man may manufacture mean whisky by paying a tax of $100. But the man who manufactures food for the laborer must pay $600 a year. The tax in this bill is $600 for the manufacturer, $480 for the wholesale dealer, and $48 for the retail dealer.

You propose to brand this food and make the tax on traffic in it ten times as much as the tax on the traffic in whisky. And yet this is called a Democratic measure, and it is offered here by a Democratic committee and advocated persistently by Democrats.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if I were allowed to tell the names of members of Congress who have told me openly on this floor that they knew this bill was infamous and monstrous, and they ought not to vote for it but they were afraid to vote against it, I would make a revelation that would startle the country and show the people how hollow this mockery is.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Oh, give us the names.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not propose to do it. [Cries of "Names!" "Names!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 113, noes 29.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not required. The committee determines to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills raising revenue; and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the paragraphs and amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by making the time twenty minutes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to make it half an hour. I trust the gentleman from Missouri will allow me to make a suggestion. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia and several others offered here are practical, serious amendments, and I think they ought to be considered by this House. I am in favor of the object and purpose of this bill; but I think these amendments ought to be considered with some little deliberation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my motion, and now move that all debate on the pending paragraphs and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes; and on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Pending that, the gentleman moves that all debate upon the paragraph under consideration and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes, and upon that he demands the previous question.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] allow me a suggestion. An attempt was made yesterday to advance this bill by limiting debate from time to time, and the result was that we had only about twenty minutes' debate during the day and made only about six lines progress in the bill. I would like to state to the gentleman——

Mr. HATCH. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. HATCH; and there were—ayes 99, noes 30.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 180, nays 46, not voting 96; as follows:

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. EDEN with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. PIRCE.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, with Mr. RICE.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. MCKENNA.

On political questions:

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. OSBORNE.

Mr. MCRAE and Mr. PERKINS were announced as paired until Tuesday next. If present, Mr. PERKINS would vote for the pending bill; Mr. MCRAE against it.

Mr. DINGLEY and Mr. DUNN were announced as paired until Tuesday next. If present, Mr. DINGLEY would vote for the bill; Mr. DUNN against it.

The following-named members were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. MORROW with Mr. WISE.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. HERMAN.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HATCH. Before the question is put, allow me to say I have been notified by the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Ohio that there are one or two sections of the Revised Statutes—probably more—enumerated in this paragraph on which they desire to speak. I therefore ask unanimous consent of the House to amend my proposition so as to limit debate to thirty minutes instead of ten.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to say I have made no such request.

Mr. HATCH. I referred to the gentleman's colleague.

Mr. HAMMOND. Allow me to state that I moved to amend this motion so as to allow twenty minutes; a gentleman on the other side moved thirty. I was willing to accept anything in the shape of a modification before the roll was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to modify his motion by striking out "ten minutes" and inserting "thirty minutes." If there be no objection the motion will be regarded as agreed to in that form.

There was no objection.

The question recurring on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the motion was agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The pending amendment was to strike out the following proviso at the end of section 3:

Provided, That in case any manufacturer of oleomargarine commences business subsequent to the 30th day of June in any year, the special tax shall be reckoned from the 1st day of July in that year, and shall be $500.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto is limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in discussing this amendment I desire to resume the line of argument I was pursuing when my five minutes expired, a similar amendment being then before the committee. I then stated that if the object of this bill is to regulate a traffic so as to expose a fraud and enable the consumers of this country to know what they are buying and what they are eating, unjust and extravagant taxation is not needed. Let us bear constantly in mind that if oleomargarine is the thing which it has been described to be by gentlemen who affect to know—if it is of such a character as suggests the presence of trichinæ and tape-worms—if it is of such character when known that the gorge rises at the sight of it, then every sensible man on this floor knows perfectly well that it is only necessary for the protection of the producers and consumers of butter that this counterfeit should be offered in the market for what it really is—oleomargarine.

The opposition to this industry grows out of the fact that from its inception this article has been a corsair, a pirate upon the high sea of commerce; that it has not for an hour sailed under its own flag; that you could not trace oleomargarine a hundred yards from the factory, while you could trace butter from the dairy or the cottage or the cabin where it was made to the table of the consumer. By the fraud practiced by those who make and sell it as butter oleomargarine has placed itself under the ban, has been outlawed, and for that reason the incidental benefit which this bill brings and to which I have referred is of great importance.

Is it the proposition of this House to tax oleomargarine simply and only because it can be used as a substitute for butter? There is not a man on this floor who would propose such a thing. There is not a man on this floor who does not know it would be unconstitutional to do so. The country simply asks that oleomargarine shall be retired to its own reservation and that butter may be permitted by force of its excellent qualities to remain upon its own domain.

Now, if on the other hand it is true that oleomargarine is what it is represented to be by manufacturers and dealers, and honorable men tell me that it is a healthful article of food, though I am not clear that the most of it can possibly be such, else it would not parade itself in a disguise—but if it is so, the fact that it will be used as a substitute for butter and become in its own right a competitor with butter in the market is no reason and no excuse for taxing it out of existence. You might as well tax cream gravy and sauces out of existence, because, forsooth, their use limits the use of butter, and therefore necessarily reduces the price.

What, then, is the object, and aside from the revenue the only proper object, of this bill? Simply to see to it that this corsair upon the high sea of commerce shall either be driven from the sea or else shall sail under its own flag, and with that object I am, I repeat, heartily in sympathy. We have no right to demand anything more. If the purpose is to tax this industry only with a view to its destruction, that purpose ought to find no favor upon either side of the House. We are assured upon all sides, however, that there is no other purpose than to see that we as consumers are not daily defrauded and the dairy industry cheated by this counterfeit butter.

I have no sympathy with the suggestion which asserts that we shall not regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine under the revenue power, because forsooth it is the poor man's food. I am poor enough myself; I have many relatives who are poor, many friends who are poor, many constituents who are poor. But none of us are so poor that we have not the humble right to know what we are eating at our tables and what food we are giving our children. None of us are so poor that we are willing to be fed with the offal from the slaughter-houses of this country, as some gentlemen have asserted oleomargarine to be. None of us are so poor in privilege that we dare not demand and insist upon the right to know what we buy in the markets of our country. And we have the right to insist that we shall receive the precise article of food that we buy and pay for. None of us are so poor that we will not insist on our right as free men to tear the mask of hypocrisy from oleomargarine and make it stand for what it is. And we have the equal right to purchase it for what it is, and eat it knowing what it is, if we are satisfied that it is clean and wholesome for food.

The intimation that in order to heartily support the avowed object of this bill—which is to unmask fraud and forbid by penal laws the commission of the wrong that has been for years practiced by the dealers in counterfeit butter—one must advocate the enormous tax fixed in the bill is stupid, if not worse. The thing to be done is one thing, the manner of doing it quite another.

Mr. FINDLAY obtained the floor.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wanted to say just a word about this amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINDLAY. I am sorry I can not yield my friend a part of my time; but I have very little.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman is generally so good-natured——

Mr. FINDLAY. Generally I am; but just at this time I can not exercise my good nature. I am sorry for it.

Mr. Chairman, a day or two since I offered in comparative good faith, I will not say absolute good faith, an amendment to this bill, the object of which was to broaden the remedial effect of the bill.

On examining the bill I found there was no restriction on the exportation of oleomargarine, and I put an amendment in for the purpose of providing that none of this stuff should be shipped to any port included within Her Majesty's East Indian possessions where reside the sect known as Parsees. It will be seen at once why this should be done. That sect has a very peculiar form of burial, the particulars of which I will not recite; but before the dead body of the Parsee is taken out to his last home to be deposited on the top of the Tower of Silence the priest is called in, and he takes some clarified butter, or ghee, as it is called, and he greases the dead man's face all over; and then he calls the dog of the house in, and if the dog licks that man's face it is a sign he has gone to heaven. [Great laughter.] But if he does not lick him, it is a sign equally infallible he has gone to the other place. [Renewed laughter.]

A MEMBER. What other place?

Mr. FINDLAY. I will imagine this condition of affairs. Suppose by a mistake this man should happen to be greased with oleomargarine, there is not a dog in creation that would lick him. [Great laughter.] And therefore I offered an amendment for the purpose of restricting the exportation of this article.

But, sir, in all seriousness, I am opposed to this bill. I am opposed to it mainly and chiefly because I believe the most iniquitous systems of taxation ever devised, or within the inventive power of man to devise, is the internal-revenue system. [Applause.]

I am in favor to-day of repealing the tax on tobacco and on cigars, a thing which is entirely feasible, for I have the authority of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that while it is not feasible to get rid of the whole system of internal-revenue tax, yet it is entirely feasible to get rid of the tax on tobacco and cigars. As I understand him that tax on tobacco and cigars is about equal to the surplus revenue we wish to reduce.

Yet in the face of that fact we are confronted with a bill which not only proposes to extend this system, but make it applicable to a particular class, that is to bring all the farmers of the land within its range, and also to raise a revenue in the very teeth of the assertion of the Committee on Ways and Means and its chairman that no revenue is needed, but on the contrary we ought to reduce the revenue.

Here is an iniquitous bill, which proposes to subject the agricultural class of this country to informers, spies, and detectives. Do not make the mistake, gentlemen, that informers, spies, and detectives are simply to roam through Mr. Armour's factory in Chicago or other places where this article is made, but they will go into the country; and why will they go there? Will any man say that this article, which is called neutral, is not now used to a certain extent by persons who are engaged in the production of butter? And if information is lodged anywhere of suspicion as to that, then your farmer becomes immediately subject to the surveillance of the horde of informers, spies, and detectives.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FINDLAY. Can not I get three minutes more?

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, a word in reference to the situation of this bill. It is at the head of the Calendar. An appropriation bill, a revenue bill, the bill reported by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], and the bill of my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] are all upon the Calendar, but the pending bill is ahead of them all, and you can not put it aside without a yea-and-nay vote on record in this House. [Applause.]

And more than that, you can not make an amendment to this bill but it will have to be done by a yea-and-nay vote in the House. And the Committee on Appropriations has kindly extended a helping hand to the bill here to-day. [Applause.]

Now, in view of all these facts I desire to say the wit, the invective, the filibustering of the bull-butter man, of the hog-fat-butter man, of the soap-grease-butter man can not drive the farmer out of court. [Laughter and applause.] The agriculturists and dairymen are here, and I hope and trust they are here to stay until they have had due action and consideration of this bill. [Applause.]

One thing more, and I am done. The Committee on Agriculture, after full consultation with the representatives of the dairy interest and with members of the House favorable to the protection of that interest, unanimously reported this bill, and the friends of this legislation are in honor obliged to aid in its passage. Whenever the Committee on Agriculture wish to change any of the provisions of this bill I shall for one vote with them, and I propose in voting to stand by this bill letter by letter, line by line, section by section until I receive a sign from the chairman of that committee, until it is passed. [Applause.] I say to the friends of this measure, let us concentrate our force on the bill as it is and back up the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, for in that way only can we hope for favorable action from the House.

One word more to gentlemen on the other side of the House. If I desired you to make a mistake in reference to this matter I would pray you to defeat this bill by filibustering tactics. Seven and one-half millions of the people of the United States are interested in it. The curtain is rung up and we are performing before them; they will examine our record; the people are noting our votes here, as they have the right to, and our action, and commenting upon it. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer two amendments which I send to the desk, and will ask presently to have them read.

I have no doubt in the world that what the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] says is precisely true. He and those who are with him in favor of this bill are, no doubt, now performing in view of the seven and one-half millions of people of whom he speaks for the purpose of catching as many of their votes as he can.

But, Mr. Chairman, whether that performance shall receive the applause which the gentleman hopes it will receive hereafter is a question which I will remit to the future.

The amendments which I offer are mainly for the purpose of obtaining more information with reference to the bill and are offered in good faith. Eleven sections of the Revised Statutes are enumerated in this paragraph of the bill. One of these enumerations makes two other sections of the statutes part of them, so that there are in reality thirteen sections made a part of the bill.

These sections provide among other things the duty imposed upon the Internal Revenue Commissioner to furnish stamps. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture or somebody who has the information what is the estimated expense that will be required to put this law into operation?

What amount of money will have to be paid out of the public Treasury before anything comes in; I mean expenditure for engraving purposes in the preparation of the stamps? There has been no estimate made, no amount has been submitted, no statement made of the probable expense. Has the committee any information? I pause for an answer—for information.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, it has not been my purpose to occupy a single moment of the time of the committee in any reply to the many criticisms which have been made upon this bill or any portion of it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am making no criticism, but ask a single question: What is the information the gentleman has upon the subject, if any? Does the gentleman know how much money is involved in the matter of putting this law into operation?

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me, as he has made an inquiry, I will undertake to answer it. If he prefers that I shall not answer it I will take my seat.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Certainly I want the gentleman to answer the question if he has the information, but not to make a speech.

Mr. HATCH. I can only answer the gentleman in my own way, and if that is not satisfactory to the gentleman from Kentucky he can occupy his own time, and I will take other occasion to answer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Has the gentleman from Missouri the information as to the amount of money involved? If so, how much is it?

Mr. HATCH. I have information from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, upon the preparation of this bill, that not one single dollar of appropriation is necessary to carry it into execution and to execute it should it become a law. But two single officers are asked for in this bill, and it makes provision for them; that is to say, a microscopist and a chemist of the Department, the salaries of which are fixed by the bill, and which will be paid out of the revenue derived from the bill—from the execution of the law—as well as the tax and all other matters pertaining to it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. And let me interrupt the gentleman from Missouri to say that an estimate has been made by a gentleman on this floor, Mr. PRICE, of Wisconsin, that the net revenue derived from the bill will range from eighteen to thirty millions of dollars.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The answer of the gentleman from Missouri is precisely like the bill. It fails to give any definite information, and is a mere matter of vagueness, for it is absolutely certain that these stamps must be prepared, and it will require money, as we know from experience, to provide them.

Mr. FINDLAY. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing is expected to do it out of the appropriations made for that purpose. It will cost that much certain.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I now yield the remainder of my time, if any, to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining, in which time the Chair will cause the amendment sent up by the gentleman from Kentucky to be read, after which the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia in his own right.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is it in order; and, if so, I will ask to have read the sections of the Revised Statutes to which reference is made in this section?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order at this time; and the Chair will direct the Clerk first to read the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky:

The Clerk read as follows:

First amendment: Strike out in lines 22 and 23 the words "thirty-two hundred and thirty-eight."

Second amendment: Strike out in lines 24 and 25 the words "thirty-two hundred and forty-three."

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I have proposed two amendments to this bill; one was carried by a majority of this committee, the other was defeated by a very small vote against it. This amendment is proposed because I think it right. The tax for one year is $600. All of our internal-revenue taxes are by the year, or by proportionate parts of the year. For instance, if a man manufactures for half a year in the tobacco business, he pays one-half of the annual tax; if for a quarter of a year, one-quarter of the tax, and so on month by month or day by day.

Now, this proviso is that for any fraction of the year, however small, the manufacturer shall pay $500—$600 for a year; $500 for a day. If gentlemen desire to pass the bill that way, why let them pass it.

I do not know what it means when a gentleman on the other side rises and says if the chairman of the committee gives him a wink, he will vote like a slave. I will not.

Now, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] needs further time he may have the balance of my five minutes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I only desire to say that under the internal-revenue law a manufacturer who commences business during the year is only charged with the fractional part of the year. That is just; and the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia seeks to place this industry, if it shall survive the exposures contemplated in this bill, upon the same footing. In other words, if a man engages in this industry in April there is no reason why he should pay for three months $500, when, under the law which imposes a tax upon the manufacture and sale of whisky, the distiller is allowed to pay for a fractional part of the year. There is no excuse for this distinction, and no man here can persuade even himself it is a just provision, unless he says the only object and purpose of this bill is to destroy this industry whether it is good or bad.

The only object and purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] is to place this industry on precisely the same footing, giving it no advantage over that enjoyed by the distiller of whisky and of other spirituous liquors and compounds.

Mr. LYMAN. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LYMAN. Among these sections of the Revised Statutes that are here made applicable is there a section that provides for the fractional part of a license for the fractional part of a year.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir; and that is the reason why this proviso is added.

Mr. HAMMOND. Section 3237 makes the payment fractional for all other things.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. That is the reason why this proviso is added. It is in order to establish a different rule in regard to this industry from that which prevails in regard to all other industries prosecuted under the internal-revenue law. That seems to be unjust; and if there is a feline in this meal that proviso discloses the size and character of the animal.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that when butter is as low in price as it is now it is not likely there will be any oleomargarine made in the summer. And we thought if a man makes a million dollars a year out of this business he should not be licensed for less than $500. He is not likely to run the factory a whole year.

Mr. HAMMOND. This proviso provides for the case of a man starting the business in July,

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. And in that case he only pays $500 for the balance of the year. He does not pay $600 and then $500.

Mr. HAMMOND. Everybody knows that.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. He pays $500 if he engages in the business for three months.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir, or for three hours.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. He can take out a license and he can get out as much of this article in one month at the end of the year as he might otherwise do in a whole year.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is a strange business in which a man can make as much in one month as he can in twelve months.

Mr. FINDLAY. Suppose a person goes into the business on the 1st of July and continues in business for the remainder of the year, he only pays $500; whereas the man who went in on the 1st of January pays $600.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. If a man runs the business for a year the year begins on the 1st of May.

Mr. FINDLAY. Is that fixed in the bill?

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. The year under the internal-revenue law commences on the 1st of May.

Mr. FINDLAY. The license year begins on the 1st day of May. But where does that appear in this bill?

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. That is fixed in the sections of the Revised Statutes enumerated in this section of the bill.

Mr. FINDLAY. I would like to hear the section which is referred to read. If the law does not appear on the face of this bill but is in the Revised Statutes, and is put in here by reference merely to those Revised Statutes, I think we ought to know what those sections are.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. So far as this point is concerned the year commences on the 1st day of May. A man engaged in this business would pay $600 for a whole year, but for any period less than a year he would pay $500.

Mr. FINDLAY. I understand that; but there is nothing on the face of the bill to show that you had fixed the annual period for the manufacturer's license.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. We have put the whole thing under the internal-revenue law.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is by a statute which does not appear here.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether his amendment strikes out from this enumeration section 3237 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. Not at all.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You simply propose to strike out the proviso at the end of section 3?

Mr. HAMMOND. That is all.

Mr. LYMAN. Is there not an amendment striking out some of the other sections?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the Clerk to read the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 24 and 25 of section 3 strike out the words "thirty-two hundred and forty-three;" also, in line 22, strike out the words "thirty-two hundred and thirty-eight."

Mr. LORE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Delaware for the remainder of the time, one minute and a half.

Mr. LORE. I thank the Chair, but I will wait for another time.

The CHAIRMAN. If no gentleman desires to occupy the remaining time the Chair will cause the Clerk to read the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following proviso:

"That in case any manufacturer of oleomargarine commences business subsequent to the 30th day of June in any year, the special tax shall be reckoned from the 1st day of July in that year, and shall be $500."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 22 the words "thirty-two hundred and thirty-eight."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, is it in order now to demand the reading of the sections of the Revised Statutes which are referred to in that paragraph?

Mr. HATCH. Regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have risen to a parliamentary inquiry. I ask the Chair if it is not in order and if I have not the right to demand that the sections of the Revised Statutes which we are acting upon in connection with this paragraph shall be read. This section of the bill includes eleven sections of the Revised Statutes; one of those includes, by reference, two more. Now, is it not in order to ask to have those sections read, so that the House may know just what it is acting upon?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that as the section covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is mentioned specifically in the bill the gentleman is entitled to have it read. The gentleman will please send the section to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out all these sections, and ask that they be read.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will it be in order after the amendments now pending are voted upon to offer an amendment to line 17, which precedes this part of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to offer his.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, offered the following amendment:

In line 17, section 3, strike out "10" and insert "50;" so that the provision will read:

"Every person who sells oleomargarine in less quantities than 50 pounds at one time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in oleomargarine."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now entertain the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I did not ask to have these sections read merely for delay, and I withdraw the motion.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I renew the motion, in order that the House may know what it is voting on. These sections of the Revised Statutes are referred to by number, but they have not been read in connection with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky referred to one section.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Kentucky changed his amendment so as to include the several sections referred to in the bill. I think those sections of the Revised Statutes ought to be read, so that we may know what penalties we are fixing by this bill to be enforced in the Federal courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directed the section of the Revised Statutes referred to in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to be read, as that section was specially brought before the committee, but if it is the purpose to insist upon all these sections being read, the Chair thinks that does not come within the privilege of the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is in the nature of debate, and debate has been closed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before the Chair rules I would like to make this suggestion. If it is in order, upon moving to strike out one section, to have that section read, it certainly must be in order, under the same rule, when a motion is made to strike out other sections, to have those sections read. I am unable to see how you can have one section read as a matter of privilege, and can not have the others read. Now, I do not urge this for the purpose of delay. Here we have a bill which imposes heavy penalties; those penalties can be enforced only in the Federal courts, which are generally at a considerable distance from the homes of the litigants, and I think it is of great importance, if we undertake to fix penalties, that the full purport of the bill in this respect and the extent and degree of those penalties shall be known.

The CHAIRMAN. The previous decision of the Chair was simply to the effect that, in order to get a better understanding of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], the section to which this amendment referred might be read, but upon a more careful examination of the provisions of this section and of the rules the Chair is of opinion that a reference to the Revised Statutes in a pending measure does not entitle the committee, as a matter of right, to have that portion of the Revised Statutes read before the vote is taken; because it is to be presumed that members know what the law is; and the Chair thinks that to have anything read in such a case is in the nature of debate.

Mr. FINDLAY. That presumption, the Chair will allow me to say, is never applied to the statute law. This has been recognized ever since the time of Lord Coke, who said that a lawyer who would give an opinion upon a question as to the statute law without first examining it was a fool, as a lawyer who could not give an opinion about the common law without first examining it was equally a fool.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was perhaps inclined to go too far in presuming that all the members of this House understand what the law is; but with respect to this question, which has been debated at some length, he thought himself at liberty to presume that the provisions of the law were understood.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a question of order. I submit whether the rules of the House do not require that all amendments presented should be in writing. Therefore, if the gentleman from Kentucky desires to insert the Constitution of the United States or all the provisions of the Revised Statutes in his amendment, I submit whether the rules of the House do not require him to reduce such provisions to writing and submit them with his proposition.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Whether or not this House is presumed to know the Constitution, I wish to say I have not moved to amend by inserting the Constitution, nor have I offered a single section of the Revised Statutes. My motion was to strike out a part of the pending section; so that the point which the gentleman makes is one which he ought to make against the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HATCH], and not against me.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire as a parliamentary inquiry to ask whether, if the gentleman from Kentucky desires to make a motion to strike out, the rules of the House do not require him to submit in writing what he desires to have struck out.

Mr. FINDLAY. He has done that.

Mr. SCOTT. Let him put in his amendment the provisions of the statute which he proposes to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did put my amendment in writing, so that I am not obnoxious to the criticism of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The shoe is on the other foot. I commend to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture the lecture which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has just read, and I hope it will be profitable.

Mr. WILSON. I make the point of order that if the gentleman from Kentucky has offered the Constitution as an amendment to this bill it is not germane. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. "That is so."

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a point of order. I understood that by order of the House all debate upon this paragraph was limited to thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is already exhausted.

Mr. PRICE. Then I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], however, rose to a question of order, which the Chair will dispose of. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to renew the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes, sir; that was my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22 strike out "thirty-two hundred and thirty-eight," and in lines 24 and 25 strike out "and thirty-two hundred and forty-three."

Mr. McMILLIN. I offer this amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was addressing myself to the point of order. I desire to have the sections read.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the point of order pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks as a matter of right that the sections referred to in his amendment be read.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object. That is in the nature of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Tennessee is not entitled as a matter of right to have the sections of the Revised Statutes read before the vote is taken.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will do myself the justice to say in the presence of those who have this bill in charge that it was not my purpose to delay the proceedings. I really thought it proper to have the sections read. If that can not be done, I insist on my motion to amend by striking out.

Mr. LORE. I rise to a point of order. I understand that the Chair has decided this question, and no gentleman can contest that decision unless he takes an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been decided. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee to strike out the language which has been read.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 18, noes 84.

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. McMILLIN and Mr. HATCH were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 22, noes 136.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no desire to force a call of the roll, and will not insist further on the point that no quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being withdrawn, the amendment is rejected. There being no other amendment to this section, the Clerk will report the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That every person who carries on the business of a manufacturer of oleomargarine without having paid the special tax therefor, as required by law, shall, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be fined not less than one thousand and not more than five thousand dollars; and every person who carries on the business of a wholesale dealer in oleomargarine without having paid the special tax therefor, as required by law, shall, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be fined not less than five hundred nor more than two thousand dollars; and every person who carries on the business of a retail dealer in oleomargarine without having paid the special tax therefor, as required by law, shall, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be fined not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars for each and every offense.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. I have thus far sustained, and will continue to sustain, the efforts of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to secure final action on this bill. I find myself, however, differing from the extreme views of some who are opposing and some who are favoring this bill. I am opposed to legislation which will suppress any legitimate industry in this country. At the same time I am unwilling to see any legitimate industry struck down and destroyed by fraudulent imitations of its products sold without restriction in the markets.

I am not opposed to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in good faith as such, but I believe it to be wrong to permit that article to be manufactured as a counterfeit of pure dairy butter and fraudulently sold under the pretense that it is butter. I wish to see preserved all the provisions of this bill which will compel a disclosure of the nature of the substitute for butter in its manufacture and sale and thereby protect the producer and consumer from imposition. This is a free country and any citizen should enjoy the privilege of knowingly purchasing and eating oleomargarine if he desires to do so, but it is a country of law and justice, therefore deception and fraud in our food product should be prevented.

In other words, I am in favor of legislation which will compel the manufacturers of oleomargarine to place it on the market under its true name and real character; but I am opposed to legislation which will prohibit its manufacture. While by the employment of deleterious and uncleanly ingredients in its manufacture it is often unwholesome, yet I believe the article is sometimes made honestly and wholesomely and that when so made it is a proper article for commerce. It is wrong, however, to permit the manufacturers of oleomargarine to perpetrate a fraud upon the producers of pure butter and those who may desire the pure article. This can be most effectually prevented by bringing its manufacture and sale under the provisions of the internal-revenue laws and the vigilance and power of the officers of the Internal Revenue Bureau. In this way its true name and character may be exposed and understood, and the counterfeit article may be stripped of its fraudulent pretenses.

At present the manufacturers of oleomargarine by such false representations are securing extortionate profits from the consumer, because it can be manufactured at one-half the cost of the pure article, and they are also undermining and destroying the business of producing genuine butter. Under these circumstances I feel it the duty of the law-maker to intervene.

I find a number of gentlemen on both sides of this House who desire legislation of this character but who are opposed to such a high rate of taxation as the bill provides. I understand some at least who have been stoutly opposing the enactment of this bill are in favor of compelling the manufacturers of oleomargarine to expose its true character, so that the public may not be deluded into its purchase under the supposition it is pure butter.

INJUSTICE TO AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

But before I proceed further in this discussion I wish to say in reply to my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], we have not heretofore had politics injected into this debate, and I hope this will not be done now. But, sir, the warning which that gentleman has given to this side of the House may well be repeated to his own side. If he will ascertain the number of those who resist the passage of this bill under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] he will find the proportion in numbers is as large on his own side as it is on the Democratic side.

Notwithstanding the flings thrown at those who watch and defend the interest of agriculture on this floor, I have no hesitation in standing here to demand its protection from wrong and injustice. I believe the agricultural interest is largely involved in this bill, and therefore I insist it shall have the most careful consideration. Republican Congresses by legislation have protected every interest in the country except agriculture. This is one of the very few measures which have been presented with any reasonable hope of its passage during twenty years past which directly protects or promotes the interest of agriculture.

With the prosperity or distress of the farming classes comes or goes the prosperity of the country. Agriculture is the basis of all wealth, private or public. Wise statesmanship therefore dictates that legislation should not oppress, but, as far as legitimately within its power, should foster and encourage agriculture. Legislation can not control or protect the farmer from misfortunes which come from natural causes. He must look to a higher power for relief from these. But there are evils greater than those inflicted on him by nature. They are evils produced by bad legislation in the interest of monopolies, and which oppress him with onerous and unjust taxation. Now, sir, while agriculture is more deserving than any other interest of any good that may flow from legislation, yet it has suffered more from that source than any other.

I trust the time has arrived when the welfare of the farmer may have consideration in Congress. The Democratic party has ever in the past been the friend of agriculture, and its members have ever professed a desire for its promotion and protection. Indeed, I am gratified to know that as a class they have been faithful to their professions. Since we came into power in this House more careful attention and consideration have been given to the interest of agriculture than it had previously received for twenty years. Indeed, it seemed that railroads, banks, and other corporations held a complete monopoly on the attention of Congress, and that the farmer had been forgotten except when some new way was devised to increase his burdens for the benefit of some form of monopoly. This happy change in Congress has been noticed by others who are deeply interested in the welfare of agriculturists. In the address of Mr. Joseph H. Reall, president of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association before the Committee on Agriculture of this House during this session, he says:

I am much gratified to find so much honest, intelligent interest manifested by members of Congress in agriculture and the interests of the farmer as obtains here. I can see that great progress has been made in this direction, and that the dignity of agriculture and its importance to the country are recognized by the members of both Houses. The farmers have been either unrepresented or misrepresented heretofore.

I have no desire to provoke a political discussion on this question, but I desire to recall to their duty those Democrats who may fail to remember their professions of fidelity to the farming interest and the policy of the party.

THREATENED DANGER TO SMALL FARMING.

Nor do I desire to urge legislation in the interest of one class to the detriment of any other; but, sir, it is our duty to recognize the dangerous tendencies of the times, which, while lessening the prosperity of small farming, are concentrating the ownership of lands and the operation of farms into the hands of the extremely wealthy.

The distribution of our landed estate among the many is the surest means for preserving our free institutions and the promotion of the prosperity of the masses. Whenever the ownership of land in this country comes under the control of corporated capital or of the millionaires the masses of our farming classes will descend to the impoverished and pitiable condition of those of Europe. Then will this country become a land of barons and vassals—of millionaires and paupers. In order to prevent a landed monopoly and an impoverished condition of the farming classes it is necessary that small farms shall yield a profit to those who till them, for when they cease to become profitable or to yield a comfortable living the owners will dispose of them and seek some other occupation for maintenance of themselves and families.

Can it be doubted that the prosperity of small farmers is dangerously threatened by the encroachments of corporated capital? Vast areas of the most fertile soils have been accumulated by a few and converted into enormous farms where the labor is performed by machinery; thereby the cost of production of wheat and other farm products has become so cheapened and the price so reduced that the small farmers can not successfully compete or realize fair profit. It is becoming more painfully apparent every year that the net returns on the capital and labor invested in small farming are growing less and less every year. I shall not now discuss all the causes which in my opinion contribute to this result, but I will assert that among them will be found the effect of the encroachment of corporated capital upon the occupation of the farmer. It is seizing upon and monopolizing various branches of farming. Cattle raising for the market has passed to a large extent from the hands of the farmers into that of the owners of the immense ranches in certain Western and Southwestern States and Territories. The manufacturers of oleomargarine now threaten to take away from them the dairy.

If we can not altogether guard against the evil tendencies of the times by Congressional action, or check the power of corporated capital in its invasion upon the occupation of the farmer, we can at least in the bill before us furnish him with some relief by protecting him from the fraud perpetrated by the counterfeiting of his dairy products.

THE FRAUDULENT PRETENSE OF OLEOMARGARINE.

One of the most serious complaints raised against the traffic in oleomargarine is that it is sold for pure butter, and that it is made in such imitation, in color, smell, and taste, that ordinarily the purchaser can not detect the difference.

QUANTITY OF OLEOMARGARINE MANUFACTURED.

The production of butter is not confined to the large dairies, but is more or less engaged in for the home and market by farmers all over the country. If the counterfeiters of butter are permitted to continue their deceptive practices the result will be heavy loss in the value of cows and in the ruin of the butter trade, for it is clear the farmer and dairyman can not successfully compete with such a perfect counterfeit which is produced at one half the cost of the genuine article. No one questions the fact that this spurious article is sold in immense quantities as genuine butter. Indeed its manufacturers insist in most emphatic terms that they have succeeded in so perfecting the deception that no expert is able without the most thorough chemical analysis to distinguish the difference between the pure and the counterfeit article. The production of oleomargarine has rapidly increased during the last few years. I have before me a report made to this House by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases in the Forty-sixth Congress, which estimated that in 1880 the production was about 100,000,000 pounds. It is now estimated that the production last year reached 200,000,000 pounds. It is supposed that 200,000 pounds are made daily in Chicago.

A little pamphlet just laid on our desks by the opponents of this legislation asserts:

THE TRUTH; READ IT.

A large proportion of the citizens of New York and vicinity have been eating for years past oleomargarine and butterine as butter. At a safe calculation there has been consumed in this vicinity at least or a fifty-pound tub to every man, woman, and child. This is a startling figure.

SEVENTY-FIVE MILLION POUNDS,

IT IS TRUE

your press have said that about all your retail dealers have been selling it, and all of

THE PRESS DON'T LIE

(only a good many about oleomargarine). Some of you have been eating it.

READER, WHY NOT YOU?

A SOLID FACT.

NEW YORK, April 2, 1886.

This market is about cleaned out of eatable butter. About 7,500 tubs per day of the substitutes have been and are now being put on the market. Throw these out and what would be the price of butter to-day?

SIXTY TO SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS PER POUND.

A BUTTER DEALER.

Coming as this does from the friends of oleomargarine, the accuracy of these statements will not perhaps be denied by them.

Statistics show that last year nearly 38,000,000 of pounds of the oil and imitation of butter manufactured from oleomargarine was exported from this country. With these figures before us, who will say that the prosperity of a very important branch of our agricultural industry is not threatened?

IMPORTANCE AND VALUE OF THE DAIRY INTEREST.

It has been asserted by those who have made the investigation that fifteen million milch cows worth $400,000,000 were employed last year in the production of butter and cheese, and that 1,600,000,000 pounds of butter and 400,000,000 pounds of cheese were produced. The product of the dairy in this country has become enormous.

The eminent statistician, Mr. Atkinson, of Boston, states:

There were produced and consumed in this country in 1884 of dairy products, $912,000,000; of bread, $450,000,000; vegetables, $360,500,000; of sugar and sirup, $352,000,000; tea and coffee, $185,000,000; fruit, green and dry, $113,000,000; eggs, $91,250,000; cotton, $300,000,000; pig-iron, $85,000,000; wool, $64,000,000; silver product, $40,000,000. It will thus be seen that dairy products exceed three times the cotton produced in the country, and were more than the combined consumption of tea, coffee, wool, cotton, pig-iron, and the silver produced, all taken together, by $34,000,000.

This shows that our dairy product exceeds three times in value the cotton crop, and is greater than all the tea, coffee, wool, cotton, pig-iron, and silver combined that is produced and consumed in this country. Is it right that this vast industry should be fraudulently supplanted by the manufacture of a bogus article?

The honest producers of butter have no fear of competition with the manufacturers of oleomargarine, provided the manufacture and sale is conducted in such a manner as to expose its true character and name; but it is asserted that not 1 per cent. of the entire product of the counterfeit article is sold to the consumer for what it really is. He buys it under the supposition that it is the genuine article, and he usually pays for it the price of pure butter. This is a fraud on the producer and the consumer.

TERMS OF THE BILL.

It is believed that the bill before us will correct this evil. It is understood that it was prepared by the secretary and solicitor of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association of America. The principal features of the bill require that manufacturers of oleomargarine shall pay a special license tax of $600, the wholesale dealer $480, and the retail dealer $48 per annum for the privilege of dealing in oleomargarine made in imitation of butter, and that a tax of 10 cents per pound shall be assessed and collected from the manufacturer. That it shall be sold in packages marked, stamped, and branded in such a way as to disclose its true character. Severe penalties by fine and imprisonment are provided against violations and evasions of the law, and its execution is placed under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And the ordinary machinery and force of the law governing the production and sale of spirits and tobacco are applied to the production and sale of oleomargarine. The provisions of the bill are not extended to the article except when made and sold in imitation of butter.

I do not favor all the provisions of the bill. I believe some of them to be harsh and oppressive, and therefore I trust the bill will be amended before its final passage. I think the special license tax and the tax of 10 cents per pound are far too high. I therefore favor a reduction in each.

If its production is as great during the ensuing year as it was in the last a revenue of twenty millions would be derived from this article at this rate of taxation.

With our present overflowing Treasury this amount of revenue is unnecessary. All unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. The burden of taxation is already onerous and far too heavy and should be reduced. But in order to bring the regulation of this article under the stringent rules of the internal-revenue law I am willing that a small tax shall be placed on the article, and when the eighth section of the bill is reached I shall offer an amendment reducing the rate of taxation to 2 cents per pound.

It is admitted on all sides that the only power which Congress has to legislate upon this subject is that which is derived from the power of taxation, and therefore it is necessary that some tax shall be laid on the article in order that Congressional action may constitutionally reach it. Two cents per pound will raise ample revenue to defray all the expenses attending the enforcement of the law. With the enormous profits derived from this business it can easily bear this tax if with its exposure the people wish to buy and use it. The object which I desire to see accomplished by this bill is to compel a disclosure of the nature of the article in order that a fraud against the producers and consumers of pure butter may be prevented.

If this article is as wholesome and desirable as is claimed by its producers, it can fairly compete with genuine butter under its true name and color. This is a land of freedom where any one should be permitted to manufacture, sell, or purchase any article of food which is wholesome; but it is a land of law, and therefore the public should be protected from fraudulent impositions. As I have already stated the honest producer of genuine butter has no fear of competition with the manufacturer of oleomargarine if it is sold under its true name. The farmer and dairyman does not or should not ask protection from fair competition, but they have a right to demand that legislation shall protect them from fraud.

I would prefer to leave this question to the legislation of the States; but, like the regulation of interstate commerce, owing to the diversity of the laws of the different States on the subject, it can not be effectually and properly dealt with by State laws, and therefore it becomes necessary to resort to the legislation of the General Government.

THE NATURE AND PROCESS OF THE MANUFACTURE OF OLEOMARGARINE.

Before finishing my remarks I wish to briefly call attention to the nature and process of the manufacture of oleomargarine. It was invented during the Franco-Prussian war by Hippolite Mége, a Frenchman. An eminent authority in Massachusetts friendly to its production describes the process of its manufacture as follows:

It was, according to Hippolite Mége, a demand such as this which led him to investigate the manufacture of a palatable substitute for butter from the fat of animals slaughtered for food. By his investigations he was led to believe that the only difference between butter and beef fat was that the latter contained an excess of stearine. He also came to the conclusion that the taste and smell of ordinary tallow are largely due to the want of care in its manipulation. He therefore prescribed the following method of procedure:

The caul fat was to be taken as fresh as possible and to be thoroughly washed, then chopped fine and rendered with a dilute solution of acid phosphate of lime and the stomach of a pig or sheep at a temperature not exceeding animal heat. (This heat has been gradually raised in reissues of his patent until, at the present time, it reads "at a heat not exceeding 125° F." It is not possible to do good work at a temperature below 116° F.) After the fat is completely liberated by this process it is allowed to stand until the membrane settles; it is then drawn off into coolers and allowed to granulate and to cool to a temperature of about 80° F. The fat is then placed in cotton-cloth press-bags and submitted to a powerful press, the press-room being maintained at an even temperature of 80° F. The oleomargarine thus produced is free from any disagreeable taste or odor. It is in fact a pure tallow oil, suitable for use as an article of food. In this state it makes an excellent substitute for lard.

Such was the process as originally proposed by M. Mége. The process as now followed is much more simple, and omits some of the objectionable features of the Mégé process.

In the first place, the fat, which is received warm from the slaughter-house, is sorted over, and all bloody pieces thrown out; it is then at once placed in cold fresh water, where it is thoroughly washed. From this water, which not only washes it but serves to cool it, it is at once taken to hashing-machines similar to the ordinary sausage-cutters, where it is cut into fine pieces. From these machines it falls at once into the rendering tanks, where it is rendered at a heat varying from 160° to 200° F., the object being to separate as quickly as possible the fat from the membrane. No "gastric juice" or phosphate of lime is used. After the fat is well cooked a quantity of salt is added; this serves to separate the membrane more completely. After standing a few minutes the fat is then run off into barrels or other vessels, where it is allowed to settle and is crystallized. When it has cooled to about 95° to 100° F. it is pressed in the usual manner.

After pressing, the oil is churned with milk or buttermilk, some genuine butter being frequently added; it is colored properly, and then run into ice-water or pounded ice, so as to prevent its crystallization. After this operation it is worked as ordinary butter.

When well made it is a very fair imitation of genuine butter, being inferior to the best butter, but much superior to the low grades of butter too commonly found in the market.

IS OLEOMARGARINE WHOLESOME?

It is claimed by many that when properly made it is a wholesome and cheap substitute for butter, and that its production should be encouraged.

On the other hand it is asserted by those opposed to its manufacture as an article of commerce that in the manufacture of the article almost any kind of animal fats are used, such as horses and dogs as well as of beef and hogs.

I shall not hazard an opinion as to whether it is always wholesome and a proper food or not. I presume that if made from pure and wholesome materials it is wholesome.

I am inclined to believe that when it is manufactured by a reputable firm like that of Armour & Co., and some others, of Chicago and elsewhere, it may not only be harmless, but a nutritious article of food. I will, however, present the views of some of those who insist that it is otherwise. The committee which reported this bill, in the report accompanying it, declares, in regard to the counterfeit article—

That such imitations are not only disastrous to the dairy interest directly, and to all branches of agricuiture indirectly, but that they are detrimental to public health, being the fruitful cause of dyspepsia and other diseases.

That among the articles and ingredients used in the manufacture of such imitations there are the following: Nitric acid, sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, butyric acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, cureumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry-blood albumen, saltpeter, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, caparic acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame (or benne), turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, cows' udders, sal-soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, broma chloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda.

Several of the gentlemen who have engaged in this debate have asserted that the consumption of oleomargarine has produced Bright's disease of the kidneys and it is otherwise detrimental to health.

ADULTERATED FOOD AND OTHER PRODUCTS.

In truth, Mr. Chairman, there is need for judicious legislation which will guard the public health from the injurious effect which results from the consumption of any food substances in the preparation of which poisonous and deleterious compounds have been used, and also of the manufacture of clothing and other articles; many such unwholesome articles are now in use.

Accompanying the report of the House Committee on Epidemic Diseases in 1881 is much valuable information on the adulteration of food, &c., which was collected by Mr. George T. Angell, of Boston. I ask the attention of the House to a portion of that information, which was furnished by gentlemen of high scientific attainments and reliability. There is much valuable scientific information accompanying that report, relating to a number of articles of adulterated food-products; but not wishing to occupy much time and attention I will only ask leave to present the following extracts:

POISONOUSLY ADULTERATED FOODS AND OTHER POISONOUSLY ADULTERATED ARTICLES IN AMERICAN MARKETS.

[Some of the evidence in paper read by George T. Angell, esq., of Boston, before the Boston Board of Trade, November 11, 1880.]

To give all the evidence I have collected on this subject would require a volume. One paper which I have read upon it filled eleven and a half newspaper columns.

The German Government had in 1878 231,478 samples of different articles analyzed for adulterations, and obtained 3,352 convictions in the courts.

In Great Britain during 1879 about 80 public analysists, appointed under act of Parliament, analyzed 16,772 samples, and detected and exposed 2,978 adulterations.

In other European countries stringent laws are enforced for the protection of public health against the poisonous and dangerous articles which would otherwise be sold in their markets.

The object of this paper is to show that protection is quite as much needed in this country as on the other side of the ocean.

[From Professor George A. Mariner.]

No. 81 CLARK STREET, CHICAGO, October 18, 1879.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your questions, I would say that I have been an analytical chemist to this city twenty-three years; am a graduate of the Lawrence Scientific School, chemical department of Harvard University, and was during two years assistant of Professor Horsford in the laboratory. I have devoted myself entirely to chemical analysis and teaching chemical students ever since. I think I have had much the largest chemical practice of any man in the West. At the request of a highly respectable citizen of Chicago, I have examined fourteen brands of sugar, bought, as I understood, in this city; some granulated, some white, some colored, some coarse, and some fine. I tested them thoroughly for impurities. In twelve of the samples I found tin in the form of a chloride, an active poison. The other constituents I can furnish if you desire. I have examined several sirups made essentially and entirely of glucose, and found in them chlorides of tin, calcium, iron, and magnesia, and in quantities which made them very poisonous. In one case a whole neighborhood was poisoned, and I was told of one death. I have in several cases found sugar of lead in vinegar. I use no vinegar myself. I look with suspicion upon our vinegar. I use fruit acid in place of it—lemon-juice, &c. I never eat pickles. I have found in various cases they were poisoned with lead and copper.

I have tested to some extent the cheap tinware sold in our markets, and have no hesitation in saying that there is great danger in using fruits, vegetables, meats, or fish put up in tin cans of any kind. They are liable to contain lead and tin, both active poisons. Terra alba is largely used in cream of tartar, confectionery, and pretty universally for adulteration. I have found in many baking powders alum instead of cream of tartar—a thing dangerous and injurious in all cases. I should say that I have come to expect adulteration, and to fear dangerous adulteration, in almost every article of the grocery kind. I have had large experience in the analysis of colored poisonous articles of clothing, being employed by one of the largest dry-goods firms of this city. I examined, I think, sixteen samples, and nearly all of them were poisonous. I have also analyzed for other parties. In one case a child nearly died from wearing colored stockings. I would like to add that I have analyzed numerous samples of cosmetics and powders used on the face and hair. Almost all the hair cosmetics, including most of those in common use, I have found to be very poisonous, and many of the face powders and preparations I have found to contain arsenic or lead. I should not be surprised if twenty thousand people in Chicago to-day were injuring their health and endangering their lives by the use of these cosmetics and powders. You can hardly overestimate the present danger to public health from the large and growing sale of poisonous and dangerously adulterated articles in our markets, and you have my thanks and earnest wishes for your success in your efforts to call public attention to this subject. I would say that I have personally known Dr. R. U. Piper, of this city, for more than twenty years. He has no equal in the West as a microscopist, and has had wide experience as a chemist and physician. I should say most decidedly that there is no scientific man in Chicago whose evidence would be entitled to receive higher credit in our courts.

Yours, respectfully,

G. A. MARINER, Analytical Chemist.

GEORGE T. ANGELL, Esq.

[From Dr. R. U. Piper.]

CHICAGO, October 16, 1879.

DEAR SIR: I have no hesitation in saying to you—

First. That I have entirely abandoned the use of vinegar generally sold in our markets, believing it to be unfit for use and dangerous. I know that sulphuric acid is largely used in its manufacture.

Second. I never use the pickles generally sold in our markets. I think the yellow pickles are quite as dangerous as the green. I know that lead is largely used in their manufacture. Verdigris is used in making the green.

Third. I have examined a large number of specimens of oleomargarine, and have found in them organic substances in the form of muscular and connective tissue, various fungi, and living organisms which have resisted the action of boiling acetic acid; also eggs resembling those of the tapeworm. I have them preserved, to be shown to any one who desires to see them. The French patent under which oleomargarine is made requires the use of the stomachs of pigs or sheep. This is probably the way the eggs get in. I have specimens of lean meat taken from oleomargarine. There can be no question that immense amounts of oleomargarine are sold and used as pure butter. I regard it as a dangerous article, and would on no account permit its use in my family.

Fourth. Enormous amounts of the meats of diseased animals are sold in Chicago. I have made a large number of examinations.

Fifth. I have been informed of several cases of poisoning in this city from the use of canned meats.

Sixth. I know that Professor G. A. Mariner, of this city, a chemist of twenty years' standing, of as high reputation as any man in the West, and a personal friend of mine, has found chloride of tin—an active poison—in numerous samples of sugar he has examined; also in some of them chloride of calcium—another poison.

I do not dare to use the sirups commonly sold in our markets, and I use but little sugar, as I believe them nearly all adulterated.

In regard to glucose, I am informed and believe that seven-eighths of all the sugar sold in Chicago is made of or adulterated with glucose.

As now manufactured and used, I know that many of our eminent physicians believe it dangerous and productive of disease of the kidneys. The manufacture of glucose in this country is now enormous, and large factories are being built to increase its manufacture.

I could fill a volume with the adulterations which I have found within a few years past in articles of food and drink in common use, by microscopical and chemical analysis. I have made more than a thousand microscopical examinations of milk in this city. I think that not over 10 per cent. of the milk sold here by dealers is wholesome and unadulterated.

At your request, I would say that I am a physician of over twenty years' practice, and the past ten years I have given almost entirely to chemical and microscopical analysis. I have written several volumes on scientific subjects—surgical, medical, &c.—and am well known to Drs. Storer, Holmes, Henry J. Bigelow, Cutter, J. B. Treadwell, Harriman, and others of your city.

Yours, truly,

R. U. PIPER.

GEORGE T. ANGELL, Esq.

[From J. M. Chapman, sugar dealer.]

CHICAGO, October 17, 1879.

DEAR SIR: I have been in the sugar business about twenty years. Fifteen years ago our markets were filled with excellent sugars. Among the brands then sold, as I remember them, were Stewart's, Miller's, Bradish, Johnson & Son's, and Ockershausen's, of New York; Lovering, of Philadelphia; Woods, Weeks & Co., of Baltimore; East Boston, Union, Salem T. Lamb, and Adams refineries of Boston; J. B. Brown & Sons, of Portland, and many others, all of which were excellent sugars. Every one of these sugars have been driven out of our markets. For the past two years, with three or four exceptions, there have been, I believe, no pure sugars sold in Chicago. The average sale of sugars now in this market is more than a thousand barrels a day. In my opinion not more than one barrel in a hundred is pure sugar, the rest being what we call doctored goods.

J. M. CHAPMAN.

GEORGE T. ANGELL, Esq.

Who are these men?

[Dr. Smart.]

Dr. Charles Smart, United States Army, has recently analyzed a wide variety of articles, and says adulteration is now practiced in this country to as great, if not greater, extent than it was in England when the great agitation commenced there a few years ago.

[Prize essays.]

A $1,000 prize was offered last year, through the United States Board of Trade, for best essays on adulteration, and four have been published.

The writer of the first, G. W. Wigner, an Englishman, says, under British laws adulteration has been reduced from about 65 per cent. in 1860 to about 16 per cent. in 1878, and in Canada under similar laws, from about 52 per cent. in 1876 to about 26 per cent. in 1879, though he says, they still have in English markets tinned fish heavily contaminated with lead; sweetmeats colored with chromate of lead; hams externally coated with chromate of lead; bread containing large quantities of alum; and children's powders and sleeping draughts containing poisonous doses of narcotics. Teas, which used to be almost universally adulterated, are now good. This results from stringent laws enacted by Parliament, about four years ago, for the inspection and analysis of teas landed at any port of Great Britain. In the Sanitary Engineer of June 1, 1880, I find that seven thousand chests of adulterated tea had been recently burned, under British laws, in British India.

The second essay, written by V. M. Davis, of New York city, gives many adulterations, and says, referring to this country: "We believe it no exaggeration to say that adulteration is practiced wherever opportunity offers and pecuniary profit or commercial advantage is made thereby."

The third, by Dr. William H. Newell, of Jersey City, N. J., gives among other poisons liable to be found in food and drink, "chromotes of lead, Brunswick greens, red oxide of lead, arsenite of copper, sulphate of copper, acetate of copper, carbonate of copper or verditer, carbonate of lead or white lead, bisulphuret of mercury, sulphate of iron, gamboge, sulphate of lime, carbonate of lime, red ferruginous earths, and other injurious substances; that potted meats, fish, and anchovies, cayenne, &c., are liable to contain red lead, or even bisulphuret of mercury; and pickles, bottled fruits, and vegetables to contain copper;" and that "the ramifications of adulteration extend over this whole country."

The fourth and last is by Dr. O. W. Wight, commissioner of public health of Milwaukee. He names, under the head of usual adulterations of food and drink in this country, lead in canned vegetables and meats, corrosive sublimate in rind of cheese, poisonous colors in confectionery, caustic lime in lard, aniline colors in fruit jellies, preserves, sausage, and wine, salts of tin in sugar, cocculus indicus and tobacco in beer and ale, salts of copper in pickles, sulphuric acid in vinegar, and about twenty-five other deleterious adulterations. He says it is useless to attempt to estimate the number of deaths and the amount of sickness caused by adulterated foods and drinks, "but the articles used are known, and the effects of such articles when taken into the human body."

[Professor Johnson.]

In an essay read before the "American Social Science" at Saratoga, on the 8th of last September, by Professor S. W. Johnson, professor of chemistry in the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale College, I find, among other adulterations named, the following as liable to be found:

Bread, with alum and sulphate of copper.
Yeast, with alum.
Baking-powders, with alum, terra alba, plaster of Paris, whiting, and kaolin.
Milk, with a variety of articles.
Cheese, with potatoes, beans, oleomargarine, vermilion, red chalk, sulphate of copper, arsenic, and corrosive sublimate.
Lard, with boiled starch, alum, and quicklime.
Confectionery, with chromate of lead, red lead, vermilion, Prussian blue, copper, and arsenic.
Pickles, with sulphuric acid and verdigris.
Mustard, with yellow ochre and chromate of lead.
Vinegar, with sulphuric acid, arsenic, and corrosive sublimate.
Coffee, with roasted acorns, spent tan-bark, spent logwood, mahogany, sawdust, and burnt liver of horses.
Teas, with a great variety of articles.

OLEOMARGARINE.

I have spoken of glucose as a giant which has grown in a few years to colossal proportions. I will now speak of what I may properly call its twin-brother—oleomargarine.

Few persons have any correct idea of the extent to which this article is now made in this country. A single firm in New York city has recently contracted with parties in Vermont for 300,000 firkins, to be delivered this year, for packing oleomargarine butter.

It is estimated that there was made in this country last year about a hundred millions of pounds.

It is sold, as I am informed, in almost every butter stall in our great Faneuil Hall market, and large quantities of it, I am informed, are shipped to Vermont to come back as Vermont butter. It is put up in beautiful forms as well as in tubs and firkins, and can not ordinarily be distinguished from the products of the milk of the cow.

It is not only filling our markets in the shape of butter, but also as cheese. Many creameries and many large dairies, as I am informed, are now mixing 25 per cent. or more of oleomargarine oil with their cheese.

Are these commodities unwholesome? Manufacturers will tell you they are even better than the products of the milk of the cow; and they will show you a long list of certificates from their paid chemists to the same effect.

I have microscopic photographs which tell a different story, and the testimony of scientific men whom I believe.

It is a great pity that chemical analyses are so expensive. A great glucose or oleomargarine ring, making millions of dollars, can easily afford to furnish all the chemists in the country carefully prepared samples of their commodities, and pay the highest prices for analyses and certificates. But who is there in this country to cautiously collect from the highways and by-ways in our various cities and towns, a great variety of the articles actually sold, and pay honest chemists to analyze them?

Professor Henry Leffman, one of the most respectable chemists of Philadelphia, states that he knows large establishments which employ scientific men simply for the purpose of adulterating and to invent new processes of adulteration.

The French Academy of Medicine have, as I am informed, recently reported that French oleomargarine is unfit for use in French hospitals, and the French minister of the interior has refused to permit its use in French hospitals. The ground taken was, as I am informed, that while it might be possible to make, in a chemist's laboratory, a pure article which would not be unwholesome, in point of fact it was found by the academy experts in Paris that only an inferior article was actually sold in commerce, and which appeared to injure the digestive organs of sick and debilitated persons.

Mr. Michels, of New York city, a well-known microscopist and editor of a scientific journal, testifies that oleomargarine is simply uncooked, raw fat, never subjected to sufficient heat to kill parasites which are liable to be in it; that those who eat it run the risk of trichinæ from the stomachs of animals which are chopped up with the fat in making it. He states that he has found in it tissue, and muscle, and cells of suspicious nature, and that Mr. Saylor has also found in it positively identified germs of disease.

Mr. Michels further states that all the caul fat of oxen brought to New York city in a week would not supply one factory four days, yet there were then seven factories in New York city, and he asserts that there can be no doubt that fats and grease of various descriptions are used in making oleomargarine.

The eminent English chemist, Professor Church, states that he has found in it horse fat, fat from bones, and fats such as are ordinarily used for making candles.

But the gentleman who, probably more than any one else, has written upon this subject is Dr. R. U. Piper, of Chicago, concerning whom the chief-justice of the superior court of that city, and three other judges, certify "that the testimony of no other scientific gentleman of that city would, in their judgment, be entitled to higher respect."

Dr. Piper says his attention was first called to the subject by an article published by Mr. Michels, before referred to, in the American Journal of Microscopy. Since then he has examined a large number of specimens. He testifies that, while no true butter can carry trichnæ, eggs of the tape-worm, &c., he has found in oleomargarine not only organic substances in the form of muscular and connective tissue, and various fungi, but also living organisms which have resisted boiling acetic acid, and eggs resembling those of the tape-worm; these he has preserved to be shown to any who may desire to see them, and he has also microscopic photographs of them. He thinks these may get in through the stomachs of pigs and sheep used in making the article, though he has found in it specimens of uncooked meat. His conclusion is that it is a dangerous article, and that he would on no account permit its use in his family.

The Rev. E. Huber, microscopist, of Richmond, Va., writes in the Southern Clinic of May, 1880, that oleomargarine differs in its microscopical appearance as well as in its nutritive and dietetic qualities from true butter; that the fats in it are not subjected to a heat sufficient to destroy the germs of septic and putrefactive organisms, and that there may also be introduced into the system by its means the eggs which develop in tape-worm. And he also states that he has frequently found in oleomargarine eggs resembling those of the tape-worm.

Mr. Michels says I have reason to believe that the refuse fat of at least one pork-packing establishment is used for oleomargarine; and as the trade increases, fat of every description will probably be offered for sale; even that from the carcasses of diseased animals may be purchased without guilty knowledge of the managers.

Professor Piper says it is not unreasonable to suppose that one of these populated stomachs chopped up with the fat, even if washed and cleaned, may contain thousands of living organisms.

From an article in Boston Herald of January 8, 1881, I find that Dr. George B. Harriman, a most respectable microscopist of Boston, well known to me, has recently examined some twenty specimens of oleomargarine obtained from different dealers, and has found in every specimen more or less foreign substances, a variety of animal and vegetable life. Among these were corpuscles from a cockroach, and small bits of claws; the blood corpuscles of sheep; the egg of a tape-worm. Yeast was found sprouting in considerable quantities, and spores of fungi were very prevalent; a portion of a worm, a dead hydra viridis, portions of muscular fibers, fatty cells, and eggs from some small parasite were among the discoveries.

I find also in the American Journal of Microscopy of October, 1878, a letter from the celebrated English microscopist, W. H. Dallinger, said to be the greatest living authority on this subject, in which he shows that oleomargarine is not subjected to a heat sufficient to kill the living organisms which refuse fats are liable to contain.

In view of the great and increasing magnitude of this business; and the report of the French Academy of Medicine; and the discoveries of the scientific gentlemen before named; and the danger of using the raw fats and stomachs of diseased animals, and of those that die on the cars, which number hundreds of thousands annually; or of pleuro-pneumonia; or of cattle fever; or of hog cholera; I think we have no reason to rejoice over the erection of these enormous factories which are now supplying the tables of our hotels, restaurants, boarding-houses, and private families with oleomargarine butter and cheese.

Whatever else may be said by the great capitalists engaged in their manufacture, one thing they can not honestly deny, namely, that not three men or women in a hundred would eat an ounce of these articles if they could know by color or otherwise what they were eating.

No man would knowingly give his wife or children for butter the raw uncooked fats of animals that may have died of cattle plague, hog cholera, or other diseases. But how manufacturers are to guard either themselves or the public against the fats of such animals is a problem which no manufacturer or chemist employed by him has, thus far, to my knowledge, attempted to explain.

If any one shall ever assert that such fats can not be used, I am prepared with evidence to prove the contrary.

A new article of butter and cheese has recently made its appearance in Western markets containing from 50 to 75 per cent. of hog's lard. The Chicago Tribune, of November 17, 1880, states that fifteen factories in that city are now engaged in its manufacture, and that one article used in making the cheese will eat through the oak barrels in which it is kept. Concerning its effects on the human stomach I have, thus far, no evidence.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MCMILLIN addressed the committtee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not believe that if this bill becomes law butterine will cease to be manufactured and sold. It will no longer be sold as butter. It will be sold for what it really is. If butterine can be sold to the consumer under its own name as a substitute for butter, dairymen will have no right to complain. They would have no more right to complain than if olive oil, or even purified cotton-seed oil, were to be generally used in this country as an article of food, as olive oil is in some of the countries of Southern Europe.

But dairymen have a right to say that their product shall not be counterfeited. This right of the dairyman is identical with the right of the consumer. In ordinary cases the consumer may be left to his own intelligence to protect himself against impositions. By the exercise of a reasonable degree of caution he can protect himself from frauds in under-weight and in under-measure. If he can not detect a paper-soled shoe on inspection he detects it in the wearing of it, and in one way or another he can impose a penalty upon the fraudulent vender. As a general rule the doctrine of laissez faire can be applied. Not so with many of the adulterations of food. Scientific inspection is needed to detect the fraud, and scientific inspection is beyond the reach of the ordinary consumer. In such cases the Government should intervene. This is generally admitted to be a reasonable doctrine. Many of the nations of Europe and many of the States of this Union have recognized their obligations to their citizens to protect them against frauds which can not be detected by ordinary inspection, and have passed statutes imposing penalties against adulterations of food, whether injurious to health or not.

But it is said that legislation by the States of this Union is sufficient. Congress, it is said, ought not to interfere. True it is that Congress as a general thing may well leave to the jurisdiction of the several States laws relating to the public health and laws imposing a penalty upon frauds of venders. But there are exceptions to the rule, and the subject covered by this bill is one of them. When I hear gentlemen insist that the fraudulent sale of butterine as butter may be safely left to the jurisdiction of the several States and ought not to be handled by Congress, I am reminded of an episode in my legislative experience.

Some years ago I was a member of the State senate of Illinois. There came before that body a measure somewhat like this; whether it related solely to oleomargarine or included other adulterations of food I have forgotten. Oleomargarine was certainly included, and I think had a prominent place in the bill and in the discussion upon the bill. The bill was supported by about the same arguments that we have heard on the floor of this House in support of this bill. It was strenuously opposed. What do you suppose, Mr. Chairman, was the main argument used against it? It was nothing less than this: That the subject could not be effectively handled by a State Legislature, and therefore must be left to the action of Congress. The reasoning was this, and it struck me as having considerable force: Oleomargarine-makers in Illinois manufacture not merely for consumption in Illinois, but also for consumption in Missouri and other States.

Oleomargarine-makers in Missouri manufacture partly for consumption in Illinois. It is practically impossible to detect and arrest the product as it passes to and fro across State lines. However strict the law against it might be in Illinois, we could not be sure that other States would pass similar laws and enforce them strictly against the sale of oleomargarine for consumption in Illinois. We might suppress the manufacture in Illinois and thereby benefit the manufacturers in other States. The consumer in Illinois would not be protected. He would simply eat butterine not made in Illinois but made in some other State. Nothing will be effective except a national law, enforced everywhere with equal strictness throughout the United States. This was the argument which I heard against the enactment of an anti-butterine law by a State Legislature.

Now I find myself in Congress, and the butterine bill is in Congress, too. And when I listen for the substantial objections to such a bill, lo, and behold! I find that it is claimed that it is not a fit subject for national legislation, because it belongs properly in the State Legislature.

That is to say, when I was in the State senate and the butterine bill was there I was told that it ought not to be there because it ought to be here, while now that I am here and the butterine bill is here I am told that it ought not to be here because it ought to be there.

Perhaps the wisest course would be to assume that it might properly be in both places at the same time. We ought to supplement with Congressional action the supervision of the subjects by the States. We impose an internal-revenue tax on beer and whisky, and it claims to be enforced uniformly in all the States of the Union. But the sale of beer and whisky is also subject to regulation by the States. One State permits it under a low license, another State permits it under a high license, while still another does not permit it at all. Even counties and cities within the same State may adopt varying regulations on the subject and may vary them from time to time.

So with butterine. We may lay an internal-revenue tax upon it everywhere within the United States. We may supervise its manufacture and sale by Federal officials. At the same time we leave to the several States to say what further regulations they shall impose within their respective limits.

The advantages to be gained by national supervision are twofold. We prevent a fraud upon the consumer. We afford a safeguard to the public health. There is no doubt in my mind that some butterine is wholesome food. There is just as little doubt that, as it is sometimes made, it is injurious to health, to say the least of it. And as the ordinary consumer can not detect the difference between that which is properly made and that which is not, it is a legitimate function of government to give the citizen the means of ascertaining whether it is wholesome or unwholesome. It is a great step in the right direction to compel the retail dealer, if he sells it at all, to sell it for what it is.

When I buy butter I am tolerably secure against serious harm. If the butter is badly made, it is not usually dangerous to health unless it is bad enough to betray itself to the senses. I need no warning against adulterations injurious to health when I buy butter. And, therefore, when I buy butterine as butter I am liable to injury without warning. But when I buy butterine as butterine I am put on my guard, and I shall be likely to investigate the quality of the butterine that I buy; that is, I know I am buying something which, if carefully made, contains nothing injurious to health, but which, if carelessly or improperly made, carries, it is said, the germs of disease.

Mr. Chairman, I think that when we have gone as far as this we have gone far enough. If we can see to it that butterine is sold only under its own name to the consumer, we can safely leave to the consumer the task of distinguishing between good butterine and bad. He will be aided first by the natural rivalry between butterine and butter, and secondly by the rivalry between different makers of butterine. The rivalry between different makers of butterine will be a very effective agency in extirpating the unwholesome product. It does not operate effectively now, because a very large part of the butterine now manufactured is intended to be sold to the consumer as butter. It is not seriously pretended that it is sold as butter by the manufacturer to the wholesale dealer or by the wholesale dealer to the retailer. The fraud intervenes between the retailer and the consumer.

If this bill becomes a law the manufacturer, in order to find a market, will be obliged to take upon himself the trouble and expense of persuading the consumer to buy it for what it is. He can do this only by making a pure and wholesome article. He must persuade the consumer that it is wholesome and pure.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if any butterine-maker is willing to put his product into sealed and stamped packages, which can pass from the manufacturer to the wholesale dealer, and from the wholesale dealer to the retail dealer, and from the retail dealer, with the stamps still unbroken, to the consumer he ought to be allowed to do so. If this course were adopted by any one or a few prominent manufacturers all oleomargarine that can not stand the test of the microscope will soon vanish from the market.

To give the manufacturer this right is to treat him as we treat the manufacturer of tobacco. When the consumer of smoking-tobacco wants to buy 4 or 8 ounces of a particular brand he does not have to depend on the integrity of the retail dealer to give him what he wants. The retailer gives him a 4 or 8 ounce package, which has been put up, sealed, and stamped in the factory. He knows just what he gets. If he finds any defect in it he can place the responsibility upon the manufacturer, and the fact that the identity of the thing sold can be traced back from the consumer to the manufacturer will compel the manufacturer either to make a wholesome article or to retire from business. An article so packed and stamped by the manufacturer can not be sold as butter. It can not be used as an instrument of fraud. It can not injure the public health. To forbid the use of such packages is to encourage the practice of fraud on the consumer by the retail dealer.

As the bill now stands the manufacturer must pack the product in packages of not less than 10 pounds, while the retail dealer is required to sell from the original package. The retailer whose customer wants 1 or 2 pounds must dish the requisite amount out of the 10-pound package. I desire to amend the bill at the proper time, so that the retailer may sell to the consumer a 1 or 2 pound package just as it comes, with the seals and the internal-revenue stamps unbroken, from the factory. To effect this change will require certain amendments to section 6 of the bill. I trust that the committee will recognize that these amendments will practically improve the measure.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, if this is a bill to raise revenue the pains and penalties proposed to be placed upon the manufacturer or the seller are too high to bear the burdens proposed by the act under consideration. The tax proposed to be imposed upon this article can not produce revenue. If revenue is the object, make the pains and penalties less, and the tax less onerous, and you produce revenue. If the object of the bill is to legislate an industry of this country out of existence, the tax is not high enough, and the pains and penalties are not in proportion to produce such a result.

If it is true, as claimed, that the article now under consideration produces disease and contagion and death, where is the evidence? I do not say that we should depend upon chemical analysis. Let us go to the facts. If humanity is disturbed or diseased by the use of this article, we are without any evidence before this House to that effect. If such is the fact, we should consider directly the question of abolishing the production of this article altogether as deleterious and injurious to the public health.

If the object of the bill is revenue, make your tax low and your pains and penalties lower; then you will get revenue, as you have done upon whisky. Let us not, standing within the mere letter of the Constitution, undertake by indirection through heavy taxation and severe pains and penalties to exclude an article of food from the market. As we all know, the farmer is the great producer. His industry, which raises from the earth that which supplies to man his food—an industry which makes this country great and powerful—should not be tampered with, but should be fostered and protected for its benefits and blessings, and not by the destruction of other industries. I am not quite sure that the farmers of the country claim such exclusive and personal benefits which manifestly injure the business and means of living of others, who are equally entitled to fair and just government.

But whatever we do, let us not fight any branch of industry by indirection, as this bill clearly does in all its essential discrimination.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the centralization of all power here in Washington, and especially those reserved to the States, where the real power is large for the protection of persons and property of the citizen. But assuming that the gentleman from Georgia is correct in his statement of the law passed by that State, suppose the adjoining State should not pass such a law, then the maker of oleomargarine would go to that State, just as under the system of allowing the several counties in a State their "local option" as to the use or sale of ardent spirits, if one county adopts the prohibition and the adjoining county permits the sale and use of intoxicating liquors, the business is destroyed in one county, while the adjoining county makes profit from that destruction. If, in the manufacture of oleomargarine, there is anything so pernicious as represented, let us put it down by direction, not by indirection.

But, Mr. Chairman, suppose we carry out the principle of this legislation. Suppose we raise a tax upon spurious coffee, so much complained of and so deleterious. Suppose we tax molasses, so much of which is made of rags until people are afraid to use the article. Suppose this principle were applied to the manufacture of whisky. In Pennsylvania we produce rye whisky. Suppose the Pennsylvania producers of whisky from rye should come to this august assemblage of the nation's wisdom, representing that whisky made of corn produces, as the papers say, Bright's disease, and asking that corn whisky be legislated out of existence by taxation. Every member on this floor from Kentucky would protest earnestly against such legislation [laughter], and in that protest they would be joined most emphatically by members from the State of Ohio.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the enterprise of the South is introducing on the slopes of the mountains there the culture of the olive, which is likely to be a great success. Suppose, when that industry shall be successful, the producers of olive oil should determine that the production of the oil expressed from the cotton seed should be legislated out of existence. You will have parties interested in the manufacture of olive oil knocking at the doors of this House and asking such legislation.

Mr. TILLMAN. California already produces large quantities of olive oil.

Mr. CURTIN. I know that fact; but if the producers of olive oil should succeed in convincing Congress that the production of the oil from cotton seed should be legislated out of existence that production would go to the wall, and one of the great staples of a part of this country would suffer destruction.

Sir, I would like to find where are the graveyards in which are buried those persons whose lives have been shortened by the use of the article we are now asked to legislate against. There is not before the House any evidence of the fearful diseases or contagions which it is alleged to produce. Mr. Chairman, the average American ought to know, if he does not, what he buys. He ought to be the judge of what is useful food for himself and family, and he has a right to get for his family what he and they eat where he can buy it on the most reasonable terms; that is a personal right of every American citizen of which he should not be deprived. Mr. Chairman, there is not a country in Europe which does not cause all food to undergo a rigid examination, and of the liquids used as well, and it must be fresh in the memory of the members of this House since our beef and pork were excluded from the markets of Germany. To such legislation I would give my hearty approbation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] if it is shown that any kind of whisky produces Bright's disease I would not oppose voting it out of existence simply because it might benefit some other person who made something else. It is sufficient to know it is producing disease, and that it is unfit for use.

Mr. CURTIN. Is that to be taken out of my time, Mr. Chairman? [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order, as it is impossible to understand what is going on unless members will resume their seats.

Mr. CURTIN. Why, sir, there is not a nation on the face of the globe which does not have provision of law for the inspection of food sold to the people. How is it about your pork and about your beef sent to Germany; are they not inspected?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I insist upon being allowed to proceed.

Mr. CURTIN. Do not take up too much of my time. [Great laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests gentlemen to resume their seats.

Mr. CURTIN. If you wish to make sanitary regulations, then make them like men and let us understand that they are sanitary regulations, and for that purpose only.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN], who is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CURTIN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought he was taking up my time.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman's has expired.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have the floor, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am on the floor and the gentleman can not take me off without my consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. The formal amendment was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, it would give me great gratification to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] make my speech if he was on the right side, for I have no doubt he would make a much better speech than I could.

I was proceeding to say when interrupted that this bill seems to be fought by a few gentlemen here with a persistency equal to the profits in this fraudulent business, and in a way as unwarranted as the product itself is dishonest. It is fought by every manner of filibustering, and by introducing amendments frivolous in the last degree. And it has been fought in a legitimate way, too, with a great deal of skill.

It gives me pleasure always to listen to the very eloquent remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and I never listen to him with more delight than when he gets upon his favorite proposition that one man or one industry should not be taxed for the benefit of another. There is a little trick of oratory in this—and I do not say it in an offensive way, for it has been used by great orators in the past as well as in the present—and that is to urge upon the House, or upon the audience, as the case may be, a proposition which they entirely agree with, and get them thoroughly warmed up and enthusiastic in their embrace of that proposition, and then by a skill which only the accomplished orator understands transfer that enthusiasm to the subject which is before them. So my friend made his remarks and argued upon this proposition that one industry should not be taxed out of existence for the benefit of another. Who disputes the correctness of that proposition? No one in this House. No one disputes it at all. But, sir, that is not the question before the House. The question is whether we should raise a revenue on a manufactured article which is stated to be a fraud. The evidence of its fraudulent character is that it stalks forth not under its own name, but under that of another. It has gone out, ever since its invention, to the country as butter and not as oleomargarine. And I say that the fact that it assumes a disguise, fearing that its name would discover its bad character, is evidence that it is a fraud. He who counterfeits food is worse and more wicked than he who counterfeits money, and deserves to suffer a severer penalty.

Now in favor of what industry do our friends on the other side say this legislation is to operate? Is that legislating for one industry against another when you legislate this fraud out of existence in favor of the honest farming element of the country? Why, Mr. Chairman, it is the very father and mother of all industries. The farmer produces the prime necessities of life. You all know that every man here, whether he be a farmer, or a doctor, or a lawyer, or anything else, is as closely identified and interested in the avocation of the farmer, that avocation which produces all we eat and drink and the material of all we wear, as the man himself who pursues that avocation.

Not only that, sir, but it is that which gives to the great cities its manhood. There is not a city on earth that could live for three hundred years if the country did not furnish it with its manhood as well as with food. The strong man comes from the country, where, bred in the pure air, he acquires strength and vigor. He comes to the city, but in its turmoils and cares and interests he exhausts his manhood and his strength. He can not reproduce himself. The country that sent him must send another in his place.

The farmers are the conservative force of the country, to be relied upon in times of excitement which threaten the good order and safety of society.

Who ever heard of a riot of farmers? They are not those who pull down the column Vendôme, who destroy the Tuileries, with all those records so valuable to mankind. They are rather the conservators of the genius and labor of the past. They are neither communists, socialists, nor anarchists. They above all others are sober-minded and deliberate. Their patriotism is proverbial. Their possessions are a part of the country itself. They can not pocket these and depart for other lands. If we have bad government they can not escape it. They must live under and suffer it or improve it.

Hence they have been of all people the most to be relied upon to stand steadily by real and needed movements of reform, while they have been the first and strongest to defend good government and wholesome laws.

Amid the mutterings and threatenings and bloody collisions in our great cities who does not see the wisdom of strengthening this great conservative element of our nation, the thinking, reflecting, intelligent, patriotic farmers? How soon we shall need their conservative power no one can say. Let us see that they are not driven from their useful fields of labor by any great and powerful interests that stand behind a counterfeit.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the chairman of the committee will yield me five minutes. I want to say a word for these farmers.

Mr. HATCH. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country have been so persistently misunderstood, not to say misrepresented, in the course of this debate that I shall ask the House to give me only the brief space of five minutes to enable me to set them right, if they need to be set right, before this committee. I ask that time only to set at rest some of the misrepresentations that have been made with reference to the pending question.

It has been stated on this floor, and reiterated time and again, that the farmers are here demanding financial protection for their industries, and I reply that such is not the truth. They do not ask any such protection. They ask protection not for the purpose of advancing the value of the products of the farms and dairies, but they simply ask the protection of the law of the land; that protection which is thrown around all of our citizens in their property, and just as every other citizen in the land is entitled to protection under the Constitution and the law to life, liberty, and property. They ask that and nothing more, and to say that they make any other demand is to say that which can not be sustained. They are not asking here protection in the sense that their products may be advanced in value, but they ask the protection, I repeat, of the law of the land; that and nothing else.

This is a subject with which we had to deal in the committee, and we investigated it, and I have the testimony before me. That question was asked Mr. Reall, the president of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association, and nobody will dispute his capacity to answer it. He was asked what protection do you want; and are you endeavoring to break down this industry in order to build up that of the dairy?

What is his answer? He says:

We only want fair competition, and care not how great it is if it be with a genuine article.

That is all they demand. They do not want to come into competition with their own stolen name. Are you not willing to accept the statement of the head of the agricultural organization of the United States? Are you not willing to accept the truth of his statement? What does Mr. Littler say, who is secretary of the Iowa Dairy Association, secretary of the Chicago Produce Exchange, and the head of the great Western organization? When asked the question, What do you desire the protection for—is it one industry against another? His answer was:

No, sir; we ask nothing of the sort; honest competition can be no cause of complaint upon our part.

What do you say to that, gentlemen? Is that in harmony with the statement you are making here that this is an effort to build up the butter interests of the country at the expense of a legitimate industry?

What does Mr. Hughes say, the president of the Baltimore Produce Exchange? He said that they do not want legislation for the purpose of destroying an industry.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Then a nominal tax is all that is required.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Hughes says in response to similar questions asked him:

Put oleomargarine or butterine in competition with butter as it is turned out from the beef fat or lard and it will not affect butter in the least.

Mr. Chairman, that is the uniform tenor of all the testimony taken. All they ask is fair competition. Then what do you gentlemen complain of? They say that the fraudulent character of this compound and its sale under the name of "butter" is an evil, an injury, and an injustice, and it is that of which they complain. Mr. Hughes says all we ask is to have this compound placed before the country in its proper light. Mr. Littler says all we ask is that the country may have information of the sale of this product under its proper colors to protect them. He wants the people to be informed of what it is, and not that it shall sail under false colors. What then becomes of your charge that this is an endeavor on the part of the farmers to break down one great industry to build up or help their own?

Again, Mr. Chairman, as to the constitutional power to levy the tax. I presume it will not be questioned that we have the power to levy such taxes as are necessary for the support of the Government, and these taxes must be levied upon property and objects to be selected by Congress. If then you are to select an article on which revenue is to be raised, by what principle are you to be governed? Can you select one better adapted to it than the one in question? for this will be a tax not only that produces revenue, but one which at the same time protects the property the farmers have in the good name and in the good will which that good name has given to one of their principal products.

Are you in favor of honesty or dishonesty? Are you willing to protect butter against the theft of its own good name? If you are against dishonesty, gentlemen, and want to raise money, the question is how much is necessary to be raised, and how can you best select the property to which to apply it—not how much is necessary to break down the industry or run it out. We took testimony also upon this point of dishonesty in the sale of this product with a view to profits and raising revenue, and the testimony shows that not more than 1 per cent. of the whole of this stuff that is sold in the country has been sold for what it really is. It is never sold for anything else than butter.

Mr. TILLMAN (from his seat). How about bad whisky.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no fraudulent whisky. My friend thinks all whisky is good. [Laughter.] But here is a substance made at a cost of 7½ cents a pound which is sold for butter for not less than 26 cents a pound, and often retails at from 30 cents to 36 cents a pound. If 200,000,000 pounds of this stuff is sold at a dishonest profit of 200 per cent., is not here a splendid and legitimate field to turn at least 100 per cent. of that profit from the pocket of the fraudulent vender to the coffers of the Government? If this is not a suitable place to impose a tax, where is one?

Good butter can not be made for less than 20 cents per pound; the best oleomargarine or butterine can be made for 7½ cents per pound. Here is, then, under the inexorable law of production, a protective tariff of about 175 per cent. per pound in favor of this product. It will always sell at retail at the price of butter, or just enough under to command the trade. No person can tell it from the smell, from the taste, or by the eye from creamery butter. It is given the favor, the savor, and the flavor of butter, and its steals its good name and its good will with consumers. Neither whisky nor tobacco, both of which should be taxed as long as money is required to be raised to support the Government, affords so just a field for taxation. Without burden to the people, or even affecting the price of the article, a splendid revenue can be raised from it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I submit the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 4 the following:

"Provided, That the provisions of this, and the preceding sections, shall not apply to any manufacturer, wholesale or retail dealer in oleomargarine who, under such rules and regulations as shall be established by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall show to the satisfaction of said Commissioner that the oleomargarine manufactured, sold, or offered for sale by them or either of them is as wholesome in every respect as butter."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read for information.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out of line 4 of section 4 the words "one thousand" and insert "fifty;" and strike out of line 9 the words "five hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. HATCH. I am advised by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] that they do not desire to speak to this amendment. The debate on this section has already run forty or fifty minutes. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. DUNHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. HATCH. Then I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BAYNE. I think unanimous consent may be had.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending section and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. DUNHAM. I guess we had better do it in the regular way.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue. And pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending section of the bill (H. R. 8328) and amendments thereto be limited to one second.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill H. R. 8328.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending section and amendments thereto is limited to one second. The Clerk will read the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], which is an amendment to the text of the section.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. With the liberality with which this discussion has been conducted heretofore I presume the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] will divide the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I will be more generous than that. I will yield it all to my colleague.

The amendment proposed by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on the section and amendments thereto is limited to one second.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I have that second.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I wish to say that in all——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Laughter.]

The amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is next on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

The amendment was again read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 95.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I wish to reserve the point of no quorum for the purpose of making an inquiry. I do not wish to delay the vote on this bill. Is the gentleman who has charge of it willing that a vote should be taken on this amendment in the House? I look upon it as being material, and have offered it in good faith.

Mr. HATCH. So far as I am personally concerned I would have no objection. But I have acted in this matter for the committee that have this bill in charge; and I do not regard the amendment offered by the gentleman in the light he does. I think it would be utterly impossible and impracticable to carry it out. There is no such thing as oleomargarine that is as wholesome in every respect as butter.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I do not make the point as to a quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read section 6, as follows:

SEC. 6. That all oleomargarine shall be packed by the manufacturer thereof in firkins, tubs, or other wooden packages not before used for that purpose, each containing not less than 10 pounds, and marked, stamped, and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe; and all sales made by manufacturers of oleomargarine and wholesale dealers in oleomargarine shall be in original stamped packages. Retail dealers in oleomargarine must sell only from original stamped packages, in quantities not exceeding 10 pounds, and shall pack the oleomargarine sold by them in suitable wooden packages, which shall be marked and branded as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe. Every person who sells or offers for sale, or delivers or offers to deliver, any oleomargarine in any other form than in new wooden packages as above described, or who packs in any package any oleomargarine in any manner contrary to law, or who falsely brands any package or affixes a stamp on any package denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for each offense not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

Mr. SPOONER. I regret to find so many of my friends, for whose opinions I usually have much respect, differing from me concerning the propriety of this proposed legislation. That difference, I apprehend, arises largely from a mistaken or distorted view upon their part of the facts involved and of the actual evils requiring correction; for I am sure I am as much opposed as any of them can be to fraud in any manufacture, and particularly in any article of food, and I as strongly insist that each should be sold for what it actually is, and that no imposition should be practiced upon the purchaser. Our difference, I believe, is as to the necessities and methods of legislation.

With the progress of civilization come inventions, improvements, and scientific discoveries; and, while all that is new is not necessarily good, nor necessarily better than the old which it attempts to compete with, supplement, or supplant, intelligent legislators, mindful of the history of the past, teeming with prudential lessons, should hesitate to interpose any barriers to legitimate industry and business enterprise, save such as experience and necessity dictate. New methods and processes for the utilization of various products have marked our progress in the past, and will unquestionably accompany our progress in the future, among which canned meats, fruits, and preserves, condensed milk, prepared soups and meat extracts, oleomargarine, and other products of inventive skill have grown to be important, if not indispensable, articles of food consumption.

This bill proposes to impose special taxes, as follows: Upon manufacturers of oleomargarine, $600; upon wholesale dealers in the same, $480; upon retail dealers, $48; and an additional tax of 10 cents is also imposed upon every pound of the article produced, which taxation, if it does not destroy the entire industry and utterly prevent the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine (as the advocates of this bill seemingly intend), must necessarily largely increase its cost to consumers. Are the advocates of this bill seeking either of these results?

Now, if I am correctly informed, many of the advocates of this bill have indulged in gross exaggeration of statement, entirely unjustified by any acts which have come to my knowledge. They overstate their case; for if oleomargarine is the unwholesome product they describe, and yet has acquired an annual sale of one hundred and fifty or two hundred million pounds, who can reconcile its continued purchase and great consumption with the continued health of our people and the survival of its consumers?

All reasonable purity in food is extremely desirable; but hypercritical analysis is scarcely to be commended, and if invoked might discredit many healthful articles of food in general use.

He is a bold and I think an imprudent man who would attempt to trace every attractive and palatable dish upon his table back to its original constituents and through its various manipulations. If he should insist upon absence of any cause for suspicion, I fear he would eat little and drink less.

Even the water we drink, if persistently traced from its sources through its devious and questionable channels, would excite our suspicion and perhaps our disgust.

The same people who are loudest in their protests against Germany's exclusion of American hog products (upon the pretense of their unhealthfulness) are among those who are the most bitter in their warfare against "oleomargarine," as defined by this bill—a product of this identical American hog! What is lard—rendered from what fats and how? Yet it is one of the articles most commonly and generally used in the cooking of our people. And how is its purity and healthfulness vouched for more fully than is oleomargarine, manufactured by responsible parties from the best of it? What are sausages? From what kinds and qualities of meats made?

Mr. PRICE. I give it up. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. And in what packed?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I suggest if the gentleman from Rhode Island can explain what sausages are he can tell what oleomargarine is. [Laughter].

Mr. SPOONER. Yet there is no proposition to tax any of these products, save oleomargarine, out of existence.

Are not the advocates of this bill pressing their inquiries too far, and in a direction calculated to injure the very interests they claim to support? "For people will talk, you know!" And I am surely justified in assuming that "choice beef fats" are at least equally unobjectionable with lard.

Why then this war on these products? If unwholesome, or if sold for what they are not, I heartily assent to such legislation from proper sources—by Congress if necessary—to prevent the sale of the unhealthful and compel the sale of the others for only what they really are; but I can not, under any such pretense as this bill makes, lend my voice or my vote to the destruction of one legitimate domestic industry for the advantage of another, however great or important that other may be. Such an attempt seems to me inconsistent with any theory of the correct and honorable exercise of my duty as a legislator.

I have heard some of these gentlemen, who I fear are afflicted with peculiarly vigorous imaginations, stigmatize oleomargarine in terms unjustified by any facts which have come to my knowledge.

They have called it "bogus," "counterfeit," "dirty," "filthy," "poisonous!" Adjectives have failed them with which to express their disgust and abhorrence; and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] apparently attempted to persuade the House that the recipe from which it is usually manufactured is identical with that by which the "witches' broth" in Macbeth was compounded! Yet I have heard no authentic statement in support of such extraordinary charges; nothing save wild and extravagant assertions, based upon little else than vague speculations and suspicions; for it certainly is not "bogus" or "counterfeit" if it is sold for what it is.

Now, I am neither a manufacturer, a physician, nor a chemist; but perhaps I should not be accounted singular in possessing the disposition, not uncommon certainly in the locality which I represent, to be guided by reliable testimony, rather than by intemperate abuse and unsupported assertions. I will therefore let manufacturers, chemists, scientists, and physicians speak and give to you the facts upon which I necessarily base my judgment.

Mr. Philip D. Armour, of the celebrated firm of Armour & Co., of Chicago, in his sworn affidavit, presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM], gives a clear and definite statement of the ingredients used in the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine and describes the entire process of manufacture. That affidavit is as follows:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Cook County, ss:

Philip D. Armour, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a resident of the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, and that he is a member of the firm of Armour & Co.

Deponent further says that said firm of Armour & Co., in the course of their business, makes and sells oleomargarine and butterine, and that this deponent knows of his own knowledge the materials and the methods used by said firm in the making of said products. They are as follows:

METHODS OF MANUFACTURE.

The fat is taken from the cattle in the process of slaughtering, and after thoroughly washing is placed in a bath of clean, cold water and surrounded with ice, where it is allowed to remain until all animal heat has been removed. It is then cut into small pieces by machinery and cooked at a temperature of about 150 degrees until the fat in liquid form has separated from the fibrine or tissue; then settled until it is perfectly clear. Then it is drawn into graining vats and allowed to stand a day, when it is ready for the presses. The pressing extracts the stearine, leaving the remaining product, which is commercially known as oleo oil, which, when churned with cream or milk, or both, and with usually a proportion of creamery butter, the whole being properly salted, gives the new food product, oleomargarine.

In making butterine we use neutral lard, which is made from selected leaf lard in a very similar manner to oleo oil, excepting that no stearine is extracted. This neutral lard is cured in salt brine for forty-eight to seventy hours at an ice-water temperature. It is then taken and, with the desired proportion of oleo oil and fine butter, is churned with cream and milk, producing an article which, when properly salted and packed, is ready for market.

In both cases coloring matter is used which is the same as that used by dairymen to color their butter. At certain seasons of the year, namely, in cold weather, a small quantity of salad oil made from cotton seed is used to soften the texture of the product, but this is not generally used by us.

Deponent further says that no other material or substance except as above stated is used by Armour & Co. in making oleomargarine or butterine.

Deponent further says that he has read the statement made in a report of the Committee on Agriculture to the House of Representatives purporting to give the materials used in making oleomargarine and butterine, and he says that none of the materials or substances therein enumerated are used by Armour & Co. in making said products or either of them except as herein stated.

Deponent further says that he has read a letter dated May 19, 1886, signed Armour & Co., Swift & Co., George H. Hammond & Co., N. K. Fairbank & Co., and Samuel W. Allerton, a copy of which is hereto attached, and he says that the same is the letter of the parties whose names are attached thereto, and that the statements therein made so far as the same relate to Armour & Co. are true, and so far as they relate to the other parties signing said letters, he upon information believes them to be true.

And this deponent further deposes and says that no ingredient is or ever has been used by said firm of Armour & Co. in the manufacture of said oleomargarine and butterine which is in any way injurious to health.

PHILIP D. ARMOUR.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22d day of May, 1886.

[SEAL.] EVERETT WILSON, Notary Public.

In the "Marx case," in New York, the following sworn testimony was given:

By Professor Henry Morton:

I am professor of the science of technology at the Stevens Institute, Hoboken, and have been for fourteen years. I have seen oleomargarine made repeatedly, and analyzed it frequently, and have obtained knowledge about it from reading in reference to its history from the time it was first devised and introduced up to the present time.

I am familiar with the article known as dairy butter, and have analyzed and examined it.

Oleomargarine is a word used for two things. It is often used for the product obtained by the treatment of fats, by which there is gotten out from the fat a pure fatty substance having almost the identical elements of fats existing in butter. And the word is also used to indicate the marketable article produced when that pure fatty substance is churned up with milk or cream, and perhaps mixed with butter, so as to be in a condition of solidification for use on the table.

Q. Professor, will you state the general character of this oleomargarine butter as far as wholesomeness is concerned?

A. In my opinion it is precisely as wholesome as dairy butter.

By Professor Charles F. Chandler:

My profession is that of a chemist, and has been for thirty years. Besides my college professorship at Columbia College and my connection with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the College of Pharmacy, I have been chemist of the board of health for many years, and for twelve years its president. I was chairman of the sanitary committee for three years. In connection with my profession and business, I have examined the substance known as oleomargarine, and compared it with the product known as dairy butter.

Q. What is the difference between the two articles, so far as wholesomeness is concerned?

A. There is no difference,

Q. How does the one compare with the other, so far as cleanliness is concerned?

A. Oleomargarine is manufactured in a very cleanly manner.

No attempt was made to contradict this testimony.

The following opinions have been given by scientific men:

George F. Barker, University of Pennsylvania, says "it is perfectly whole some and is desirable as an article of food."

S. W. Johnson, Sheffield Scientific School of Yale College, says of it: "A product that is entirely attractive and wholesome as food, and one that is for all ordinary culinary and nutritive purposes the full equivalent of good butter made from cream."

S. C. Caldwell, chemical laboratory, Cornell University, said of it: "Possessing no qualities whatever that can make it the least degree unwholesome."

C. A. Goessman, Amherst, Mass., who said it "furnishes thus a wholesome article of food."

Charles P. Williams, analytical chemist, Philadelphia, gives as his opinion: "It is a pure and wholesome article of food, and in this respect, as well as in respect to its chemical composition, fully the equivalent of the best dairy butter."

Henry A. Mott, analytical chemist, New York, says: "Essentially identical with butter made from cream—a perfectly pure and wholesome article of food."

J. S. W. Arnold, medical department, University of New York, said of it: "A blessing for the poor, and in every way a perfectly pure, wholesome, and palatable article of food."

W. O. Atwater, Wesleyan University, Connecticut, said it "is perfectly wholesome and healthy, and has a high nutritive value."

Charles F. Chandler, health department, New York city, says: "The product is palatable and wholesome, and I regard it as a most valuable article of food."

A. S. Heath, M. D., Robert J. Dodge, and Willet Seaman, judges, American Institute, New York, who reported: "This process utilizes valuable products and makes useful in the kitchen and upon the dining table much that was formerly used for less important purposes."

Scientific American: "Oleomargarine is as much a farm product as beef or butter and is as wholesome as either."

Professor H. A. Mott, jr., Ph. D., E. M., in reply to John Michael, who claimed to have discovered parasites in a sample of oleomargarine butter, said: "The best answer to these remarks is probably a confession which Mr. Michael made to me personally when he stated that in all his examinations, and in all his reading, he had never seen or heard of germs of disease or embryos of parasites in caul fat."

Professor William Brewer, of Yale College, said: "The idea that oleomargarine is more dangerous than butter, because heated to only 120° Fahrenheit, is simply nonsense."

The committee on health of the State board of Massachusetts, of which my friend and neighbor the gentleman now representing the first district of that State upon this floor [Mr. DAVIS] was then a member, in 1883 made the following report on oleomargarine:

When well made it is a very fair imitation of genuine butter; being inferior to the best butter, but much superior to the low grades of butter too commonly found in the market.

So far as its influence on health is concerned we can see no objection to its use.

Its sale as genuine butter is a commercial fraud, and as such very properly condemned by law.

As to its prohibition by law, the same law which prohibited it should also prohibit the sale of lard and tallow, and, more especially, all low-grade butters, which are far more injurious to health than a good sweet article of oleomargarine.

A great deal has been said in regard to the poor grade of fats from which the oleomargarine is made. Any one making such assertions in regard to the fats is simply ignorant of the whole subject. When a fat has become in the least tainted it can no longer be used for this purpose, as it is impossible to remove the odor from the fat after it has once acquired it.

The use of substitutes for butter seems to be steadily on the increase in this country. When good butter is at from 40 to 50 cents per pound, it has passed beyond the means of persons in moderate circumstances, and they have the choice of three things—to do without, to use poor butter, or to use some substitute.

The following letters of recent date give the opinions of competent authorities, who personally witnessed the manufacture, as to the character of the process employed and the resulting products:

CHICAGO, May 15, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: It gives us pleasure to say to you that we have recently visited your factory at the Union Stock-Yards, in this city, and thoroughly examined the whole process of the manipulation and manufacture of butterine and oleomargarine. We cheerfully testify that we consider the products cleanly, palatable, and wholesome food products, containing nothing injurious or detrimental to health, but, on the contrary, cheap and desirable substitutes for the medium grades of dairy butter.

Yours, respectfully,

CYRUS EDSON, M. D.
OSCAR C. DE WOLF, M. D.

Messrs. ARMOUR & Co., Chicago.

ILLINOIS STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Springfield, Ill., May 17, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: While engaged in an official investigation with regard to the slaughtering of beef at the Union Stock-Yards, accompanied by Dr. Cyrus Edson, food inspector of the New York board of health, and Dr. O. C. De Wolf, health commissioner of Chicago, recently, I witnessed your process for the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine. By what I saw I am convinced that it is conducted with the most scrupulous cleanliness; that nothing in the manufacture or the materials used is detrimental to health, and that the products are wholesome.

Very respectfully,

JOHN H. RAUCH, M. D.

To ARMOUR & Co.

Such is the testimony.

Now, I see but two possible evils connected with the manufacture and sale of these products which can require correction. If an unwholesome article is manufactured and sold by unscrupulous persons, or if the product is sold for something it is not, in fraud of the purchaser and consumer, proper legislation to regulate its legitimate manufacture and sale may be fairly demanded. In my opinion such legislation is within the proper sphere of State and municipal control, and can be safely left to the intelligent care of the people acting through their local governments as they do in protecting themselves against the sale of unwholesome meats and vegetables, impure milk, and other food products, and against frauds and impositions generally. I believe that all necessary regulation and control can thus be secured, and the actual evils complained of, wherever existing, effectually remedied.

It seems to me that even those evils have been considerably magnified in this debate; for I think purchasers as a rule can protect themselves in the purchase of butter, as in the purchase of other goods, by the exercise of ordinary prudence, and purchasing of known, reputable dealers. How do we protect ourselves from imposition in making other purchases? Competent dealers know, and are bound to know, what their goods are, and where they come from; of what manufactured, and of what quality. If I want to buy West of England broadcloth, or Lonsdale cambric, or Haxall flour, or any other particular kind or quality of goods, is there any difficulty about it? Certainly not in my part of the country.

If a person, satisfied of the purity and wholesomeness of Armour & Co.'s oleomargarine, wishes to purchase it, is there any difficulty in obtaining it? and having obtained it, will any one doubt that he has procured an article manufactured of the materials and in the manner specified by Mr. Armour in his affidavit, which I have read? And can not the same result be safely predicted concerning the product of many other honorable manufacturers? And if he wants to buy genuine butter, is it not quite as easy a matter to procure it?

In either case he has only to seek honest, honorable dealers—who are plentiful among my own constituents and, I have faith to believe, numerous in the various localities which all you gentlemen represent—and the purchaser may be confident he obtains exactly what he buys.

But if, as claimed here, Congressional legislation is necessary for the protection of purchasers and consumers, it is entirely unreasonable to demand other laws than such as are required to secure the legitimate ends sought—to insure a proper manufacture and wholesome product and its sale under its own name; and if the plan proposed by this bill is decided to be the desirable one, I earnestly insist that the taxation should be limited to raising the amount of revenue required to defray the necessary expenses of governmental inspection, regulation, and control; and that we should refuse, under the pretense of attaining those ends, to lend ourselves to the imposition of the immense taxes proposed by this bill, wringing from the people annually perhaps twenty millions or more of dollars in taxes unrequired by any needs of the Government. Let us be honest as well as just.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill in all its parts and provisions, from beginning to end. I am in favor of levying a tax of 10 cents per pound upon every pound and fraction of a pound of oleomargarine and butterine manufactured throughout the whole length and breadth of the land, and in favor of passing this bill, because I believe it will accomplish that object.

The opponents of this measure declare themselves in favor of doing anything and everything to prevent the unwholesome, filthy stuff from being thrown upon the market and sold under false pretenses. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM], the champion of the opposition, says he is willing to have a provision in the bill that this imitation butter should be painted red or green, so that purchasers could not be deceived.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] declares himself in favor of having it so marked or stamped that no fraud can be practiced. Ay, willing that innkeepers, boarding-house keepers, or others who use it for sale to the public should be compelled to put up a sign over their front doors and in their dining-rooms and on their registers that "We use oleomargarine here!" to protect the public against its use, and all concur in the opinion that everything should be done to warn the public and the poor against its use, but they are violently opposed to the one feature of this bill which alone gives us jurisdiction over it, namely, the 10-cent-tax clause.

The constitutional opposers, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], contend that we have no power under the Constitution to tax this filthy stuff. I think, however, they have surrendered that position since the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, propounded the law as he did on the floor of this House on Tuesday last. For the sake of accuracy I quote his words. He said:

> Gentlemen have asked me, and they asked my friend from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], the other day, "Do you not believe this tax is constitutional?" Yes; I believe that Congress has the power to levy the tax on oleomargarine. For what purpose? To raise revenue.

Since this exposition of the law from the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, a gentleman from whom we are all willing to take the law, and from whom the distinguished gentlemen from Texas and Georgia are compelled to take it, we have heard no more about the law or the provisions of this bill being unconstitutional.

Mr. Chairman, I go further than the gentleman from Virginia. I believe Congress has the power to tax oleomargarine for the purpose of revenue, and I believe it is equitable and right to exercise the power. Why, sir, it is conceded by every gentleman who has spoken against this bill that oleomargarine is a filthy and deleterious compound, that it was a disease-spreading compound, and that it was proper and they favored any police regulation that would protect the public from its sale and use. If, sir, this is true, will not the continuance of its manufacture increase the police and the other legitimate expenses of the Government; and if this industry or fraud increases the legitimate expenses of the Government, is it not just and equitable that the product should be taxed to meet this increased expense?

The manufacture of an imitation or counterfeit article in large quantities is prima facie evidence of intention to sell it as genuine. In this case we have proof positive that it is so sold. Of the 200,000,000 pounds manufactured in this country last year no one pretends that 1 per cent. of it was sold for what it was—oleomargarine. All the evidence shows that these spurious butters are filthy and unwholesome and are fraudulently sold. The consuming public, be they never so poor, will neither buy nor eat them knowingly. It is not an honest or legitimate article, it wears a false guise, it is sold for butter, and is made from the gut-fat of hogs, dogs, sheep, horses, or cattle, which in many instances have died from disease, and has not a single ingredient of which butter is composed. Can this be said to be a legitimate industry, and that by passing this bill we are discriminating in favor of one legitimate industry and against another legitimate industry to prevent honest competition? Sir, I deny it. I concede, however, that by the passage of this bill we do discriminate. We discriminate in favor of honesty and against fraud and forgery. We discriminate in favor of public health and against disease. We discriminate in favor of life and against death. I, sir, am in favor of this discrimination, and if there is any gentleman on the floor of this House who is opposed to this kind of discrimination when the final vote is taken on this bill his name will be found in the list of those who are recorded as opposed to this measure.

Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent a portion of the richest dairying country in the United States, the counties of Oneida, Lewis, Jefferson, Herkimer, Montgomery, Madison, and Oswego having long been celebrated for the production of the best butter and cheese in the world. It was here that the first cheese factory was erected. It was here that the first creamery was put in operation. The milk factory and creamery have added very largely to the material interests of the dairyman. With their aid, and protected from fraud and forgery, there can be no limit to the power of production of pure butter, and the increase of this production does not depreciate the value of the soil, but greatly enriches and increases it. This brings me, Mr. Chairman, to another class of objections to this bill.

There is a class of gentlemen who are opposed to this bill—gentlemen for whom I entertain the most profound respect, but whom I have not always, consistent with the proper discharge of the duty I owe to an intelligent constituency, been able to follow—who object to this bill because they say it is protection pure and unadulterated. That is, by levying this tax they say we raise the price of butter 10 cents per pound, and that we put 10 cents per pound upon all butter manufactured by this great industry into the pockets of the producer and take it from the pockets of the consumer. I shall not stop now to discuss this question, but will content myself with saying that upon the tariff issue theory and practical experience do not travel lovingly hand in hand, as we have often discovered by listening to the arguments pro and con upon this great and interesting subject. The price of butter will continue to be regulated by supply and demand, without reference to the tax laid upon this fraudulent imitation.

This fraudulent competition, which was able last year to put upon the market 200,000,000 pounds of forged butter and displace 200,000,000 pounds of genuine butter, was to the men engaged in this industry a grievous wrong. The farmers have for the first time almost in the history of the country petitioned Congress to protect them from a fraudulent assault upon their business—not to protect them for the purpose of getting high prices, but to protect them from unfair and illegitimate competition. Call it what you please; call it protection pure and unadulterated. I, sir, am in favor of protecting American industries and American labor from foreign competition; and, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of protecting the dairying interests of America from competition with this fraudulent industry—the manufacture of oleomargarine.

I am in favor of it because the men who are engaged in the dairying interests are, as a class, men who have ever been the friends of our Government, men who in the early days of our being made it possible for us to become a free and independent people, and who at all times since, in prosperity and adversity, in peace and war, have contributed freely of their money and their brawn to protect the Constitution and Government of our country.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "wooden packages not before used for that purpose" and insert the word "packages."

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, on one occasion since I have been in Congress I was greatly puzzled to know why the vote on a certain sugar bill was in a particular way until the solution came out that if the bill passed it would prevent certain sugar refiners in New York from doing the work, and therefore Michigan was opposed to it because Michigan made the barrels to put the refined sugars in. [Laughter.] I do not know whether the "wooden" here has such a job in it as that or not; but certainly, whether oleomargarine is good or bad, I do not see why Congress should legislate that it shall be put up only in new wooden packages. It looks to me as if there was a job for some barrel-maker in this bill.

It looks to me as if there was not only an effort to protect butter, but an effort to protect barrels. There may be some good sensible reason for this that I do not understand, and I shall be pleased to be enlightened on the subject by anybody who can enlighten me. Tin may be stamped and marked and branded as well as wood. Tin is more convenient than wood in a great many particulars. Why tin may not be used I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. HAMMOND; and there were—ayes 52, noes 102.

Mr. HAMMOND. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HAMMOND, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. SCOTT, to act as tellers.

Mr. HAMMOND (during the count). Mr. Chairman, I submit whether I am properly paired here. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] has told me to count him on my side.

The CHAIRMAN. As no objection is made, the count will proceed.

Mr. HAMMOND withdrew the point of no quorum, and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 88.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the word "wooden," in line 2 of this section, the words "or tin."

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 29, noes 78.

Mr. VAN EATON. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. VAN EATON, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 126.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend in lines 3 and 4 by striking out the words "each containing not less than ten pounds." The purpose of this amendment I have already tried to show. It is to enable any manufacturer of pure oleomargarine, if there is any such, to prove the fact to the consumer by putting up the product in packages of such size that the consumer can buy them from the retailer without breaking the stamps.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment, and I desire to say that I am in favor of this bill as a means of giving some relief to the agricultural interests of our country which it concerns. No bill this session has been opposed with more vehemence than the one now pending. It has been attacked by my very able and distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who wields the sledge-hammer of the Constitution as Samson did the new jaw-bone of the ass, with which he slew a thousand Philistiens, and we have had the Constitution and the law explained, iterated, and exhausted in an effort to defeat the bill. Next, the opponents of the bill resorted to amendments in every conceivable form, many of them frivolous, ridiculous, and unseemly. Then, the facile gentleman from Maryland, my friend Mr. FINDLAY, who is the embodiment of wit and sarcasm, and who evidently, like Tam o' Shanter's wife, who sat—

> Gathering her brows like gathering storm,
> Nursing her wrath to keep it warm—

like her he had been nursing his wit and his sarcasm to keep it warm to insured defeat, aided by several other gentlemen around him, gave his sarcasm vent upon this bill thus far without avail, as its friends have manfully stood by the interests of the people, and I trust will do so.

Mr. Chairman, this fact stands clearly out, that there has been no bill presented to this House the objects and purposes of which have been desired and asked for with such unanimity by the people of this country.

Mr. BLANCHARD. By what portion of the people of this country?

Mr. LORE. By the people all over the country. There is not a farmer in this country who makes one pound of butter beyond his family needs that does not desire the passage of this bill, and they number about eight millions.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman is certainly mistaken about that.

Mr. LORE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the point I desire to make is this: Oleomargarine is a fraudulent compound which is represented and sold as butter, and it imposes upon the people only because it is a fraud and is skillfully disguised under artful manipulations. Therefore, in the interest of fair and honest dealing, we desire to suppress this fraud, and, if necessary, even to tax it out of existence. But aside from that, if there were any doubt in my mind as to the propriety of the measure, that doubt would be dispelled by the way the matter is presented here on the one side and on the other. The forces arrayed in the contest show most clearly the true nature of the subject.

I will ask who are opposing this bill? First, the "cattle kings," who have their "flocks upon a thousand hills," claim that we must eat oleomargarine in order that their tallow and lard so used, the products of their herds may bring a higher price. Next, the manufacturers of the spurious articles who, at small expense and on small capital, preying upon popular needs with spurious compounds, are coining millions by deception and fraud. Then there is another class of men who oppose it—those who go about our cities gathering up the "fat of the land;" and sometimes they are not careful what kind of fat it is, so that it is animal fat. It is often foul, rancid, and malodorous. They gather it up, turn it into their factories, and convert it into an imitation of butter. One corporation last year is said to have made thereby over a million dollars. While your farming interests are paying about 2 per cent. on their lands and industry, you will find that these men are making two, three, four, even five hundred per cent.

On the other hand, the passage of this bill is desired by all that class of people, as I have before said, making even a pound of butter beyond that which they use in their families. The remedy applies to every section of the country. Of the eight million people engaged in agriculture, I think I may safely say at least one million have a direct personal interest in the passage of some measure that will give relief against these imitation butter frauds. Put up in the form of butter and intended to be bought by the community as such, this article is fraudulently foisted upon the public. Let it be branded; let it go out for just what it is; let people know what they are buying; and my word for it, no man is so poor, and I trust no man will be so mean, that he will feed his children upon such stuff as is put into this article, I care not how it may be purified.

Why, sir, we have evidence that in this very city men go about gathering up from the butcher-shops, market-houses offal and other matter which is absolutely so rancid and offensive as to sicken one as he walks past the cart; yet out of this disgusting garbage are manufactured oleomargarine, butterine, and other compounds of this character which are sought to be palmed off upon the people as pure and wholesome food. The materials out of which this spurious article is made may be steeped, as it is said they are, for forty-eight hours in salt, but the salt will have "lost its savor" before ever it can purify and make palatable such material. Yet in its favor we hear gentlemen presenting constitutional arguments and elaborate legal platitudes.

Sir, this bill is not subject to constitutional objections; it has been, and I presume will be, exposed to the shafts of ridicule from the subtle intellects that gather about us here; but ridicule is the last resort of desperation. Let me say to gentlemen who have so vigorously attacked the measure, "then bring in a better bill. It is easy to criticise and destroy; you admit the evil; give us an adequate remedy." The Committee on Agriculture has been considering this bill during this entire session; they are gentlemen of marked intelligence and capacity, and have given the subject mature thought and thorough consideration. I prefer their bill to crude suggestions made by members on the spur of the moment, however able such members may be. If any man in this House or any committee of the House can frame a bill which when brought up for discussion will not be objected to by some one of the three hundred and twenty-five members who are gathered here, representing all sections of our country, then indeed we shall have reached a period when the angels have gathered together and wise men may sit down and worship them. Verily the millennium would be upon us when three hundred and twenty-five Congressmen agree.

I desire to insert as a part of my remarks the following circular, issued by G. P. Lord, of Elgin, Ill., which delineates in the clearest manner the history, composition, and objectionable features of these fatty compounds which originated in the fertile brain of a Frenchman named Mége, in the dire distress and famine of the city of Paris in the Franco-Prussian war. I ask careful consideration of the facts as the best vindication of the wisdom of the bill:

MORE ARTIFICIAL BUTTER.

It is reported that boards of trade, cattle associations, and other commercial associations, Knights of Labor, and other organs of workmen have petitioned Congress against the passage of a law restraining and taxing the manufacture of oleomargarine.

It is claimed by these petitioners that "the manufacture of oleomargarine is now in such a state of perfection that the product is quite as healthful and palatable as that made from cream; that oleomargarine is much to be preferred as an article of food to rancid butter, and that there are not cows enough in the country to supply sufficient butter for the people."

To this it is replied that there is no such thing made as "rancid butter;" that if there ever is any rancid butter in the market it is because the demand for butter is not equal to the supply, and the butter has been kept until it has spoiled or became rancid; that whenever the demand shall be equal to the supply there will be no rancid butter in the market. Until such a state of things exist it is folly for any man to assert that there are not cows enough in the country to supply all the people with good, sweet, fresh dairy butter.

Then as to oleomargarine, if it be true that those engaged in that business have carried the manufacture of that article to such a state of perfection as to challenge the confidence of the public, it must be so by reason of improved methods or materials used by them.

As the manufacture of all kinds of substitutes for butter is carried on under patented formulas, we can know what materials are used, and the public can judge whether the article is equal to butter made from pure cream.

Patent No. 146012, dated December 30, 1873, is the famous Mége patent, and has been reissued three times, to wit: No. 5868, May 12, 1874; No. 8424, September 24, 1878; No. 10137, June 13, 1882.

Under this formula the following ingredients are used in making oleomargarine, to wit: Animal fats rendered at a very low temperature, salt, sulphite of soda, biphosphate of lime, bicarbonate of soda, 10 per cent. of milk, cream, or water, stomach of a calf, pig, or sheep, udder of a cow, and perhaps some butter.

Patent 110626, dated January 3, 1871. This patentee uses the following ingredients: "In twelve parts: beef or mutton, suet, tallow, three parts; vegetable or fixed oils seven parts; hog's lard, stearine two parts."

Patent 120026, dated October 17, 1871. This patentee uses "cotton-seed oil, chlorate of potash, niter, carbonic acid." And he kindly informed the officials in the Patent Office that his preparation is "found to be a pepastic and alterative" article of diet.

Patent 145840 was issued December 23, 1873. This patentee uses "tallow, lard, or other fatty matters, strongsulphuric acid, alum, chloride of sodium vapor."

Patent 153350, dated July 21, 1874. Ingredients used under this formula are "fat, sugar of lead, alum, bicarbonate of potash, nitrate of soda, and sulphuric acid."

Patent 169008, issued October 19, 1875. Ingredients used under this formula, "animal fats, salt, soda ash, bicarbonate of potasa, sweet cream."

Patent 173591, issued February 16, 1876. This patentee says that his "invention relates to the manufacture of butter for table use from oleine and margarine, as obtained from animal fats, fruits, and nuts," and under his formula he uses "animal fats, any one of the oil of peanuts, or oil of sweet almonds, or oil olives, lactic acid, cane sugar, caseine, chalk, and loppered cream or milk."

Patent 187327 was issued February 13, 1877. Under this formula the following ingredients are used: "Animal fats, salt, saltpeter, borax, boracic acid, salicylic acid, benzoic acid."

Patent 236483, issued January 11, 1881. This patentee "separates his oleine and margarine from the stearine by any known methods," then places the oleomargarine with an alkaline solution, and agitates them until the alkaline solution and oil globules of the oleomargarine are partly saponified, and then flavors this half-made soap with butyric acid, and he has the audacity to assure the officials in the Patent Office that his soap grease so flavored will have so "fine a flavor that even an expert can scarcely distinguish it from excellent dairy butter."

Patent 262207, dated August 8, 1882. Ingredients used in this formula: Animal fats, cotton-seed oil, slippery elm bark, to wit, "sixty-eight parts cotton-seed oil, twenty-eight parts prepared suine fat, and about five parts beef stearine."

Patent 263042, issued August 22, 1882. Under this formula the patentee uses oleomargarine obtained by the Mégé, or analagous processes, vegetable stearine obtained from cotton-seed oil, benne oil, or mustard-seed oil, emulsionizing the mixture with milk, cream, or other watery substances.

Patent 263199, dated August 22, 1882. N. I. Nathan, the patentee, claims to purify leaf lard that is usually put up in kegs, and he uses borax, nitric aid, more nitric acid, commercial oleomargarine, milk, or cream and sugar.

I have before me a copy of a letter addressed to N. S. Anderson, 921 D street, Washington, in which this patentee offers his "creamery brand of butterine, attractively put up, at 10 cents per pound."

Patent 264545 was issued September 19, 1882. Under this formula the patentee uses animal fats or vegetable oils and orris root.

Patent 266568, October 24, 1882. Under this formula the ingredients used are clarified lard, buttermilk, pepsin, and tallow.

Patent 266580, October 24, 1882. This patentee claims to use 50 to 60 per cent. of lard, 30 to 35 per cent. of butter, 5 to 10 per cent. of beef suet, 1 to 2 per cent. of glycerine, 5 to 10 per cent. of water. He kindly informs the Patent Office Department that prior to his invention inferior products have been made in which hog's fat has been used wholly in place of beef suet in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Patent 265833, dated October 10, 1882. This patentee treats his oleomargarine oil with sal soda, and the milk he uses he also treats with sal soda, then churns them together.

Patent 266417, issued October 24, 1882. Under this formula the following ingredients are used: Oleomargarine oil, butter, milk or cream, sweet or sour, sugar, glycerine, oil ben.

Patent 266568, October 24, 1882. This patentee claims to use lard, warm buttermilk, pepsin, tallow, and dairy butter.

Patent 266777, October 31, 1882. Under this formula the ingredients used are cotton-seed or other vegetable oils, caustic soda, corn starch, or other farinaceous flour that has been cooked.

Patent 267637, November 14, 1882. This patent uses sweet cream, oleomargarine, or oil derived from tallow, an oil derived from lard or hog fat, an oil derived from butter, oil derived from sesane, benne, sunflower seed, or cotton-seed.

Patent 327626, October 6, 1885. This patentee uses milk, white wine rennet, bicarbonate of soda, bicarbonate of potassium, alum, butter.

Patent 335084, January 26, 1886. This patentee uses milk, rennet, nitrate of potash, granulated sugar, and butter.

There are other patents for making oleomargarine, butterine, or substitutes for butter, but as these are among the latest discoveries or inventions they show whether or not "the manufacture of oleomargarine is now in such a state of perfection" as to be able to produce an article that is fit for food, saying nothing about its value as compared with pure butter.

It will be noticed that the patentee of No. 267637, issued November 14, 1882, has introduced into his compound an "oil derived from butter." If we inquire how this is obtained we will find that the "rancid butter" in the market is "deodorized," and the oil is afterward expressed and is being used in various ways in the manufacture of food.

But we say again that there is no such thing as "rancid butter" made; that butter becomes rancid because the supply is greater than the demand.

As those engaged in making spurious butter are continually harping about "rancid butter," we would emphasize the fact that rancid butter is butter that has spoiled because there is not a sufficient demand to meet the supply in the market, that nineteen-twentieths, if not ninety-nine hundredths of the butter made in this country—when fresh—would be of a flavor and quality fit for a king.

The manufacture of poor butter is a thing of the past, not because, as it is claimed, the manufacture of bogus butter has compelled farmers to improve the quality of their product, but because the demand for fine butter and the enhanced value of such butter has stimulated the dairy farmers throughout the country to improve the quality of their butter and thereby secure to themselves the enhanced value.

And here we may say that pure, sweet, fresh dairy butter is the finest and cheapest flavoring extract for flavoring and making food palatable that can be found in the market, nor as such a flavoring extract is the price of butter beyond the reach of the poor.

The poor or laboring class can not afford to spoil their food by using an imitation or spurious flavoring extract in the preparation of their food.

That oleomargarine is unfit for use in the culinary department is evidenced by the fact that the French Academy of Medicine reported that it was unfit for use in the French hospitals, and the French minister refused to allow its use in hospitals under charge of that government.

This fact was brought before the Committee on Epidemic Diseases as per their report No. 199 of February 4, 1881, ordered printed to accompany bill H. R. 7005.

It is fair to say that if the French oleomargarine is unfit for French paupers, this American oleomargarine (as shown by the patents) is entirely unfit for American freemen to use.

Nor is the point well taken that "the manufacture of imitation butter has quite as much right to seek protection as those engaged in dairying."

Manufacturing imitation or spurious butter is a fraud that is injurious to a legitimate and long-established industry. It is also a fraud upon the public. No one inquires in the market for spurious or imitation butter.

All such stuff is palmed off on an unsuspecting public as butter.

To ask Government protection for such a fraud is as senseless as it would be to require the Government to protect "lotteries," counterfeiters, or any other fraudulent schemers.

True, the dairymen ask protection, and why? Because the Government has given to parties chartered or patented rights, enabling such parties to manufacture and sell—either as genuine or otherwise, as they please—an imitation of their product. We say to sell either as genuine or otherwise for the reason that there is no limitation of their rights in the patents which they have obtained. There are no patents on dairy butter.

That business has been carried on for hundreds of years, and it is open to all, and the farmer has no protection against the frauds perpetrated by those who have obtained chartered or patented rights from the Government to defraud the dairymen of their legitimate industry.

It is strange that our Government should have ever granted to any man or set of men charters or patents that would, in the very nature of things, defraud and destroy any legitimate agricultural industry of this country. Stranger still that Congress should hesitate or delay in enacting such laws as will repair the injury already done by those who are carrying on a business that has been inaugurated under and by virtue of charters which they have obtained from the Government.

It is true that the dairy industry does ask protection; and they claim that the Government has no more right to grant charters or patents for the manufacture of an imitation of butter than it has to give permits for the manufacture of bank bills or coin, or for establishing lotteries, or to any or all of the numerous frauds that are practiced on the public.

The dairymen further claim that the Government having granted to parties patented rights for the manufacture of imitation butter, and allowed the business to extend so as to largely supply the demand for butter so that the farmer's product is allowed to accumulate and spoil, or grow "rancid" in the hands of commission merchants in our large cities, therefore it is the duty of Congress to pass such laws as will restrain the further progress of this evil, and thus restore to the dairymen their legitimate and well-earned rights.

Nor is this all, for the public need protection as well as the dairymen, for under all of the patented formulas the animal fat is rendered at a very low temperature, a temperature so low as not to destroy any parasites that may have been in the living animal.

It is true that all of the patentees seek to separate the animal fat from the tissue, but no one will claim that such a separation is perfect, and therefore any living parasite that may be in the animal tissue is liable to and is frequently transferred to and is found in samples of oleomargarine.

Professor Piper testifies that while no true butter can carry trichina, eggs of the tape-worm, &c., he has found in oleomargarine not only organic substances in the form of muscular and connective tissue and various fungi, but also living organisms and eggs resembling those of tape-worms.

Mr. Michaels, of New York city, a microscopist, and once (if not now) editor of a scientific journal, testifies that oleomargarine is simply uncooked raw fat, never subjected to sufficient heat to kill parasites that are liable to be in it. He states that he has found in it tissue and muscle and cells of a suspicious nature, and that Mr. Sayler has also found in it positively identified germs of disease.

The Rev. E. Huber, microscopist, of Richmond, Va., writes in the Southern Clinic of May, 1880, that oleomargarine differs in its microscopical appearance as well as in its nutrititive and dietetic qualities, from true butter; that the fats in it are not subjected to a heat sufficient to destroy the germs of septic and putrefactive organisms, and that there may also be introduced into the system by its means the eggs which develop into tape-worms. And he states that he has frequently found in oleomargarine eggs resembling tape-worms.

Dr. George B. Harrison, a microscopist of Boston, Mass., in the Boston Herald of January 8, 1881, says he has recently examined some twenty specimens of oleomargarine, obtained from different dealers, and has found in every specimen more or less of foreign substances, a variety of animal and vegetable life, the blood corpuscles of sheep, the egg of a tape-worm; yeast was found sprouting in considerable quantities, and spores of fungi were very prevalent. He found a portion of a worm, dead hydra varidis, portions of muscular fibers, fatty cells, and eggs from some small parasites.

The English microscopist, W. H. Dallinger, said to be the greatest living authority on this subject, in a letter to the American Journal of Microscopy of October, 1878, shows that oleomargarine is not subjected to a heat sufficient to kill the living organisms which refuse fats are liable to contain.

And Geoge T. Angell, of Boston says:

"No man would knowingly give his wife or children for butter the raw, uncooked fats of animals that may have died of cattle plague, hog cholera, or other diseases.

"But how manufacturers are to guard either themselves or the public against the fats of such animals is a problem which no manufacturer or chemist employed by him has thus far, to my knowledge, attempted to explain. * * * If any one shall ever assert that such fats can not be used, I am prepared with evidence to prove to the contrary."

These facts were presented to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and are incorporated in their report, No. 199, to accompany H. R. bill 7005, on adulteration of food, February 4, 1881, and that committee says that they have investigated so far as they could the injurious and poisonous compounds used in the preparation of food substances, and find from the evidence submitted to them that the adulteration of articles used in the every-day diet of vast numbers of people has grown to and is now practiced to such an extent as to seriously endanger the public health, and to call loudly for some sort of legislative correction.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally; and, Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. No. 79) for the relief of William L. Dunlop, trustee;

An act (H. R. 1361) giving a pension to Nira D. Gwynne;

An act (H. R. 3921) granting an increase of pension to Richard Gear;

An act (H. R. 6429) granting a pension to Eunice E. Clark;

An act (H. R. 7207) making appropriation to supply deficiency in amount required for expenditure to June 30, 1886, for examination and surveys required by acts of March 3, 1875, and June 19, 1878, to ascertain depth of water and width of channel at South Pass of Mississippi River;

An act (H. R. 1398) to grant a pension to Silas S. White; and

An act (H. R. 5254) to increase the pension of George W. Smith.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. MCADOO. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, recognizing the fact that the product under consideration so closely resembles butter that there should be some distinction made, so that the purchaser may know that he is buying oleomargarine instead of butter, I have very reluctantly come to the conclusion that it is my duty as a member of this House, looking to my obligation under the Constitution of the United States, to vote against this bill. Sir, if the Constitution of the country is to be entirely left out of sight in our legislation, there is no evil in the land against which we may not direct our enactments. There is a great deal of agitation throughout the country in favor of what is called a "uniform divorce law," and this Congress could readily be flooded with appeals from clergymen, philanthropists, humanitarians, and social reformers in behalf of the enactment by Congress of a law which would make our marriage laws uniform throughout the whole country. How many touching appeals to our hearts and our judgments could be made on such a question we can all readily imagine. And yet every member of this House knows full well that the Constitution of the United States does not permit the Federal Government to interfere with the marriage relation in the several States. Yet, Mr. Chairman, with as much propriety and as much constitutionality might Congress interfere with the marriage laws because some people consider it a great evil that they are not uniform and are considered unjust in many States as to lose sight of this instrument and pass a law to interfere and regulate the police and internal arrangements of the several States, under the confessedly untrue plea that we want to increase internal taxes. Admitting the whole case against oleomargarine, in my opinion the remedy is worse than the disease. Opposed to internal taxes, how can I vote for this admittedly unnecessary one? Opposed to interference with legislation that properly belongs to the States, how can I give my vote for this bill? I deeply respect the farmers and am jealous of the rights of the consumers, but to serve either I can not set this vicious precedent in Federal legislation. It is doubtful, in my humble judgment, if legalizing oleomargarine by a tax will not make it stronger. Taxing whisky helps the whisky-making interests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is at all germane to this discussion we should go into the question of the healthfulness or unhealthfulness of this article. Much eloquence has been lost, or at least expended, here as to the purity or impurity of oleomargarine. Gentlemen have given loose rein to their imagination. They have seen horrid shapes and things of darkness creeping through it. Mr. Chairman, let me say, and as no defense of oleomargarine, that if you subject to the microscope almost any article of food you will find these horrid shapes and things are in it. [Laughter.]

But, sir, it has been, in my opinion, left an open question, after all this storm of words, and even of contending scientists here, whether oleomargarine, if made according to the established formula, is unhealthy. Why, the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE] who has just sat down is, in his severe and classical proportions, a physical example of the effect of dairy butter, while my urbane, rotund, and oleaginous friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING] represents the effect of eating oleomargarine. [Great laughter and applause.]

The same argument will apply almost to any article of food. If we are going to protect the stomachs of the people by depleting their pockets let us take up the subject of sausages. [Laughter and applause.] Let us take up the weird and mysterious subject of hash. [Renewed laughter.] Millions of free Americans to-day in millions of boarding-houses throughout the land are being supplied with, and place implicit confidence in, a compound under the denomination of hash, which science dares not engage and which no man knows the contents of. [Laughter and applause.] Let us have a heavy tax, say of 75 cents, on every dish of hash, and let us compel boarding-house keepers to file in the city hall of every town or city an inventory of the component parts of this most remarkable American dish. [Laughter and applause.]

The chairman held that amendments offered to the bill were facetious and ridiculous. Now, Mr. Chairman, without questioning the ability and foreknowledge of the Chair, let me suggest that if a ridiculous measure comes before Congress all amendments to it of necessity must be ridiculous. Such amendments are germane for the very reason that they are in harmony with the subject, and it was this my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] clearly pointed out by his amendment offered yesterday. It appeared ridiculous ad infinitum if carried out to its logical consequences.

I do sincerely hope this bill, which has the single merit of trying to prevent the fraud of trying to impose upon an innocent purchaser a spurious article for that which he intends to buy, but which in its proposed remedy violates the Constitution and which lays a long train of evils in its path the end of which no member of this House can foresee, which is so vicious in its propensities and inclinations as a legislative measure from the crown of its head to the sole of its feet that I sincerely hope it will be defeated.

I have considered it fairly and honestly and sincerely wanted to vote for it, but can not with my convictions. I have the remonstrance and petition of every man in New Jersey who owns a muley or horned or other Jersey cow in behalf of this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. LORE. Will the gentleman yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCADOO. I have not time. With me it is simply a question, shall I violate my oath to support the fundamental law of the country? Will I, in order to abate one evil, lay the train for a thousand others? Will I help by my vote to start Congress on the track of vicious legislation in order to allay the temporary excitement of the country on behalf of these interests said to be imperiled?

When the sober second thought of this House comes back to it, when this bill is carefully analyzed, when its consequences are seen members will surely hesitate on this bill. When men instead of discussing the real question at issue dilate on the horrid character of oleomargarine as they depict it and as contrasted with dairy butter, the real issue is obscured and we fail in our duty. It is not a question of expediency, but one of duty.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some reasons why this bill should not be passed unless it is substantially amended.

If this measure fails its projectors will be responsible for its fate. A conservative bill, dealing fairly and justly with all the interests involved, might, in my opinion, have passed without provoking serious or protracted opposition. It is not surprising that when it is proposed to tax a butter substitute, honestly made and honestly sold, to the point of prohibition, that the attempt is resisted with earnestness. Why, the license taxes imposed on this industry exceed by 400 per cent. those put on the manufacturers and dealers in tobacco and spirituous and malt liquors. Is this necessary to protect the consumer? Is it necessary to insure an honest commerce? In addition to the special-license taxes the bill levies a tax on the product equal to not less than $20,000,000 per annum. Besides this the bill provides for extravagant and inhuman punishments for trivial offenses.

It is to these provisions I object. Against these I enter my earnest and solemn protest. It is these extraordinary and unnecessary exactions and punishments which inspire my opposition. Reduce these taxes, diminish these penalties, and my support is assured. I do not seek to impair the measure, but by making it fair and reasonable insure its efficiency. Take off three-fourths of your special-license fees and put a tax on the product of 2 cents per pound and your bill is safe. The tax I suggest will raise $4,000,000 a year. Then this will indeed be a revenue measure. Tax it 10 cents a pound and the industry will be destroyed and the Treasury will not receive a dollar. The bill as it is will not, in my judgment, pay the expenses of its execution. But the interest behind this legislation does not want taxes, but wants prohibition. At the hazard of repeating myself I submit—

First. The manufacture of oleomargarine is a lawful and an entirely legitimate industry; that the pure product is a nutritious food, clean, palatable, and healthy; that it is made and sold in large quantities in our domestic trade and is exported for what it really is. It has been subjected to the most rigid scientific tests and found to be a harmless and healthy food.

Second. There enters into the honest product no ingredient that is not healthy and in common use on the tables of the best people; that it is made of pure and sound beef fat, leaf lard, vegetable oils mixed with milk, cream, and pure butter; that while it is as healthy and palatable as butter, it may be produced cheaper, and is therefore more easily obtained by consumers of limited means.

Third. This new industry has not only furnished the people a cheaper food, but has increased the demand for, and as a result the value of, the beef cattle and fatted swine of the farmer. If the manufacture tends to diminish the profits of the dairy, its destruction will rob the farmer who deals in fat cattle and swine of a portion of his just and rightful profits.

Fourth. All legitimate industries have a right to live. If an industry is lawful, healthy, and pursued by honest methods, it ought not to be subjected to taxes, penalties, or conditions not imposed on other lawful pursuits. It is the true American policy to encourage home production, increase the market for what we raise, and create larger fields for the employment of labor. That oleomargarine may be substituted for butter, or that it is cheaper than butter, is no excuse for legislation that will destroy it or injure it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these propositions have not been seriously questioned in this debate. The conclusion to which they inevitably lead is easily understood. But, sir, again I say these evils growing out of this traffic ought to be remedied, and so far as the remedy provided by this bill is just and reasonable it is worthy of support. It is certain—no one denies it—that a filthy and unhealthy food product in imitation of butter, a bogus oleomargarine, is often put on the market as butter by unscrupulous men. This I condemn without reservation, and this I would prevent by the exercise of any legitimate legislative power. But, sir, because filthy butter is sometimes sold as pure butter affords no excuse for taxing all butter out of existence. Because a New York dairyman waters his milk and then chalks it is no reason why honest milk should be taxed. All the legislation needed in these instances is such as will secure honest butter and pure milk.

Now, sir, this evil, this grievous evil of selling impure and unhealthy food products is a crime against society, and is so declared by the penal code of every State and every incorporated city in the Union. It seems that these laws, if faithfully enforced, would protect the people from "a fungi, tape-worm, and trichina" imitation butter wherever made or by whomsoever offered for sale. I am pleased to see that this bill gives the people some additional protection by subjecting this unhealthy and filthy stuff to seizure and confiscation. As this power to seize and confiscate is exercised by the Government to duly enforce a collection of its revenues it is subject to no constitutional objection. If, however, this legislation was intended solely to protect the public health it would be a palpable invasion of the authority of the States.

I hope this provision will remain in the bill. While it is an incident only of the taxing power, it will aid in securing the people a pure food, and will be a protection in some measure to every honest food product intended for table use as butter or as a substitute for it. Honest men who make honest butter substitutes and put them fairly upon our markets will benefit by it, as will the producers of the pure butter of the dairy. This legislation only discriminates against the dishonest and impure product.

Sir, I go further: I admit an imitation butter is sometimes imposed on the people as genuine butter. This is a fraud, and while the State only can declare the act criminal and impose a punishment on it, I freely admit the Government may, in the discretion of Congress, impose a tax on the product, whether it is pure or otherwise. I have all the time admitted the power. It is only a question of expediency. I think all thinking men will admit, when they reflect coolly and dispassionately, that the taxing power should never be invoked except when revenue is needed for public purposes. But I pass this point. I freely concede that if we may impose a tax on butterine, or oleomargarine, or other substitutes for butter, we have the right to provide for ascertaining where these substances are, who manufacture them, who sell them, and to equip all the necessary machinery to prevent them from escaping the tax-gatherer.

To accomplish these ends we may compel them to be sold and offered for sale for what they really are. I am not prepared to question the fairness or prudence of this part of the bill. To me it seems a legitimate use of the taxing power. What I have been attempting to impress upon the minds of the committee is that when we have compelled the dealers in a pure and healthy imitation butter to offer it for sale and to sell it for just what it is—to put it on the market in its real name and to sail it under its true colors—we have given the makers and dealers in butter all they can rightfully ask. All that one citizen can ask of another is honest competition. The rights of one citizen are as sacred as those of another. My honestly acquired property is as much entitled to protection as yours. Shall the lawful occupation of one citizen of the Republic be stricken down that that of another may thrive and grow fat? It has been tauntingly said to me, "You are the friend of bogus butter." I answer, "No; I know nothing about it, and I do not care if not an ounce of it is ever made." But, sir, I am honestly contending for a principle worth more to the people a thousand times than all the butter, pure or spurious, that has ever been made—the perfect liberty of every citizen of the Republic to an equal right with every other citizen to engage in a lawful enterprise, and the right of all to pursue an honest industry without being subjected to unnecessary taxation. The vindication of this liberty, of this equality, of this right to enjoy the fruits of honest toil is of inestimable value to the poor and the rich alike. In the presence of this great principle the other questions presented by this bill are scarcely worthy a moment's thought.

But, sir, I say again I am willing to so legislate that no manufacturer of a product that may be used as butter can practice a fraud on the consumer. I am anxious to protect an honest article from having to compete with a fraud. Who asks more asks me in the sacred name of the law to oppress some one, to injure some industry, to destroy some interest. This I dare not do.

I repeat with emphasis that I regret that protection to any industry must be given in a questionable way; but as this bill on its face is for revenue, and this assumed protection a proper incident, I will waive my objections, serious objections, to its methods, and give it my best support whenever its projectors will consent that it be shorn of its power and its purpose to destroy honest and perfectly legitimate industries.

Is not my proposition a fair one? No gentleman in this debate has shown, or attempted to show, that the amendments I suggest will in the least impair the protection the friends of the measure seek, if they seek only what they publicly claim.

You may force me, gentlemen, to vote against this bill. If I do, it will not be, as you know, because I indorse impure foods or sympathize with dishonest methods; but because I am not willing to indorse measures or a principle that will unnecessarily destroy an industry, a measure that will tax a fair and honest business wholly out of existence. I must demand as a condition of my support a modification of the penalties and a reduction of the onerous and inequitable special taxes imposed by this bill. I hope I am understood. It has been my purpose to define my position clearly.

Every gentleman knows that this extraordinary tax, these extreme penalties, are not required to protect the consumers of food. It is an open secret that this use of the taxing power is intended to secure the end I have imputed to it, and I submit it is a monstrous outrage to use this power to destroy even the weakest or the humblest honorable industry. No manufacture ought to demand more than to be secured a fair, open, and honest opportunity to compete with a rival industry.

It is said this measure is not a departure from the long-established policy of the country; that we have always exercised the power to tax one product to protect another. I deliberately deny that this has been the case as between home products. We tax tobacco, but what home product competes with tobacco? We tax whisky, but not in the interest of a rival industry. We tax imitation wines as wines to prevent frauds on the revenue. All these measures are for revenue solely. Customs duties are imposed on a rival product when of foreign manufacture to protect American home labor. The prime object of a tariff is to prevent the destruction of a home industry by foreign cheap labor. Tariffs favor home production. They encourage home competition and the development of new industries. This bill protects nothing from foreign labor, it encourages no home competition, nor does it build up any new industry. On the contrary, it destroys competition and robs one citizen to put the money in the pocket of another. Have it understood that "protection to American industry" means this and you give it a blow from which it will not easily recover. This bill seeks a class legislation in its present shape of the most pronounced type. A great danger lurks under its thin diguises; it makes a precedent which may be at any time employed to destroy the weak in the interest of the strong. The theory upon which this bill proceeds may be used to justify any legislative monopoly however monstrous or exacting. A morning paper somewhat ironically but truthfully says:

> If Congress is to put a prohibitory tax on butterine at the command of the dairy interest, why should it not put a prohibitory tax on gas at the command of the whale-oil and petroleum interests, and on blue jeans at the command of the woolen interests, and on pork and sausages at the command of the hucksters of mutton-chops, and on plain straw hats for the "protection" of the Panama-hat importers, and on two-dollar shoes for the protection of Burt's shoes at $6 a pair, and on cider and lager beer for the benefit of champagne?

And I may add, why not tax the common milk of the farm for the benefit of the golden dairy product of the Alderney or the Devon, and white butter in the interest of the yellow, and all inferior farm products in favor of those that may be assumed to be their superiors? A principle in legislation that could even be tortured to justify these things is frightful. Never was a measure supported by more extravagant declamation or stranger or more inconsistent logic.

On one hand it is said if these imitations are put on the market for what they are, under their true name, nobody will buy them. When we ask if they are not healthy food products, and may they not be lawfully sold, and bought, and used, we are answered, "Yes; and if we tax them at the enormous rate of 200 per cent., cover the business of production and sale all over with frightful penalties, and compel them to go into the market as imitations, they will still be sold, bought, and consumed." On the one hand it is said that these products can pay these taxes and live and thrive; on the other it is declared that they ought to be crucified by taxation. Tell me, gentlemen, please tell me who is right? If these compounds are inevitably filthy, impure, or unhealthy, in the name of humanity let them be exterminated root and branch. For such stuff I have no defense. I will, in all proper ways, assist in protecting mankind from such. But, Mr. Chairman, the framers of this bill admit these imitations to be harmless, or the bill itself is a shameless fraud, for it encourages their production for exportation by exempting from taxation all that may be sent abroad. Do you propose to sell the Germans, French, and English commodities that are unclean and dangerous to health? Are you in earnest in encouraging this exportation? Oh, the foreigner will rush into the market to get American oleomargarine when he reads this debate!

It is said that the trade in these goods is secured by improper and fraudulent means. If so, let the wrong and the fraud be prevented. No one objects; but do not seek to correct the abuse by legislation as improper and fraudulent as is the wrong itself. Do not destroy all respect for the name and fame of our great country by sending a sham and a fraud into the markets of the world. But I do not impute this purpose to any gentleman. This exportation clause is a confession that these compounds may be and are made pure and healthful. That they are such I offer here a little of the proofs, volumes of which are in my possession.

The supreme court of New York says in The People vs. Marx, June, 1885:

> On the part of the defendant it is proved by distinguished chemists that oleomargarine was composed of the same elements as dairy butter. The only difference between them was that it contained a smaller proportion of fatty substance known as butterine; that this butterine exists in dairy butter only in a small proportion—from 3 to 6 per cent.; that it exists in no other substance than butter made from milk, and is introduced into oleomargarine butter by adding to the oleomargarine stock some milk, cream, or butter, and churning; and when this is done it has all the elements of natural butter, but there must always be a smaller per cent. of butterine in the manufactured product than in butter made from milk. The only effect of the butterine is to give flavor to the butter, having nothing to do with its wholesomeness; that the oleaginous substances in the oleomargarine are substantially identical with those produced from butter and cream. Professor Chandler testified that the only difference between the two articles was that dairy butter had more butterine; that oleomargarine contained not over 1 per cent. of that substance, while dairy butter might contain 4 or 5 per cent; and that if 4 or 5 per cent. were added to oleomargarine there would be no difference; it would be butter; irrespective of sources, they would be the same substances. According to the testimony of Professor Morton, whose statement was not questioned or controverted, oleomargarine, so far from being an article devised for the purposes of deception in trade, was devised by a French scientist, who was employed by the French Government to devise a substitute for butter.

This is the substance of the uncontradicted testimony of sixteen distinguished chemists whose names are before me. I will not tire the patience of the committee by giving them; they may be found in the record of this case.

In deciding the above case the supreme court makes some observations which I commend to the serious consideration of all. I quote:

> Measures of this kind are dangerous even to their promoters. If the argument of the respondent in support of the absolute power of the Legislature to prohibit one branch of industry for the purpose of protecting another with which it competes can be sustained, why could not the oleomargarine manufacturers, should they obtain sufficient power to influence or control the legislative councils, prohibit the manufacture or sale of dairy products? Would arguments then be found wanting to demonstrate the invalidity under the Constitution of such an act? The principle is the same in both cases. The numbers engaged upon each side of the controversy can not influence the question here. Equal rights to all are what are intended to be secured by the establishment of constitutional limits to legislative power and impartial tribunals to enforce them.

I could multiply judicial authorities asserting this doctrine, but I need not. Nobody controverts it. It is a corner-stone of republican government. It would be well for all to consider the danger of asserting that one of two industries, securing control of Congress by force of its numbers, may lawfully tax the other out of existence. That this bill proposes to do, and that every court holds may not be done without violating the letter and the spirit of the Constitution.

But, says some one whose hands are wholly innocent of the touch of the plow-handle, and whose zeal is in proportion to his want of knowledge of agriculture, its wants or its interests, "I am for the farmer, and you are his enemy." I might retort, but I will not, "Who annointed these lawyer-Congressmen" the guardians of the toiling farmer? I am not a farmer, but nearly every dollar of my little means is invested in the farm and its products. My family, friends, and supporters are largely engaged in agriculture, and he who intimates that I do not respect the farmer, his industry and his interest, is wholly ignorant of the facts. Farmers are the bed-rock of our industrial systems; they are fair and intelligent; they despise the demagogues who traffic in their good name; they ask nothing but justice and equality in legislation for legal methods and honest goods; they are capable of judging both motives and measures.

I am told by many of its friends that all of the objectionable features of the measure will be eliminated before it can become a law. Well, sir, when this is done it will stand well in my favor and get my vote.

To get clear of unwise and dangerous provisions is just what I have been seeking to do. Oh, it is said, we can not do this here; we must stand by the bill of the committee and let its defects be cured elsewhere. Why, sir, this House did not delegate the authority to this committee to commit it to this or any other bill, and it is as much the duty of the House to pass a good and fair bill as it is of the Senate. To skulk responsibility is an act of cowardice, as I look at it, and I respectfully decline to do it. But again, and for the last time, I say that when a just bill is presented I will vote for it, and my convictions of duty compel me to vote against the present bill. I hope one will come from the Senate that will challenge the support of all.

I have not attempted to delay this measure nor to defeat any just end it is capable of attaining. The majority has the right to pass it and I will not seek its defeat by resorting to parliamentary obstructions, but will help its friends to reach a vote at as early a day as is practicable. I have endeavored and will continue to labor to perfect it and make it fit to become a law. From the beginning my whole desire has been to give protection to all and save all from injury. There is little hope that any amendment will be allowed by this House. All about me gentlemen say it must go through just as it is. I do not like this method of legislation, but each must act and judge for himself. I will do my duty as I understand it. From time to time I will offer such amendments as may appear to me to be fair and just, and such as will not impair the efficiency of the measure in the attainment of any honest purpose, and if all substantial amendments are rejected, I will be compelled, in obedience to my judgment and my best convictions of duty, to vote against it. My people never ask me to do what in my conscience I believe to be an unjust and dangerous thing. This is a sudden frenzy—so sudden as to justify suspicion of its purpose. It has never been discussed in any canvass nor been debated by the people. My constituency—a thinking, reading people, engaged in all the varied industries, in trade, manufacture, agriculture—have given me no instructions, but left me to follow my judgment. This I have done with an honest purpose and with a full sense of my responsibility to them as their representative.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I profess to have just as high a regard for the Constitution as my colleague who has just spoken [Mr. McADOO], and having that high regard, I can with a clean conscience vote for this bill.

I rose simply to say a word about the pending amendment. During all of these weary days I have voted consistently with the friends of this bill. The character of the opposition has been such as to almost imbitter me against any proposed amendment; but I say to the House that in my judgment this amendment ought to be adopted. It is offered by a friend to the bill and is offered for a worthy purpose, to allow the manufacturer who puts care and prudence into his goods to demonstrate that fact to the consumer of those goods. It seems to me that no valid reason can be urged against the amendment to the bill, and the bill itself would be stronger with the House and before the country with that amendment if adopted.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment so as to make it read:

In tubs or other wooden or paper packages not before used for that purpose, each containing, &c.

Then following the amendment as now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It is simply to insert in line 2 of this section, after the word "wooden," the words "or paper;" and upon that amendment I desire to express a few further opinions upon this bill, which should be styled a bill for the betrayal of the party, and for an outrage of the rights of the people.

This bill, professing to be in the interest of honest table food, professing to be in the interest of the farmer class of the country, not only fixes pains and penalties upon a legitimate industry, but requires that that industry shall be so conducted that there will be no packages of less than 10 pounds, making it impossible for a poor man out of his weekly wages to buy a complete package of this product however unhealthful it may be, or however much he may desire it. It is not only, therefore, a bill to rob the poor man, but it is a bill to muzzle and to chain him. It is not only a bill in favor of fraudulent dairy interests, but it is a bill for the oppression of those who can least take care of themselves.

Mr. MORGAN. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No; I can not yield.

Mr. MORGAN. Then let me state that a man can sell a spoonful if he wants to, if he pays the tax.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And, Mr. Chairman, it not only does that, but it offers a reward to every man's neighbor to become a spy upon his neighbor. This act would undertake to create again the informer system in this country and to divide the fees among the informers. First, the State wiped out the iniquitous system as barbarous and infamous; then the General Government wiped it out, and it has been ever since, in the Halls of this Capitol in every Congress that has ever sat here, denounced as unjust and oppressive.

You remember how corruptions and frauds arose under it in New York, where this spy and informer system was in force; how complaint was made all over the country where it prevailed, and yet we return to this stinking, nasty, fraudulent system for the purpose of carrying out this miserable bill. Why, the bill makes every man's neighbor a spy. It gives him a reward for informing upon his neighbor; and under the bill, if it should ever pass, no man or woman can feel safe while his or her neighbor is paying a visit.

Mr. STRUBLE. Especially if violating the law.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Ah, if they are violating the law! Sir, if you had that regard for the law you are undertaking now to preach up you would not be here advocating this bill. [Laughter.] This is not the first time we have heard people cry out and advocate things in this Hall that we know they are not in favor of. I stood here not five minutes ago and heard a man say he was voting for the bill because he was an arrant coward.

Mr. STRUBLE. You did not hear me say that.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Who was it? Why does not the gentleman call the name?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If I undertook to call the names of those who are acting in that manner it would take me the whole of my five minutes, and I would have to commence on that side of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Give one name.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If gentlemen on that side want the names I will point them out.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman ought not to use the expression or make such a statement if he does not intend to give the names; and if the gentleman refers to me, his statement is not true. When the gentleman makes such a statement and does not call names, he reflects upon every man here.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let those gentlemen who think that I reflect upon them call upon me and I will not be found wanting.

Mr. CANNON. However, it creates a sort of a suspicion. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Oh! I understand that. Gentlemen know as well as I do the object of this bill. Some people are very suspicious on all subjects because they have very evil natures. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. That does not apply to this side. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Now, sir, this bill, full to overflowing with iniquities, can be styled nothing whatever but a betrayal on the part of the Democrats of their party, and a betrayal of the people on the part of the Republicans, who have always claimed to be the friends of the laboring man.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. It occurs to me there has probably been scolding enough about this bill. I have sat here for four days and heard it. I have heard everybody's motives impugned; everybody accused of cowardice or foolishness in connection with this bill. I never thought as a matter of taste that was a very manly way in which to present one's views touching matters before the House. It is to be supposed that each man here performs his duties, and represents his constituents as he believes is right, according to his judgment and under his oath; and for one I have yet to arise in my place in this House and make insinuations against my fellow-members, collectively or individually, unless I was ready when challenged to give the name or names.

I want to say for myself, for fear that my mere silence here for days might give assent by implication to these statements that are made, the principle involved in this bill meets my full and hearty approval. I believe in it. I am for it, because I believe it is just and proper, and if enacted into law will inure to the benefit of the great majority of the people of this country [applause], not only the farmer but the people that depend upon the farmer as well.

I could take the speeches of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whose seat is before me [Mr. KELLEY], and the speeches of gentlemen all along the line from the foundation of the Government to the present time, where they show the propriety of a promotion of a diversity of industries, and I will strike out iron, strike out steel, strike out woolen goods, strike out anything, and insert butter in its place, and you have the argument as strongly in this case as you have in the cases that they put so ably and so strongly.

Once more I want to say I am for this bill, not only because I believe I am representing my constituency, but I am for the principle involved in it, because I believe it is justified and demanded from a broad and just public policy.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to ask my friend a question before he sits down, as his time is not yet exhausted. Are you in favor of taxing any industry in this country for the very purpose of destroying it? Let the gentleman answer categorically.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman in reply that I am not only in favor of raising revenue, but I am in favor of protecting every great industry in this country that needs protection.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, undoubtedly; but that does not answer my question. Is my friend in favor of taxing any industry to destroy it simply because it is the competitor of another industry? Yes or no.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I agree with the principle the gentleman enunciates.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will be still I will see if, in my own time, I can make a proper answer to his question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I am in favor of so taxing bogus butter as to prevent its being passed upon the consumer as genuine butter at a price not only equal to its real value, but an added price for the falsehood that is told to the consumer who takes it for butter, when in fact it is a counterfeit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Laughter.] The hour for debate on this amendment and the amendment thereto is exhausted. The question is on the amendment to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise. Pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the section under discussion and the amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. VAN EATON. Will the gentleman give me five of them?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. HATCH. Then I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Upon what amendment does the gentleman propose to limit debate?

Mr. HATCH. On all amendments to the pending section.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendments as they now stand, and the Chair thinks those may be disposed of before the question is put on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

The amendment proposed by Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, was read, as follows:

In line 2, section 6, after the word "wooden," insert "or paper;" so that it will read "in firkins, tubs, or other wooden or paper packages."

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask if that is a proper amendment to my amendment, since mine has reference to one line, and the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia has reference to another?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. This is a proper amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, because his amendment relates to the quantity of certain packages, and mine designates the character of packages in which his quantity is put.

Mr. HATCH. I suggest to the gentleman from West Virginia if he will offer his amendment to the sixteenth line, where the packages are mentioned in connection with their sale, I will accept the amendment as far as I am concerned. But in the second line there is a reference merely to the manufacturer.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. As the gentleman from Missouri says he will accept it at the sixteenth line, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether he will not accept my amendment with the view of perfecting the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 3 and 4, section 6, strike out the words "each containing not less than 10 pounds."

Mr. HATCH. I will state frankly I can not accept that amendment, simply because it is an effort to allow the manufacturer to imitate butter in rolls of half a pound or a pound.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow my second amendment to be read, and then he will understand my purpose is not what he now states?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the remainder of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, section 6, strike out the word "only" and insert in lieu thereof "the same only when put up in stamped packages or."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask to have my amendment read in order that the chairman of the committee may see that I had no such purpose as he intimated of letting the oleomargarine be put up in packages to counterfeit butter. My object is to allow the manufacturer to make up packages so small that they can go with their seals unbroken and the internal-revenue stamp upon them from the manufacturer to the wholesaler, from the wholesaler to the retailer, and from the retailer to the consumer, so that nobody can be deceived. I will say to the chairman of the committee that one gentleman here, a strong friend of this measure, has characterized this as an amendment tending to perfect the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I have no doubt gentlemen have so stated, and that may be their view of it, but we have considered that question very carefully in the committee—it was under consideration for hours—and we know what would be the effect of the amendment suggested by the gentleman. Not that he has any such purpose in offering the amendment, or any purpose except, as he states, to perfect the bill, but the effect of it, if adopted, would be to enable dealers to put this article up in packages like those in which butter is sold.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. I understood the Chair to state a while ago that debate upon this paragraph or amendment had been closed by order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so state. The Chair stated that in the condition of the amendment at that time debate was exhausted.

Mr. BRAGG. Has there been any change in the condition since?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the amendment to the amendment has been withdrawn, leaving only the single amendment pending.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally to receive a message from the Senate, and Mr. RICHARDSON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 6965) to authorize Columbia County, in Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the construction of a court-house; and

A bill (H. R. 2395) to authorize J. G. C. Lee, a major and quartermaster in the United States Army, to issue a duplicate check, and the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York to pay the same.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the amendments of the Senate, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HARRISON, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. GRAY.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, I have here an amendment which I think is absolutely necessary to perfect this portion of the bill. I propose to strike out the word "wooden," in line 12.

Mr. HATCH. I have already stated to the gentleman from West Virginia that I will accept that amendment in line 16 where it applies to the retail dealer.

Mr. FINDLAY. I think it ought to come in here. This provides that retail dealers must sell only from original stamped packages. Now the retailers are required to sell from the same packages that come from the manufacturers in quantities not exceeding 10 pounds, and to pack it in suitable wooden packages. My amendment will permit the retail dealer to sell any small quantity of the article and roll it up in a cloth or any other convenient material.

Mr. HATCH. I am willing to insert after "wooden" the words "or paper."

Mr. FINDLAY. The bill as it stands now will require every retail dealer when he sells a pound or a half pound of this article to put it up in wooden packages. Is there any sense in that?

Mr. HATCH. They can use these little wooden trays, which are cheaper to-day than paper. Every grocer in the country uses them.

Mr. FINDLAY. Do you mean to say that wood is cheaper than paper?

Mr. HATCH. I have been told so by grocers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit me, there is no such thing as a retail dealer under this bill, because this very portion of the bill says that this article shall be sold in quantities not exceeding 10 pounds.

Mr. HATCH. And that makes the man a retail dealer.

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the fact that there are wholesale dealers and retail dealers by virtue of this section of the bill, but I say it is very unwise to require a retail dealer if he sells a pound or half a pound of this article to put it up in a wooden package.

Mr. HATCH. I have already said that I am willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] to come in on line 16.

Mr. FINDLAY. If the chairman of the committee will not accept my amendment, I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. One more suggestion, Mr. Chairman. The form and material of these packages will be regulated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and he will see to it that manufacturers do not use such 1-pound packages as will enable oleomargarine to be confounded with butter.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, it is only necessary for me to say in reply to the gentleman from Illinois that I have already, upon conference and consultation with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the officers of his bureau, obtained fully the views of those gentlemen upon this question, and that therefore the bill has been reported in this shape by the committee.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. ADAMS, and it was rejected—ayes 64, noes 92.

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of carrying out the statement I have made here, I move to insert, in line 12, after the word "wooden," the words "or paper;" so that it will read "in suitable wooden or paper packages," &c.

Mr. FINDLAY. Why not say "or linen?"

Mr. HATCH. Simply because, as the gentleman very well knows, nothing of this kind, when sold by grocers, is ever wrapped in linen.

Mr. FINDLAY. Then why not say simply "suitable packages?"

Mr. HATCH. Again, in line 16, after the word "wooden," I move to insert the words "or paper."

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And the same amendment wherever it is necessary throughout the bill to carry out that idea.

Mr. HATCH. I do not think it is necessary anywhere else.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I sent to the desk some time ago an amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 of section 6 strike out the word "only" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the same only when put up in stamped packages;" so as to read:

"Retail dealers in oleomargarine must sell the same only when put up in stamped packages," &c.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, section 6, insert:

"No person who was reported by the tenth census as unable to read or write shall be fined or imprisoned for violating the provisions of sections 6, 11, 12, or 13 of this act until one year after the passage of the bill now pending in Congress to aid in the support of common schools; and all money collected under this act shall be used for the purpose of aiding in the support of common schools; the money to be distributed among the States in proportion to the illiteracy in said States as shown by the tenth census."

Mr. HATCH. I raise a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has passed section 6, and it is not now amendable.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I will move the amendment to section 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That every manufacturer of oleomargarine shall securely affix, by pasting, on each package containing oleomargarine manufactured by him, a label on which shall be printed, besides the number of the manufactory and the district and State in which it is situated, these words: "Notice.—The manufacturer of the oleomargarine herein contained has complied with all the requirements of law. Every person is cautioned not to use either this package again or the stamp thereon again, nor to remove the contents of this package without destroying said stamp, under the penalty provided by law in such cases." Every manufacturer of oleomargarine who neglects to affix such label to any package containing oleomargarine made by him, or sold or offered for sale by or for him, and every person who removes any such label so affixed from any such package, shall be fined $50 for each package in respect to which such offense is committed.

Mr. WHEELER. I now offer my amendment to this section.

Mr. HATCH. I have submitted a point of order upon the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WHEELER. It provides, in substance, that no person shall be fined or imprisoned for violating certain sections of this act, provided he was one of those persons reported by the tenth census as unable to read or write, until a year after the passage of the bill now pending giving him an opportunity for education.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not ask the gentleman to state the substance of his amendment, but simply what his motion was.

Mr. WHEELER. My motion was to insert this amendment at the end of section 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the pending section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not germane to this part of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I will reserve it until we reach section 11.

Mr. VAN EATON. I move to amend the pending section by striking out, in line 16, the word "fifty" and inserting "twenty-five." In support of this amendment I wish to say that unless I can succeed in my effort to protect "the great American hen" it will be impossible for me to support this bill. I hold in my hand a dispatch I have just received from the Merchants' Exchange at Oshkosh, in the district once so ably represented on this floor by Hon. Mulberry Sellers. I send up this dispatch to be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Once upon a time Mr. and Mrs. Cow went out for a little promenade, as was their custom in pleasant weather. They took with them their favorite child, Butter, a bright, yellow-haired cherub, greatly admired by the friends of Mrs. Cow. As they strolled along, the cherub wandered into a grocery store near by and presently came running out, accompanied by another cherub, who was its very twin. Mr. Cow looked inquiringly at Mrs. Cow.

"Oh, mamma!" cried dear little Butter, "See! see! I have found my twin."

"Quite true, my child," responded Mrs. Cow, and, turning to the twin, she asked, "What is your name, my dear?"

"Oleomargarine," lisped the twin.

"What a pretty name," said Mrs. Cow; "and who is your mamma and papa?"

"I do not know," said the twin. "I guess I must be a poor little orphan."

"So you are; so you are," said the kind Mrs. Cow; and after some consultation with her husband and continued appeals from her own cherub, she asked the twin to come home with her and be a playmate for Butter.

This the twin readily agreed to do, and that night Oly and Butty slept together in the sweetest harmonies of childhood. In the morning Mrs. Cow went in to call the little ones, and they both sat up in their trundle-bed.

"Which is Butty and which is Oly?" laughed Mrs. Cow in playful mood.

"I am Butty," lisped Oly, sweetly.

"No, I am," screamed Butter, pulling out several handfuls of Oly's golden hair.

"No, I am," persisted Oly; and then Mrs. Cow, looking first at one and then at the other, burst into tears.

"How is this?" inquired Mr. Cow, coming into the nursery.

"Oh, oh! I do not know which is Butter and which is Oleo Margarine," cried Mrs. Cow, pointing at the two little similarities.

"Eh?" gasped Mr. Cow, turning to the bed.

"See!" exclaimed Mrs. Cow, "there isn't any difference. Which is which?"

"Both of them," growled Mr. Cow. "But, wife, if there isn't any difference, what is the difference?" And he went back to his morning newspaper, leaving Mrs. Cow still in tears.

Moral: If there is any moral to this fable, you are welcome to it.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] has expired.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to add anything to the fund of information which has been contributed by other gentlemen on this subject, yet I am unwililng to vote on all the phases of this question without expressing my views upon it. There is no more doubt that Congress has the right to tax every pound of oleomargarine than that it has the right to tax every gallon of whisky and every pound of tobacco. It is equally certain that if this taxing power is abused for the purpose of crushing and destroying the manufacture of oleomargarine, such action on the part of Congress is indefensible. The real questions then presented to us on this subject are, in my judgment, first, is oleomargarine a proper subject of taxation; and, next, are the rates provided in this bill fair and reasonable?

I assume that oleomargarine is a proper subject of taxation. Why not? The elements of which it is composed, we are told, are cheap; and if we have any trustworthy information on this subject, the article is sold at a large profit. In addition to that, the tax which will be collected under this bill, if it should pass, will be paid ultimately by the consumers, because those who manufacture and sell oleomargarine will be simply the agents of the Government to collect and receive the tax from those who purchase and consume the article; and any one who has ever given any attention to this subject of taxation knows that taxes which are paid in this way by the consumers are the least onerous and burdensome of all taxes.

But there is another reason why this is a proper subject of taxation, a reason which has been adverted to so frequently that I shall simply mention it. It is certainly no objection that some desirable result follows the taxation of this article. At present the article goes into the market, not as a fair competitor with the farmers' butter, but it goes there masquerading under false colors. Now, if we can succeed in getting revenues from this article under a proper law duly authorized by the Constitution, and at the same time can expose a fraud and compel oleomargarine, which it is said so nearly resembles butter as to require an expert to tell the difference between them, to hoist its own colors and fight under its own flag, that is certainly a desirable object, and we ought to be willing to pass a law for the purpose of securing that end, if for nothing else.

Now, there is one other object which seems to me desirable, though it may not suit the views of a great many members of this House. I do not believe in the doctrine of protection. I am here to say, as I will say upon every proper occasion, that I believe the system of protection to be wrong in principle and unjust in practice. It is impossible for one end of the seesaw board to go up without the other going down. It is impossible by any system of taxation to put money into the pockets of one class in the community without at the same time taking it out of the pockets of another class. If it were in my power I would wipe from the statute-book every tariff law except those that bring in necessary revenue. But it seems that we are not able to do this. The combination against us is too strong. The iron-men, the glass-men, the coal-men, the men interested in pine forests, and those who have salt-wells have so banded together—being held together not by bands of steel, but by bands of interest, which are infinitely stronger—that up to this time we have been unable to reduce materially the war taxation, although twenty years have elapsed since the declaration of peace.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty," and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am much obliged.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, how much longer we shall be compelled to suffer under this system of taxation. So far it has fallen with peculiar severity on those who live in the Great West. The farmers have been the hewers of wood and the drawers of water for every protected industry in this country. By reason of it they have paid higher prices for everything they have had to buy, and have received no higher prices on account of it for what they have had to sell. It has created a prejudice in European markets against American agricultural products. France and Germany refuse to take American pork, while our exports of cotton and wheat to England are every year growing less. Western farmers have protested against this unjust tariff system. I am here as the Representative of a district with 2,500 Republican majority, according to the last Presidential vote, because I have denounced in every town and at every cross-roads this infamous system of taxation.

We can not break it down. The combined forces of protection are so far too strong for us. Some of my Democratic brethren, too, I am sorry to say, are imbued with the same views entertained by gentlemen on the Republican side of the House.

What then is the next best thing to do? I have heard that one of the ways of forcing the repeal of an odious law is to enforce it. If we can not defeat this system of tariff legislation in any other way, I am in favor of protecting every possible industry you can find in this country. [Laughter and applause.] We will protect the iron-man of Pennsylvania against the iron-man in Georgia, and the iron-man of Georgia against the iron-man of Pennsylvania; and the woolen manufacturer in Massachusetts against the woolen manufacturer in Rhode Island, and the woolen manufacturer in Rhode Island against the woolen manufacturer in Massachusetts. We will interlace these protective measures until we protect every industry in the country. In this way it will amount to no protection at all, because all will fare alike, and the people will begin to see the enormities of a system which they have been taught to believe was a great blessing. [Laughter and applause.]

Now it may be said we do not want any revenue; that we have enough. Let us take off the tariff tax from salt, take it off lumber, reduce it on sugar, reduce it on woolen goods, and in their stead put a little on oleomargarine, make it travel in its own clothes, and give to the farmers of Illinois and Iowa and Wisconsin and Kansas and Nebraska a little taste of this protection tax which they have been for so many years helping to pay into the coffers of the manufacturers of the East.

If we do this, and extend this system to the protection of the farmers' products, we will find a great many gentlemen—we will find perhaps the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], for whom I have so much respect and who is such a strong advocate of high duty—we will find him and his friends learning the lesson that we have long since learned by sad experience, that protection is a sharp-edged tool, cutting the many while helping the few; and may possibly find Eastern tax-payers uniting with Western men without respect to party, Republicans and Democrats alike joining hands to reduce the taxes in the shape of duties which consumers pay solely for the benefit of manufacturers and producers.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Are you in favor of taxing one legitimate domestic industry out of existence merely because it is the successful competitor of another domestic industry? Is not that absolutely indefensible?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think it is. I said in the outset that if the rates of tax were so high as to crush and destroy the oleomargarine interest that this bill was absolutely indefensible. I believe there is no propriety in putting a license tax on manufacturers of $600, on wholesale dealers of $480, and still less a license tax of $48 a year on little retail dealers who may not have $500 worth of stock in their stores.

A MEMBER. Is 10 cents a pound too much?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think that 10 cents a pound is too high.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have only five minutes, and much of that time has already been taken up by interruptions. There are other matters in this bill that are objectionable. Section 6, that we have just been considering, contains penal legislation and you can drive a four-horse team through it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The gentleman must excuse me. It makes it penal for a retailer to deliver oleomargarine in anything but a new wooden package. How are you going to determine whether a package is new or old? When you pour water into a bucket does it make that bucket an old one as soon as you pour it in? You put a new pair of shoes on for the first time and take them off again; are they new shoes or old shoes? What is a new package and what is an old package?

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not expect to get the floor again and I only have a few minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I will agree to yield five minutes to the gentleman if he will allow me to ask a question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well; go ahead.

Mr. HATCH. Does not the gentleman know that under the present revenue laws you enforce the very provisions enacted here and which he criticises, by providing that cigar-boxes and tobacco packages shall not be used a second time to put cigars in or to put tobacco in?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Certainly; and I have no objection to such a provision; but while you are saying that I want you to put it in language that is not susceptible of misconstruction.

Mr. HATCH. It is exactly in the language of the statute-book on this subject.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I fear the gentleman from Missouri is mistaken in that, for he will find that the reference is made to the description immediately preceding it, and that description is not new or original packages. The revenue law in almost every instance uses the word original instead of new packages.

But again, while on this subject, Mr. Chairman, in section 12 I find—

That every person who purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine from any manufacturer who has not paid the special tax shall be liable for each offense to a penalty of $100, &c.

It does not say who "knowingly" purchases, and yet, sir, you may send your child, fourteen or fifteen years of age, to a retail store——

Mr. HATCH. I will save the time of the gentleman's argument, if he will permit me to interrupt him, by saying that that was an inadvertence in the original draught of the bill. It is the intention of the committee to insert the word "knowingly" when we reach that point.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am very glad to hear it, and I hope upon a careful review of the bill that the chairman of the committee at the proper time will correct many other inadvertences which are to be found upon examination.

For myself I wish to say that if this tax can be reasonably reduced and if the license tax is put at fair figures I am in favor of the bill. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the bill is right in principle, and with these modifications I hope to see it pass; and I would be glad to see gentlemen who occupy the same position that I do with reference to the bill in its present form aid in correcting its serious and manifest defects and thereby secure its speedy enactment into law. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the right to tax is coeval with sovereignty. It is essential to its existence; it needs neither grant nor reservation——

Mr. STRUBLE. I rise to a question of order; it is utterly impossible to hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. STRUBLE. Just as in the circuses it will be observed that the bald-headed men are standing up in front. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. How about the red-headed ones? [Renewed laughter].

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will resume their seats. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, the right to tax is coeval with sovereignty; is essential to its existence; needs neither grant nor reservation, and is limited mainly by the uniformity of its operation and the wisdom of the Government. It is a legislative right, and no court will inquire as to the degree of its exercise. It may impose prohibitory burdens upon foreign and domestic products. It may discriminate for or against industries or classes. It may throw greater restrictions around distilleries than breweries; favor cider more than wine, and cigars more than cigarettes. And Congress under other clauses may bestow charities, endow schools, grant pensions, punish counterfeiters, and by the establishment of a national board of health provide against the invasion of disease. The constitutionality of the question under consideration seems therefore beyond dispute, whether it be for revenue only, or mediately for the public welfare. The policy is justified by the facts.

Mr. Chairman, the time-honored business of butter-making is threatened with signal mischief. Another article has been put in circulation not as original, or auxiliary, or even as a substitute, but skillfully disguised so as to pass for the honest product. And this is oleomargarine. [Laughter.] Composed, as said, in some instances at least, of miscellaneous offal, the slag of the butcher-shop, the kitchen, and the alley; dissolved, neutralized, combined, and prepared by drugs and temperatures so that it may resemble the taste, form, and color, and bear the name of butter. Then its fabrication and excellence are lauded as if its origin were associated with springs and pastures, with cows and churns, and all the charm and flavor of the dairy. [Applause.]

The more perfect the imitation the more saleable and dangerous the commodity. And this mixture its friends expect the poor man to roll under his tongue as if it were a morsel sweet as sin, and which indeed it may be. [Applause and laughter.] Against this substance, whose claim now to be deemed a rival industry savors of a false pretension, the bill would protect the people, as other measures protect them against bogus coin and the importation of infected rags. It is designed——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if I can be recognized I will yield every one of my minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EVERHART. I am much obliged to the gentleman. Such a deception seems even more reprehensible than that which exaggerates or disparages, or that which surreptitiously abstracts property, or that violence which boldly seizes it. It not only deceives the customer, but assails the credit of the real article, confounds its identity, impairs its prestige. And though, if the oleomargarine ingredients be neither filthy nor deleterious, nay, though it be pure as the "icicle on Dian's temple" and wholesome as the "bread of angels" or, like "the sovereignest thing on earth," yet still it is but a counterfeit claiming to be genuine. And being of cheaper materials and of more extensive production, its tendency, like that of poor money to expel the better, would, unhindered, usurp the market and corrupt the trade. And this to the serious and aggravated damage of that great majority who cultivate the soil, whose sweat and labor mingle with its furrows, and augment the public wealth; who supply us sustenance from the harvest and the orchard; who are the conservators of law and order; and whose brawny patriotism is the last unfailing reliance in the hour of trouble, in riot, and in war. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment proposed by Mr. VAN EATON was read, as follows:

In line 16, strike out the word "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

The amendment to the amendment proposed by Mr. TOWNSHEND was read, as follows:

Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "one hundred."

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof; and any fractional part of a pound in a package shall be taxed as a pound. The tax levied by this section shall be represented by coupon stamps; and the provisions of existing laws governing the engraving, issue, sale, accountability, effacement, and destruction of stamps relating to tobacco and snuff, as far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to stamps provided for by this section.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, strike out "10" and insert "2," so that it will read:
"There shall be assessed and collected a tax of 2 cents per pound.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no desire to detain the House with any elaborate remarks on the amendment. I simply wish to call attention to the nature of it. The bill provides a tax of 10 cents a pound on oleomargarine. The amendment I offer proposes to reduce that to 2 cents. If the same quantity of oleomargarine is manufactured next year that it is said was manufactured last year a tax of 2 cents a pound will raise a revenue of $2,000,000.

Several MEMBERS. Four million dollars.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Be that as it may, a tax of 2 cents a pound will raise an ample fund to defray all the expenses that may be necessary to enforce the revenue law in this case.

I shall not occupy the attention of the committee longer at this time. I think it would be wise if the friends of this bill should adopt the amendment. If it is adopted I am confident we will have a speedy conclusion of the discussion over this bill.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to oppose the amendment. I believe if this amendment is adopted—and I know a great effort is being made to reduce the tax from 10 cents to 2 cents per pound, or some other figure—it will eviscerate from this bill its efficacy and its force. This bill is intended to protect the dairy interests of this country. If the tax be made so low that this stuff may be manufactured, and put in competition with butter on the market, although all the safeguards that are provided for by this bill shall remain in it, it nevertheless will persist as a rival for honest butter in the market and sooner or later will drive honest butter out of the market.

Now, if you put a tax of 2 cents a pound on this article, and the cost of manufacturing it is but 8 cents a pound, you have a material which can be put upon the market at 10 cents a pound; and if you undertake to put upon the market a commodity that will cost but 10 cents a pound against a commodity that can not be produced at a profit at less than 20 or 25 cents a pound, the effect is going to be, as certain as anything can be, that the lower-priced article will drive out of the market the higher priced.

You can talk as much as you please about the safeguards thrown around this; about the manufacturer having to put the article in a marked package; about the retail dealer having to sell from a marked package, but who is to protect the consumer, and what provision in this bill is to advise the consumer when the commodity is put on the table that that is oleomargarine and not butter? All these things may be done, and yet when this thing reaches a boarding-house table, the table of the hotel-keeper, or the table of any citizen there is no mark by which you can distinguish it from honest butter. It is there, and all the safeguards taken would amount to nothing at all. To reduce this tax to 2 cents a pound would be to take out of this bill the very feature of it which makes it a protection of the dairy interest. And I say to the friends of the dairy interest that if they vote in this amendment they might as well decline to pass the bill at all, because, although all that has been provided for may be done, the butterine will be sold and it will be a rival to honest butter in the market and will reach the consumer and the consumer will have no means of determining what it is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the gentleman believe honest butter will not successfully compete with oleomargarine when the purchaser knows it?

Mr. BAYNE. It can not compete with oleomargarine.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When the purchaser knows it?

Mr. BAYNE. He does not know it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He will if this bill is passed.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not care whether the retail grocer knows it, whether the wholesale dealer and the manufacturer know it, they may know it; but the consumers are the persons who ought to be advised. If you will incorporate into this bill some provision like what they have in the State of Vermont, requiring that oleomargarine shall be colored so that when it is put upon the table the consumer will be able to distinguish its color from that of natural butter, then you will have a protection; and for my part you can then make the tax as low as you please—1 mill a pound, if you want to do it in that way. But unless that is done the passage of this bill will be a keeping of the promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope of the farmers of this country if you reduce the tax from 10 cents a pound to 2 cents.

A tax of 10 cents a pound will cause the exportation of this material. I understand that it is being largely exported now. Let us keep this tax on it and encourage its exportation. Let us "build up" our foreign commerce in this way by subsidizing steamship lines, if necessary, and get rid of this "surplus product" to the other countries of the world. [Laughter.] But do not take from this bill its vital force, its efficacy, its protective feature.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that under the provisions of this bill the manufacturer may export oleomargarine without paying the 10-cent tax.

Mr. BAYNE. I know it, and I want it that way. I do not want one cent of tax put upon that which is exported.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCCREARY. I move to strike out "two" and insert "five."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this debate has developed one remarkable fact: The legislative records of gentlemen who have opposed this bill are noticeable for their opposition to monopoly, centralization, and consolidation. Now I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the principal protests against this measure have originated not only with boards of trade, but with gentlemen who are controlling and monopolizing many of the great industries of this country. I call attention to the fact that ten or fifteen years ago the article of lard was produced all over the United States by every farmer, and the sale of it was not centralized in any one locality, while to-day if a man desires to engage in any considerable transaction in lard he is obliged to go to the city of Chicago, and there have it dealt out to him by two or three firms who control the lard industry of the country, and at such prices as they may choose to part with it.

The same men who are at present controlling the wheat and corn markets and the lard and the hog products of the United States now propose to control the industry which seeks to displace the legitimate dairy interest of the country. They can not control it until they destroy the farmer. But when they do destroy the dairyman and his industry, when his cows are sold by the sheriff and his farm is sold by the sheriff and the seven millions of men who comprise this industrial class have been driven into bankruptcy and ruin by fraud and the article of pure butter can only be found on the tables of the rich, the wage-worker can have the privilege of buying from these gentlemen who are now appealing to this House a filthy, unwholesome counterfeit or imitation of butter at double the price at which the pure article can be procured if the dairy industry is preserved. I hear gentlemen on this floor saying that the opposition to this bill is in the interest of the wage-worker. If it is, sir, I fail to see it.

I say that this bill is for the purpose of keeping disseminated throughout this country an interest which concerns the health and the comfort and welfare of all the people of the country and giving every man who chooses an opportunity to engage in it.

The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague, Governor CURTIN, speaks for the Knights of Labor. Other gentlemen on this floor speak in behalf of other classes, but the gentlemen who are opposing this bill have not yet expressed one particle of sympathy with the farmer. I can say to the House that the failure of this bill will put butter or its imitation representative into the hands of the biggest monopoly that exists in this country to-day.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "ten" and insert "one," and I offer that as a substitute for the pending amendment. I offer this amendment in good faith, and pledge myself if it be adopted to vote for the bill; but, sir, I can not vote for any bill that embodies the doctrine of protecting one domestic industry against another. In my interviews with the dairymen I have never heard one of them state that the object of levying this tax on oleomargarine was to bring revenue to the Treasury. On the other hand, all of them have stated that the object was to protect the dairy interest of the country against the injurious competition of these products. Mr. Chairman, I can not commit myself to such a policy. I believe that the internal-revenue system is odious to the people of this country and inconsistent with the genius and the spirit of republican government, and so soon as we approach the payment of our war debt I hold that that system should be swept entirely away from our statute-books. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GLASS] is not now in order.

Mr. GLASS. I offer it as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a substitute. It is an amendment in the third degree, and is not in order. The question will first be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. The amendment is to strike out "two" and insert "five."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Is not debate in order.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order at this time. Debate has been exhausted and the question must now be put upon the amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. MCCREARY was rejected; there being—ayes 33, noes 90.

Mr. GLASS. May I now offer my amendment as an amendment to the original amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman is now in order and will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "two" and inserting "one," making the tax 1 cent per pound.

The amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 47, noes 118.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, strike out "ten" and insert "two," so as to make the tax 2 cents per pound.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, is debate exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can move to amend the amendment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move then to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it has been proclaimed to this House time and again by the representatives of the great butter industry, by those who speak for the agricultural interests of this country—and I represent that interest with others here—that all that is desired in this matter is such a law as will place the manufacture of oleomargarine separate and apart from the manufacture of butter, compelling the men who manufacture eleomargarine to label or stamp it for what it is, so that it may go to the consumer as oleomargarine and not as butter. Now, there is not a man on this floor who does not know that a tax of 2 cents a pound is ample and more than ample to pay the expense of bringing about that result. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to this side of the House—we are for protecting American industries against every kind of foreign competition—in that we differ from our friends on the other other side——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The chairman of the committee [Mr. HATCH] has said that no expense would be incurred, and therefore we do not even need a 2-cent tax.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I accept the suggestion, even the 2-cent taxation is not required; but supposing a tax of this amount is necessary and is sufficient, I wish to say to my friends on this side of the House, if the time has come when you are willing to wipe out one legitimate domestic industry which but for your antagonistic legislation might survive and flourish, to wipe it out simply because it is the competitor of another domestic industry, you may expect that the specter of free trade will stalk to every town and village of this country within five years, and it ought to, as the inevitable result of the blow you deal at the protective system. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, let me say another thing. If oleomargarine is what gentlemen say it is, the bare exposure of the character of the article, the bare requirement that it shall appear before the country for what it is, is enough to destroy it. If it can not stand on its own merits, it ought to die. If it can survive and flourish on its own merits, there is no right on the part of Congress to strike it down, without other reason than that it has entered the field to compete for favor with another domestic product of the country, no matter whether that other product is of the field, shop, factory, mill, or dairy.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman vote for a proposition to require this product to be colored pink or blue or some other color which will distinguish it from butter?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is not necessary to color it pink or blue or to stamp on it a fac-simila of the American flag. It is simply necessary that it should pose in its own domain as oleomargarine; and if the people of this country desire to buy it, knowing what it is, upon its merits for what it is, if citizens of the country desire to manufacture it for what it is, selling it in its true character, I deny the right of Congress to wipe it out simply because some other industry finds it in the field as a competitor. [Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. The Speaker informs me that there are several executive communications upon his table which should be presented to the House this evening, and I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REBECCA ELDRIDGE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a communication from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval a bill originating in the House of Representatives numbered 2145, and entitled "An act for the relief of Rebecca Eldridge."

This bill provides for the payment of a pension to the claimant as the widow of Wilber H. Eldridge, who was mustered into the service on the 24th day of July, 1862, and discharged June 21, 1865. He was pensioned at the rate of $2 per month for a slight wound in the calf of the left leg, received on the 25th day of March, 1865. There is no pretense that this wound was at all serious, and a surgeon who examined it in 1880 reported that in his opinion the wounded man "was not incapacitated from obtaining his subsistence by manual labor;" that the ball passed "rather superficially through the muscles," and that the party examined said there was no lameness "unless after long standing or walking a good deal."

On the 28th of January, 1881, while working about a building he fell backward from a ladder and fractured his skull, from which he died the same day.

Without a particle of proof and with no fact established which connects the fatal accident in the remotest degree with the wound referred to it is proposed to grant a pension to the widow of $12 per month.

It is not a pleasant thing to interfere in such a case. But we are dealing with pensions and not with gratuities.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 28, 1886.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the bill and accompanying message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ELEANOR C. BANGHAM.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval a bill which originated in the House of Representatives numbered 1582, and entitled "An act for the relief of Eleanor C. Bangham."

The claimant in this case is the widow of John S. Bangham, who was mustered into the service of the United States as a private on the 26th day of March, 1864, and was discharged by General Order June 23, 1865.

It appears that during his fifteen months of service he was sick a considerable part of the time; and the records in two of the hospitals to which he was admitted show that his sickness was epilepsy. There are no records showing the character of his illness in other hospitals.

His widow, the present claimant, filed an application for pension March 12, 1878, alleging that her husband committed suicide September 10, 1873, from the effects of chronic diarrhea and general debility contracted in the service. Upon the evidence then produced her claim was allowed at the rate of $8 a month. She remained upon the rolls until July, 1885, when a special examination of the case was made, upon which it was developed and admitted by the pensioner that the deceased soldier had suffered from epilepsy from early childhood, and that during a despondent mood following an epileptic fit he committed suicide.

Upon these facts it was determined by the Pension Bureau that the pension should not have been granted, and it was withdrawn. It was so satisfactorily proven that the disease which indirectly caused the death of the claimant's husband was not contracted in the service that, in my opinion, the conclusion arrived at on such examination should stand.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 28, 1886.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the bill and accompanying message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SIMMONS W. HARDEN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House a communication from the President of the United States, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval bill numbered 1406, which originated in the House of Representatives, and is entitled "An act granting a pension to Simmons W. Harden."

The claimant mentioned in this bill enlisted as a private December 30, 1863, and was discharged May 17, 1865.

He filed an application for pension in 1866, in which he alleged that he was injured in the left side by a fall from a wagon while in the service.

In 1880 he filed another application, in which he claimed that he was afflicted with an enlargement of the lungs and heart from overexertion at a review. His record in the Army makes no mention of either of these troubles, but does show that he had at some time during his service dyspepsia and intermittent fever.

The fact that fourteen years elapsed after he claimed to have been injured by a fall from a wagon before he discovered that enlargement of the lungs and heart was his real difficulty is calculated to at least raise a doubt as to the validity of his claim.

The evidence as to his condition at the time of enlistment, as well as since, seems quite contradictory and unsatisfactory. The committee to which the bill was referred report that "the only question in the case is as to his condition at time of enlistment, and the evidence is so flatly contradictory on that point that it is impossible to decide that question."

Notwithstanding this declaration it is proposed to allow him a pension of $16 a month, though he has survived all his ailments long enough to reach the age of seventy-two years.

I think upon the case presented the action of the Pension Bureau overruling his claim should not be reversed.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 28, 1886.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the bill and accompanying message be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 4838) to abolish certain fees for official services to American vessels, and to amend the laws relating to shipping commissioners, seamen, and owners of vessels, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening.

Mr. HAMMOND. If we take a recess until half past 7, will the evening session be for the consideration of pension bills only?

The SPEAKER. The session this evening will be held under the special order of the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I ask by unanimous consent that the session this evening be postponed till 8 o'clock. It is difficult for members to get back at half past 7, and few are present at that hour.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by the Chief Clerk, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 28, 1886.

SIR: Hon. JAMES B. MCCREARY is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. MCCREARY accordingly took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the privilege be accorded to each member present to call up a bill for consideration before proceeding with the general order.

There was no objection.

ABEL MISHLER.

Mr. ERMENTROUT called up the bill (H. R. 2964) to restore to the pension-list the name of Abel Mishler, of Pennsylvania; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to restore to the pension-list the name of Abel Mishler, late first lieutenant of Company H, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and quartermaster of said regiment.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JENNETTE DOW.

Mr. LYMAN called up the bill (H. R. 3363) granting a pension to Jennette Dow; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter upon the pension-roll of the United States, at the rate of $8 per month, the name of Jennette Dow, widow of Charles E. Dow, late first sergeant of Company K, Eighty-ninth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Strike out, in line 5, the words "at the rate of eight dollars per month" and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY RENFRO.

Mr. NEAL called up the bill (H. R. 2358) granting a pension to Mary Renfro, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Mary Renfro, mother of Mark C. Renfro, deceased, late a private in Company D, Second Regiment Tennessee Volunteers, on the pension-roll of the United States at the rate of $8 per month, according to the rules and regulations governing such cases, said pension to continue during the lifetime of said Mary Renfro.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

The soldier and son of claimant, Mark C. Renfro, enlisted as private in Company D, Second Tennessee Volunteers, September 1, 1861, and was killed in battle July 20, 1864.

Claimant filed application for pension as dependent mother on August 13, 1879, which was "rejected by Pension Office December 2, 1882, on the ground that the soldier at the date of his death left a child surviving him. The soldier was killed July 20, 1864, and it is shown by the testimony of witnesses that his child died July 22, 1864.

The facts are fully shown by the brief as prepared in the Pension Office as follows, to wit:

"Bazzel Hedgcoth and F. M. Narramore testify that they have been acquainted with the claimant and her family for fifty years; was acquainted with the soldier at and before his enlistment, at which time he and his young wife were living with and supporting his parents, and that soldier's wife died about March 8, 1864, leaving a child, Mary F. Renfro, who within a few weeks after died, and that said child was the only child of said soldier; that said soldier was the youngest son of the claimant, and was her only support, and that he did provide for and contribute to her support before and after his enlistment; that claimant's husband, William Renfro, has been totally unable to perform manual labor since the death of the soldier.

"Clerk of court certifies that assessed value of real estate assessed to claimant's husband from 1865 to 1881 varies from $500 to $1,600.

"F. M. Narramore and J. F. Greer testify that the lands assessed to claimant's husband were poor and unproductive, and the title is in dispute, and that income would not be worth $250; that claimant, or husband, has had no income since 1864."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Strike out, in line 7, the words "at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know who has charge of this bill?

Mr. NEAL. I did not make the report on the bill, but I am ready to answer any questions the gentleman may wish to ask.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Are you familiar with the facts in this case?

Mr. NEAL. I am not only familiar with the facts in the case, but I know the parties personally as well as the witnesses who have testified to it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Has this claimant any other sons, or had she any other besides this one?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir; she has several other sons who have families of their own and live in that county.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What are their circumstances?

Mr. NEAL. They are all in very moderate circumstances. This land spoken of where this man lived is the table-land of the Cumberland Mountains and is very unproductive, as everybody knows who is acquainted with that part of the country and its agricultural character.

If you will notice the report shows that there was a child of this soldier at the time of his death. The soldier was killed in battle and the child died two days after the soldier.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It is stated that this claim was once rejected by the Department here upon the ground that the soldier left a child. It does not seem that the child was living at the time the application was filed.

Mr. NEAL. No, sir, but at the time that the soldier was killed the child was living, and would have been entitled to the pension which belonged to the father, but the child died two days after. Technically the Pension Office could not grant the claim for a pension to the dependent mother under the law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Be kind enough to explain to me the reason of the rejection.

Mr. NEAL. I am not familiar with the pension laws.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to ask a question in reference to this case, and if the gentleman can not answer it, perhaps some member of the committee will be kind enough to do so. I wish to know why the fact that this child was living upon the date of the soldier's death would militate against the claim of the dependent mother?

Mr. ROWELL. Because that is the law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If there was any child living at all at the time of his death?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes; if any child was living at the date of the death of the soldier, that cuts out the dependent father or mother.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Suppose the child had died prior to the death of the soldier?

Mr. ROWELL. Then the mother would have been entitled to the pension.

Mr. NEAL. I suppose it is true that on technical grounds only the case was rejected. Had the child survived, of course it would have been entitled to the pension; but under the circumstances the committee think that it should go to the dependent mother.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of us present here who are familiar with the productiveness of the Tennessee farms and of that country where this land is located. I suppose the gentleman occupying the chair, as well as myself, has traveled over that portion of the country and knows its character. It seems that this claimant's husband has a farm which is assessed at $500 to $1,600. That, it must be apparent, would be the assessed value of a very good farm in that part of the country—of course not a very large farm; but it is also said that this lady has vigorous sons. In addition now to the fact there is this farm, I do not think that this is a just claim upon public charity or shows a dependent condition. They have not lost that farm, but have occupied it since the war, as shown by the testimony cited.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But the report shows that there is no income.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Well, there is no income but the crops on farms generally. There is not one farm in a thousand that has an income outside of the crops. In view of the fact that this lady has a number of vigorous children living, who at most would be called upon for a very sparse expression of love and responsibility to care for her, I think under such circumstances it would have a tendency to dry up the well-springs of natural love for the Federal Government to enter upon such charities.

We have never found that gifts of that character help society. I object to the pension upon those grounds. I do not think there is any state of dependency shown. The bill had better be passed over, because I shall require a quorum.

Mr. NEAL. As to the merits of this case and the proof on file, it is unnecessary for me to refer to them at any great length. The gentleman from Arkansas is certainly not familiar with the farming lands, especially on the table-lands, of the Cumberland Mountains where this woman lives. Although this woman has other children, as I have stated, who may be vigorous, still it is well known to every one who is acquainted with the productive character of the farms on those table-lands that it is very difficult for the people there to subsist by farming. There may be 500 acres of land in this tract, and yet as farming land it may not be worth $500. The proof shows all the other children of this woman have left her and have families of their own to provide for. The proof shows that this old lady was dependent upon her soldier son for her livelihood, and only upon the technical ground that this soldier had a child living at the time of his death, which died two days afterward, the claim was rejected at the Department. I think, knowing the facts as I do, this is a meritorious case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Has any gentleman possession of the facts as to the expression of the Department in regard to that technical objection? Does the Department state that but for that technical objection they would have granted the pension?

Mr. NEAL. They objected on that ground. That is what is stated in the report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The Department does not seem to have intimated that but for that objection the application would have been granted.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The Department never state it in that way. They state the grounds of rejection. They do not state what they might have done had the facts been otherwise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then it is entirely inferential that the Department would have granted a pension otherwise.

Mr. ROWELL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. Suppose you had a farm worth $500, and suppose you had to hire the labor upon it, how much would be the income? What per cent. of the value of the farm would be the income? Would it be over 10 per cent.?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. A farm assessed at $500 is worth a good deal more.

Mr. ROWELL. That depends on the State you are in.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We know as a general rule that property is not assessed at more than one-third of its value.

Mr. ROWELL. In Massachusetts they assess it at 100 per cent. of its value.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We have no evidence in this case that the property is assessed at 100 per cent. of its value. The general rule is to assess it at one-third of its value.

Mr. ROWELL. The value of the land is generally measured by the amount of income it would bring.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And the income of a farm is always the income over and above the living.

Mr. ROWELL. The income of a farm is what it will bring after hiring the labor. If a man works his farm and puts his own labor upon it the amount of what would be his wages is taken into account in estimating the value of the farm. Measured by the income it will bring, a farm worth $1,000 may bring an income of $50 net; and that would not be a large support for this woman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would call that a very small income. But we know this, that when labor is hired on a farm like that they raise what they consume; they raise their hogs; they have their cows, their orchard, &c.

Mr. ROWELL. Suppose you were to rent it, would not that be a way of estimating the income of such a farm?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask the gentleman to wait a moment. I am demonstrating this from the standpoint from which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] was looking at it. They have their garden; they have their living from the farm in nearly every particular; and whatever income they have is something over and above the cost of living; it is surplus wealth. That is the way in which farmers estimate their income. They do not estimate the cost of living in the income. I think the gentleman from Illinois is enough of a granger to know that as well as I do.

Mr. ROWELL. I do not estimate it in that way. If a man works his farm, what he earns upon it by his labor is deducted from the account as wages. The income above that is its rental value, and any farm that will pay 5 per cent. net is a good farm.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. My disposition is in every pension case to give the benefit of the doubt to a claimant. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. NEAL] to say he knows the claimant.

Mr. NEAL. It has been twenty years since I saw her. I saw her there while attending to a lawsuit. Her husband was then a magistrate. He is still living and both are over eighty years of age And I know the land.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is the land poor?

Mr. NEAL. It is poor, as all the land on the table-lands of the Cumberland Mountains is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am familiar with that country myself, and I will ask the gentleman this: Do you believe this is a worthy case?

Mr. NEAL. I believe it is, otherwise I would not have presented it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Do you think she is in a condition of dependency?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BRADY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question. The gentleman spoke in a low tone of voice, but I understood him to say in discussing the question that he regarded a pension as public charity.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I expressed no such opinion as that. I look upon a proper pension as a public duty.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABRAHAM POINTS.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call up the bill (H. R. 8556) granting a pension to Abraham Points.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Abraham Points, late a private in Company C, Forty-second Regiment Missouri Infantry, and now a resident of Allerton, Iowa, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8556) granting a pension to Abraham Points, have considered the same, and beg to report:

This soldier was a private in Company C, Forty-second Missouri Volunteers. He filed his declaration for pension December 2, 1878, alleging that at Tullahoma, Tenn., in February, 1865, some comrades caught hold of him in a playful way and threw him down, injuring his left arm so badly that the elbow-joint became anchylosed, and has so remained to this date. He also alleges that at Shelbyville, Tenn., in the fall of 1864, his eyes became sore, and so continued until the left eye is nearly blind and the right very much affected. His claim was rejected by the Pension Office "on the ground that the disabilities for which pension is claimed existed before enlistment."

The rejection seems to have been based upon the result of a special examination, in which it was elicited that claimant, when a child, had his arm dislocated, and at one time had sore eyes; but it is also very clearly proven that this early injury to arm never disabled him from the performance of all kinds of hard manual labor, and that the elbow was not stiff when he enlisted, nor during his service, until the accident alleged, his officers swearing that he always drilled and could handle his musket as well as any one up to the time of the injury to his arm.

The soundness of his eyes at enlistment is proven by affidavits of his officers and of the physician who examined him at enlistment.

Capt. Peter Thompson and Lieut. N. H. Wykoff, both of soldier's company, testify to the fact of the playful scuffle in which claimant was injured; that the soldiers were not excited, nor angry, nor under the influence of liquor. They also both testify to incurrence of sore eyes and their continuance until discharge.

The continuance to the present date of both disabilities is well authenticated by neighbors and by physicians. The latest medical examination gives the following:

"Granular conjunctivitis lids of both eyes, and considerable opacity of both corneæ. At times vision so obscured that can not see to perform manual labor; disability one-half. Has anchylosis of left elbow-joint; limb semi-flexed; pronation and supination lost; no pain in part; one-fourth.

"A. H. WRAY, Examining Surgeon."

Your committee find that this soldier was disabled in the service, and from no fault of his; his disabilities have been continuous and still exist. They believe he should be pensioned, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think we have arrived at a stage in the action of Congress upon these pension matters when this House ought to stop for a moment to consider how far in the discharge of their public duties they can go in voting away the money of the people in the form, not of pensions, but of gratuities. The report just read shows a case presenting this state of facts, that the injuries received by the applicant for a pension did not in any way or degree arise from the discharge of any military duty. They were such injuries as are incident to any condition of civil life and such as might occur whether the party was in the Army or out of it. Without assigning any reason why military duty brought upon him sore eyes, this man claims a pension because his eyes got sore, and also because, in skylarking or playing a game, he received other injuries. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that the claim here made far exceeds any claim that any soldier has a right to make upon his country, and in calling the attention of the House to the facts of this case, I want to call attention also to the character of our legislation generally upon this subject. I do not mean to deal unkindly with the Committee on Invalid Pensions; I do not mean to deal unkindly with anybody in this House, nor with any side of it. I do not desire to wound or shock the feelings, the sympathies, or the sentiments of anybody, but I do desire, in a calm unimpassioned manner to put in as condensed form as possible some statements that may go to the country showing how we legislate here upon the subject of pensions.

I start out with the proposition that the granting of pensions by this House is done usually by less than twenty men.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Then why does not the gentleman attend these pension sessions and make the number twenty-one?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will tell you directly. I say the granting of pensions is usually done by less than twenty men, and of those twenty men it is safe to say that not more than two have ever read the bills or the reports that are presented here to be acted upon.

In this statement I include the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I say that as a rule not more than two out of the twenty could make any statement of any given case if called upon.

Mr. GALLINGER. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. More than two-thirds of these pension cases are passed without even the report made by the subcommittee being read to the House.

As illustrations of this what have we seen? I stood here at the last session of this House and witnessed action on the case of a soldier who forty-four years ago enlisted in the regular Army, and in "the piping times of peace," in the State of New York, was granted leave of absence for twenty-four hours, went off, got on a spree, lay out at night, had his fingers frost-bitten and had them amputated by the surgeon. Forty years after that amputation that man came here and asked for a pension. It was granted to him as a man who had been disabled in the service of his country, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended and pushed that case through this House under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. ROWELL. Will the gentleman please state how the Committee on Invalid Pensions got jurisdiction of that case?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not know, sir.

Mr. STRUBLE. Was the gentleman present when the case was acted upon?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I was, sir.

Mr. HAYNES. I wish the gentleman would state where he gets his facts.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I got my facts from the report made by the committee to this House.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether he means to say that in any report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions the statement has been made that any applicant or any proposed beneficiary of any pension bill introduced here went off and got on a spree and had his fingers frozen off. I have heard every report read in that committee and I do not know of any such case, and I will say, in defense of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that every report that is made upon a case is read to the full committee and passed upon by the full committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not yield for a speech. Gentlemen, if you want to speak you will have your own time. If you want to ask questions, I will answer them.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman give the name of the case to which he has referred?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not remember the name, but I will tell the facts, and the chairman of this committee knows of the facts.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not probable that he is mistaken in regard to the committee. Is it not the fact that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has no jurisdiction of such cases?

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether he referred to me when he said just now that the chairman of the committee knew the facts of the case as he has stated them?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MATSON. Do you say that I know those facts?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Were you not present when the case was acted upon?

Mr. MATSON. I was not, and I never heard of any such case until you mentioned it here. [Laughter.]

Mr. STRUBLE. Was not that a case in the last Congress?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I said it was in the last Congress.

Mr. HAYNES. Was it not something you dreamed of?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am willing to answer questions, but I do not want impertinence.

Mr. MATSON. I understood the gentleman from West Virginia to say that it was at the last pension session of this House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No; I said at the last session of Congress.

Mr. MATSON. If the gentleman refers to anything that transpired in the last Congress it is impossible for me to remember with accuracy, but I understood him to refer to the last meeting of this House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Well, I will call your attention to the case.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that report was made; the bill came before this House at night. I objected to it, and spoke against it, but said I did not desire to take the responsibility of defeating a pension bill; that all I wanted was a vote of the House. The promise was made, as the RECORD shows, that there should be a discussion of the question in the House next morning; and I left the House that night with that understanding. But when the bill came up in the House next morning the previous question was called, and though I desired to speak on the question and oppose the bill I was refused that opportunity, and the case was passed.

Now, I follow up that case with another. A soldier professed to have been hurt in the State of Florida forty years before by having a barrel roll over him while he was unloading a boat. He came to this House, and this committee at this session of Congress reported not only in favor of granting him a pension, but the report granted him arrearages for forty years; and but for my calling attention to that fact, and protesting against it, the bill would have passed granting him arrearages for forty years. When I called the attention of the committee to it the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] frankly stated that it was an error, that the committee had not intended to make such a report.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand, cases of the class about which the gentleman is talking belong not to the Committee on Invalid Pensions but to the Committee on Pensions; and the session of the House to-night is not for the consideration of cases reported from the Committee on Pensions.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes, it is.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, I thought it was not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not remember whether these reports to which I have referred came from the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions; but I am talking about the action of the House upon the subject. Now, here are two cases in which forty years ago——

Mr. BRADY. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment? I am sure he does not want to misrepresent that case which I reported.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Certainly not.

Mr. BRADY. I think the gentleman is mistaken in his statement. The committee had agreed not to grant arrears of pension, because it has been the invariable rule of the Committee on Pensions, as well as the Committee on Invalid Pensions, in the present Congress not to grant arrears of pension.

This bill in that form was submitted through inadvertence and mistake, and I was about to take the floor to call attention to the fact when the gentleman from West Virginia mentioned it, and as soon as he did so I stated to him frankly at the time as I have since that there was an error in making the report.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Why, Mr. Chairman, that is just what I said. I stated that when I called the attention of the House to the matter the gentleman from Virginia very promptly and frankly stated that the report was made through inadvertence, and that the committee had not intended to make such a report. But that does not do away with the fact that such a report was made, nor does it do away with the fact that the attention of the committee——

Mr. BRADY. Will the gentleman permit me one further remark? The report itself did not report in favor of allowing arrears, but the portion of the bill providing for that, through some inadvertence of the printer or some one else, was not stricken out.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Still, Mr. Chairman, the fact is not altered that these pension matters do not receive proper consideration in this House; that they are passed with undue haste and without proper regard to the rights of the people in the matter.

What is the state of affairs which we find existing to-day? Over 20 per cent. of all the revenues of this great Government is now being paid in the shape of pensions. There is pending in the other House, with a probability of passage, a bill providing for an additional class of pensions which will increase that amount $25,000,000 annually.

Mr. ROWELL. That bill has already passed the other House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Then a bill has already been passed there increasing the amount of these pensions $25,000,000 annually, making over one-third of the revenues of this Government annually diverted from the business of the country to be paid in the shape of pensions. Add to this further legislation in the other House, which will probably pass, entailing upon the public Treasury an expenditure of $244,000,000 to be paid in the shape of arrearages; and we shall have granted in one single year by acts of Congress a greater sum than is raised by all sources of revenue from the sixty million people of this country.

Mr. PERKINS. We will be in debt.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, sir; we will be in debt.

Mr. PERKINS. That is why we want a tax on oleomargarine. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Does the gentleman by his argument mean to imply we should stop paying any pensions?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If you gentlemen will not continue to interrupt me I will answer all these points before I get through.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I thought you yielded to me for a question.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. There is no use asking me questions on a subject upon which I must express myself necessarily in the line of my argument before I get through.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman without his consent.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Here is the remarkable spectacle of more than the revenue of this Government in one single year proposed to be paid out for pensions.

Now, the theory of pensions is not one of gratuity, or bounty, or compensation. It is not intended by pensioning a man to compensate him for his services. No government under the sun so construes it. This Government does not so construe it. But, on the contrary, the theory of pensions is that when a man has become disabled in the performance of his duty then the Government will not let him suffer but will take care of him. And the taking care of him simply means provision for him in the future and not paying him for any service in the past.

We have need, sir, of money for other purposes. This Government has great need of money for a great many other purposes. We have great need of money for military purposes. We are to-day without any sufficient navy to defend any portion of our seacoast or any portion of our country or any portion of our commerce from the inroads of an enemy. We are to-day in that position we do not dare resent the insult any nation may put upon us or injury it may do our commerce. And yet in this condition, when we are without money for those necessary purposes, we are asked to continue to pay out the money needed for the protection of our seacoasts which are now defenseless. We have no ordnance, nor have we any of those things which are necessary for our defense because large sums of money——

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I do not like to be so discourteous as to refuse to yield for a question, and I hope gentlemen will show the same courtesy to me on the other side and not expect me to yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. What has become of the surplus in the Treasury a year ago?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am not undertaking here to make a partisan speech.

Mr. GALLINGER. The country will judge of that.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Nor will I be dragged into a speech of that sort. There are many things I might say about the Republican rule if I chose to go into that subject.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Do not do that. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No; I will not. But, Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call the attention of the House to this character of legislation and to urge better attention be paid to it.

What did we see at the other end of the Capitol quite recently? We saw two or three hundred pension bills passed in a bunch without being read. We are pursuing the same policy here now. Gentlemen on the other side want to know if I think this Government ought to stop paying pensions. I tell them no. There is no man who has worked harder to secure legitimate pensions to his constituents during the last six years than I have done for my constituents, and the records of the Pension Office will show it. I think every man entitled to a pension ought to have one. I think every man disabled in war should have a pension. I think every man disabled by reason of his service should have a pension.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman from West Virginia says, as I understand him, that every man entitled to a pension ought to have it. I ask him to yield to me to call up the case of a man who ought to have one. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to know whether the case here reported comes within the provisions of the rule. The injury was not caused in the military service. He was not on the march. He was not complying with any order. He was not carrying any musket. He was not, in fact, rendering service that would entitle him to a pension. If every man who received an injury while in the Army from one cause or another entirely disconnected with the military service is to be pensioned where are we to stop? Is it not right we should draw the limit somewhere? Is it not right we should confine that limit to injuries received while actually in the performance of military duty?

If the House would do that I am certain that there is nobody, on this side at least, who would raise his voice against it. If the House would do that, so far from raising a voice against it I would gladly help the system. But I do think it right, in view of the vetoes of the President and the attention he has called to the cases which have passed the House, that some more consideration should be given to these matters, for it shows that we are passing this bill without due consideration. Now, I think if the committee——

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. We are certainly giving this bill reasonable consideration. Does not the gentleman think so?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That is exactly what I want to do. I think if the Committee on Invalid Pensions would give a little more attention to these matters, if the House here, when they come to act upon them, would give a little more attention, the result would be to remove a great and crying objection to this pension system, and so far from hurting the interests of the soldiers, those who have a real interest in the pension laws, it would help them in gaining their pensions. That is all I have to say. It is, as I said before, only with a view to the public interests, and no desire of calling in question any man's intentions or wounding any sentiment, nor is it for the purpose of making any partisan speech, but simply to protest against this unlimited and apparently indiscriminate granting of pensions without due and proper consideration.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, the criticisms and strictures which have been made by the gentleman from West Virginia upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions are unjust, as I propose to show the House. When he says that the Committee on Invalid Pensions bring in bills here and that no man on the committee but one or two know anything about the facts of the cases so reported, he is simply mistaken. No bill, not one that has ever been reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the House while I have been the chairman of it at least, has had ever less than eight members of the committee—a quorum—present, who have heard the whole report read, and made a careful investigation and passed upon the bill. Not a single bill has passed otherwise. If anything else than that had been done a rule of the House, and a parliamentary rule, would have been violated by the committee. I do not think the gentleman from West Virginia meant to charge that.

The fact is, and I repeat it, that there never was a single bill reported to the House that has not had the careful consideration of at least eight members of the committee; and in addition let me say that committee has had a session on every Tuesday and every Friday during the whole session of this Congress up to this time, and usually, I may say, at nearly every session more than eight members are present and frequently the whole committee. That committee has been at work. It has reported a large number of bills to the House. Do gentlemen complain because the Committee on Invalid Pensions reported bills that have been referred to them? The Committee on Invalid Pensions was organized for that purpose. We are organized to consider these bills, and give the relief asked for, where the facts warranted it, in such cases as could not be passed under the general law by the office because of some technicality. We are trying to discharge that duty conscientiously and faithfully, and that committee-room is the workshop of the House. There is more work done there I think, and I do not say it boastfully—for very possibly I do not do my share of it—than is done by any other committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MATSON. Certainly.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will ask the gentleman if all the pensions of certain States are not referred to subcommittees of two or three?

Mr. MATSON. They are referred to committees of one; each member of the committee having charge of the pensions from a State.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Then I ask if that subcommittee is not in the habit of examining the papers and reporting the facts to the whole committee?

Mr. MATSON. It is.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to ask then if it is not true that this subcommittee makes the reports, takes the papers and acts upon them and the report is made to the committee and the evidence of the case is considered only by the subcommittee, and then the committee acts upon that report whether it be correct or not?

Mr. MATSON. Wherever a question is raised ——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. MATSON. You do not allow me to answer it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am not asking the gentleman where a question is raised; but I am asking him as to the mode of passing the bills through the committee?

Mr. MATSON. You do not give me the opportunity of answering.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Very well. Then I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MATSON. I say wherever there is a question at all about the case, where any one member of the committee raises any objection at all, the papers are all handed in and examined by the member, and it is frequently done in the committee. One member wishes to know some fact in reference to a case, and the papers are handed him and he is asked to look at it and investigate it. The matters are not considered loosely by the committee or loosely, either, by the House. If they are, it is the fault of the members themselves who do not attend the sessions of the House to consider them. Certainly it is not the fault of the committee if they do not come here at these evening sessions. It is not certainly to be expected of the members of the committee who come here and attend these evening sessions that they will call for the reading of the report in each case, but if any gentleman desires that, we are always glad to have it done and to have a discussion upon these questions. But we do not want to be criticised when we are not fairly open to criticism.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Is it not a fact that this House has passed with a quorum present bills reported adversely by the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. MATSON. That has been done in several instances. Where we have reported adversely bills for the increase of pension they have been passed by the House with a quorum present. And I will say to the gentleman from West Virginia that we have reported more bills adversely than we have favorably. There have been now already referred to that committee about four thousand bills by this House; and of those that we have considered more have been acted upon adversely than have been acted upon favorably. I will not say the reports have been made in that proportion, but there has been adverse action more frequently than otherwise. Members say to the members of the committee, "Let the report lie; do not make an adverse report."

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire still to repeat my question to the gentleman from Indiana, and to ask him if it is not the rule in his committee—I am not talking about the exception, where some man raises a question—if it is not the rule in his committee where one single member examines the case and makes a report, then that report is taken as the report of the whole committee?

Mr. MATSON. If they vote for it, it is; but if there be any objection, it is not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But is it not the rule that objections are not made on the report of a subcommittee?

Mr. MATSON. It is impossible for me to say in what per cent. of the cases reported objections are raised. But that is the rule in all committees, just as in the committee over which the gentleman from West Virginia himself presides; if no objection was raised when the matter was brought before the committee he would not, I am sure, say it was improper if no objection was made that the report should be agreed to. And so it is here. There is this about it, Mr. Chairman, if there is a dishonest man on that committee, and he is willing to state facts in his report that do not exist, he might practice a fraud upon the committee and upon the House. But I think I know, and I believe the gentleman from West Virginia will say, that there is not a member of that committee, nor do I believe there is a member of this House, that would upon his solemn oath as a member of the House state in his report a fact that did not exist. That is all there is of it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. There was no intention on my part to make any personal reflection upon any member of the committee.

Mr. MATSON. I understand that.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I simply called the gentleman's attention to what I have understood and have reason to understand was the rule of action upon this subject; and I desired to call the attention of the House to the fact that I did not consider that they are giving due consideration to cases involving so much of the public money.

Mr. MATSON. I want to say to the gentleman from West Virginia that that rule is the same rule which obtains in all other committees so far as I know. I have never heard of any other. It is impossible, as every member of this House knows, where so many bills are placed before a committee, or even a much less number—it is impossible for the whole committee, for every one of its members, to go into the details of every case. The gentleman himself must see how entirely impossible that would be. But any criticism that comes from the gentleman from West Virginia or from any other source, I care not where, upon this committee as having not fairly and fully considered the bills that are sent to it to be considered by the House is unfair and unjust, because I know what has been the work of that committee—of all of them more perhaps than myself; but I shall not remain silent and hear it said that committee has been derelict in its duty when it has already reported to this House some seven hundred bills. I imagine the complaint is not that we have not done work enough, but rather that we have done too much work.

Mr. WHEELER. I regret very much to see the attitude taken by the gentleman from West Virginia. I agree with him fully that this House ought to do all that can be done to protect the honor of our country and to improve our Army and our Navy; but it is also important in that same line that we should take scrupulous care, and I believe the Committee on Invalid Pensions has taken scrupulous care, to show to the country that any man who risks his life in battle shall have a proper pension given to him in case he is injured, or in case he is killed that his family shall be provided for. While I express those sentiments, I think every gentleman in this House will admit that I have done, while I have had the honor of being a member of Congress, as much as was possible by my feeble efforts to sustain the honor of our country and protect the honor of every officer of our Government and to see that all soldiers receive their just compensation. While people may not think that I take that view on account of certain circumstances that have transpired in this House, I wish to say a word in regard to what has transpired while considering the Army bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Subsistence Department and for one Commissary-General, two colonels three lieutenant-colonels, eight majors, twelve captains (mounted), and additional pay for one hundred and forty acting commissaries, $79,500.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read; and I give notice that at the proper time I shall move to strike out the paragraphs beginning respectively on lines 100, 113, 116, 120, and 124.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. It is very evident that the gentleman from Alabama proposes to discuss a subject that is not properly before the committee. The Committee of the Whole at these Friday evening sessions has a special jurisdiction confered by the order of the House. That jurisdiction is to consider cases reported from the Committee on Pensions, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and from the Judiciary Committee with reference to relieving persons from political disabilities. Any other subject than subjects which are reported from one of those committees is not properly before us at these Friday evening sessions, and the situation of the Committee of the Whole here is entirely different from what it is when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole——

Mr. WHEELER. Has the gentleman read my speech?

Mr. BAYNE. Wait a moment.

Mr. WHEELER. Will you answer that question, please?

Mr. BAYNE. Wait a moment. I say, Mr. Chairman, that our situation at these Friday evening sessions is entirely different from what it is when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills generally, and when almost any subject may be discussed. It is quite evident from what the gentleman from Alabama has already said, that he proposes to discuss the Army bill, or some controversy that arose while the Army bill was under consideration in the House, and I submit that the discussion of a question of that sort on this occasion is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state in reference to the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] that the business of this evening session is the consideration of pension cases. The Chair, however, is not able to anticipate what will be said by any speaker. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] knows the order under which this session is held, and will proceed in order, confining himself within the limits prescribed by the order of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor to do so, but I think some explanation is necessary to sustain what is said in the opening of my remarks. As I was about to say, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in carrying out this intention made four additional motions to strike out the other paragraphs as they were successively reached. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, General BRAGG, explained to him and to the House that all these appropriations were for the pay of officers who held their positions under existing laws, and that our failure to appropriate would not lessen the liability of the Government to the officers referred to.

The gentleman from Iowa had been very prominent in attacks upon the bill to provide for improving our rivers and harbors. He had used his best efforts to destroy many of the essential features of that measure——

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. My point is that the gentleman from Alabama is not discussing any subject before this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama states that his purpose is to illustrate his views of the question under consideration. There is necessarily a good deal of latitude allowed in debate, but the gentleman from Alabama will confine himself to the question before the committee.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I have heard with pleasure the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, especially his opening remarks, and I have no doubt that he means what he then said, but I hope he will not precipitate a discussion of this sort upon this occasion. There is no knowing where it will end, and the consideration of pension business may as well be given up if this sort of discussion is to be brought into these Friday evening sessions.

Mr. WHEELER. I will state to gentlemen that I am willing to sit here until 11 o'clock to-morrow to vote on every bill that comes up.

Mr. GALLINGER. But some of us will get pretty weary in the mean time.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. To-night has been set apart for the special purpose of considering pension bills; and as a member of the Pension Committee, who always attends these Friday night meetings, I protest against a long debate on a question not before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Some latitude is of course allowed to a member in debating any question; but the gentleman from Alabama will please confine himself to the business before the committee under the order of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. The RECORD shows that he made twenty different speeches in his continued and repeated assaults upon the bill; and when this amendment to the Army bill——

Mr. STRUBLE. Now I rise to a point of order. My point is the same as that which has already been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is evident that the gentleman from Alabama is not speaking in order. I understand very well that my colleague [Mr. HEPBURN] does not want any better fun than to have a discussion with the gentleman from Alabama, but I also know he does not desire that the time of this Committee of the Whole on this occasion or any other Friday night shall be taken up with such discussion. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Alabama will realize the importance of going on with the business set for this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed in order.

Mr. WHEELER (resuming). And when this amendment to the Army bill was coupled with the assertion that the next five paragraphs would be attacked by him, were we not justified in our belief that the gentleman intended an assault upon every feature of the bill then being considered, the only effect of which, if successful, would have been to embarrass and block the machinery of the Government?

Mr. DOCKERY. Now I ask the Chair to interpose. The point of order has already been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Iowa. I make the same point and insist that the Chair should require the gentleman from Alabama to confine himself to the question under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated, and he supposed the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], as well as others, has observed the fact, that the order of business of to-night is the consideration of reports made from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions and bills for removing political disabilities. Objection has been made to the gentleman from Alabama proceeding with anything outside of that order. The Chair admonishes the gentleman from Alabama to proceed in order under the special order made for the transaction of business to-night.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not wish to occupy any time of this House which would be used in passing pension bills——

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to submit to the gentleman from Alabama a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield for a question.

Mr. BAYNE. Does the gentleman from Alabama propose to discuss the bill now before the House?

Mr. WHEELER. I propose, after this explanation, to discuss the bill before the House and advocate it. After the remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, I will say that if agreeable to gentlemen of the committee, I will postpone my speech until after we have acted on these bills, if then I can proceed——

Several MEMBERS. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER. If gentlemen will wait here and hear me.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I will agree to wait with pleasure.

Mr. HEPBURN. The report in this case shows that early in 1865 the soldier named in the bill, while at Tullahoma, Tenn., was standing in camp, when some of his comrades playfully seized him, and he engaged in a scuffle trying to get loose from them. There was no drunkenness, no anger on the part of any of them; but in the scuffle, in his effort to get loose, he received a hurt to his elbow, which resulted in a permanent injury. The joint is anchylosed, and he has no use of it. It also appears that he contracted sore eyes while in the service, and they have continued from that time to this. These facts are proved by the evidence of his captain and lieutenant. There is no controversy about them. But he had sore eyes before he went into the service; and when a small child he fell and injured his elbow. Although it was proved that he had perfect use of his elbow up to the time of this last injury, though he could go through the manual of arms without difficulty, could perform all the duties of a soldier, and although he had no sore eyes for years previous to his service nor until near its close, yet because of these antecedent difficulties the Department elected to say that the injuries were not incurred in the service, and upon that ground solely refused to grant him a pension, assuming the fact that the injuries were pensionable, provided they had not existed antecedently to his enlistment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to lay the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CORNELIA R. SCHENCK.

Mr. MAYBERRY. I call up the bill (S. 1584) for the relief of Cornelia R. Schenck.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Conelia R. Schenck, widow of Daniel F. Schenck, late captain of the Fiftieth New York Engineer Corps.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, I know it is a very ungracious task to raise the point of no quorum. Yet I doubt whether this House ought to pass a solitary pension bill where the case has been rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions. We have been traveling in this direction at a very rapid and very reckless pace, and I do not think it proper for two or three dozen members to assemble here and pass forty or fifty pension bills during one evening.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Will my colleague allow me a question?

Mr. GLASS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. As my colleague has spoken of the small attendance at these night sessions, I will ask whether this is not the first Friday night session that he has ever attended?

Mr. GLASS. I think this is the first night session I have attended, because my constituents are satisfied if I come here and work industriously and honestly in the daytime without returning at night.

Mr. NEECE. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him to make a statement?

Mr. GLASS. I will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. NEECE. Many of these cases we are passing have been recommended by the Commissioner.

Mr. HAYNES. Exceptional cases.

Mr. NEECE. Yes, exceptional cases, and which would have been allowed by the Commissioner, but within the limitations of the law it was impossible for the claimant to secure his proof in time.

Mr. GLASS. The Commissioner of Pensions has particular facilities for ascertaining the proof in these cases. He has much better opportunity, therefore, to act upon them than a few members here in this House.

Mr. HAYNES. What additional facility has the Commissioner of Pensions than are possessed by the members of this House?

Mr. GLASS. Under the law he has agents who go in the region of country where the claimant resides and they report the proof in each case to the Pension Office.

Mr. HAYNES. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether the Committee on Invalid Pensions has not precisely the same testimony which is before the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. GLASS. In the matter of passing these pension bills it is done here, in my judgment, without due consideration.

A MEMBER. Perhaps that is true.

Mr. GLASS. Few members know what is transpiring when the House is considering these cases.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Does the gentleman speak from actual knowledge or is that merely his inference?

Mr. GLASS. I have been here in daytime when the House has been passing upon these pension cases, and I do not think when these bills were being passed there were a dozen votes on either side and possibly there were not two dozen members in the House who knew what was going on.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. GLASS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does the gentleman know——

Mr. GLASS. I am a new member.

Mr. SOWDEN. So am I. [Roars of laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. I have hesitated to make this new point.

Mr. SOWDEN. Let me interrogate the gentleman.

Mr. GLASS. Let me get through first with what I wish to say.

Mr. SOWDEN. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. We have arrived at that point in this character of legislation when I believe it to be the duty of some member to bring the question before the House, and if no member of experience and greater ability than I possess will get up and say it is not right to go on and make these appropriations I feel it to be my duty to do it. I owe the responsibility to my constituents, and I owe as well responsibility and duty to myself, and I can not acquit my conscience to stay away or stay at home when I know these bills are being passed in this manner.

Mr. SOWDEN. Will the gentleman now permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GLASS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOWDEN. My question is this: Does not the gentleman know this House has intrusted a certain number of members with the charge of this business—the Committee on Invalid Pensions—in whom it has perfect confidence?

Mr. GLASS. I have confidence in the committee, and I do not intend to cast any reflection upon that committee. I make no charges against the committee or any individual member of it, but I do make the assertion it is a wrong and improper class of legislation.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman certainly does not wish to be understood as meaning it is wrong and improper to pay pensions.

Mr. GLASS. No; but I do say that it is an improper way for this House to conduct its business by passing such bills without a sufficient number of members present.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does not the gentleman know this is the proper tribunal for just such cases as have been considered on these occasions?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and gentlemen will resume their seats.

Mr. SOWDEN. The gentleman from Tennessee has yielded to me to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does not the gentleman from Tennessee know this is the only tribunal to which a claimant whose case has been rejected at the Pension Office for want of technical evidence can come for relief?

Mr. GLASS. This House has the intelligence to pass a law which will meet every emergency, and it is their duty to do it; and when that law is passed the officer upon whom has been imposed the burden of deciding these cases should be allowed to do so.

Mr. SOWDEN. Is not the Committee on Invalid Pensions the proper body to pass on these cases?

Mr. HAYNES. Just as much as a clerk in the Pension Office.

Mr. GLASS. This House has jurisdiction, and ought to exercise it by passing a law to cover all possible emergencies; and where the duty has been confided to the proper official and he has rendered his decision that ought to be a finality.

Mr. SOWDEN. Then if for want of technical evidence the claim is rejected, the parties are to be denied the right to come to Congress and ask relief; is that it?

Mr. GLASS. No, sir——

Mr. NEECE. Let me suggest to the gentleman, if he will allow me a moment——

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. NEECE. The gentleman is laboring under a mistake, I am satisfied, as to the facts in reference to the reporting of these cases. He is conscientious in his position, I am satisfied, and does not want to occupy a position that is not a proper one. The Committee on Invalid Pensions does not pass upon any claim until it has been first rejected in the Pension Office.

Mr. GLASS. I understand that.

Mr. NEECE. When a case comes to us which has been rejected at the office we examine it, and we only allow such claims as have been rejected through some technicality, just and equitable claims, and we rely strongly upon the equity of the cases. I can recite an instance in my own experience, a case which came under my own observation and was reported by me. There was a soldier, whose company I have forgotten, who was sent from the Seventh Kansas Regiment to visit the Seventh Illinois. He had to cross a stream of water which was full to overflowing, and was never seen or heard of again. His entire effects were left in camp.

He was a truthful soldier and bore a good reputation. His mother, who was dependent upon him for her living, could not prove his death, and technically she was barred from the pension. It is such claims as that that we consider. She could not prove him to be dead.

Mr. DANIEL. If he was absent for ten years the law would have deemed him dead.

Mr. MAYBURY. Will the gentleman permit a question? Is his objection on account of the demerits of this particular case?

Mr. GLASS. No; it is that there is too small a number of members present to-night to transact this character of business.

Mr. MAYBURY. For if the objection was to this particular case, I would withdraw it, so as not to prevent the consideration of other business.

Mr. GLASS. I am not speaking to the merits or demerits of any case.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. GLASS. But I do not think the House should legislate upon important matters with so small a number of members present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa rises to a question of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee says he is not speaking to the merits or demerits of the case, consequently he is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will confine himself to the question before the committee.

Mr. HERMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if his objection is to the merits of the pending bill or to the general subject of pensions?

Mr. GLASS. I am not criticising the merits of this bill; I am only objecting to legislating with so few members present.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Iowa. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that it is well known by all members present to-night that the House of Representatives, when they made the special order for Friday sessions for pension cases, understood that there would be the liability of a small attendance. They understood that it lay within the power of any member of the House to raise the point of order of no quorum at any time if any one saw fit to do so; and this was well understood by gentlemen now present. I wish to suggest, therefore, to the gentleman who has just occupied the floor, and also to the gentleman from West Virginia, who preceded him, and to other gentlemen on that side of the House, that if it be true, as it seems to be, that they came here to-night for the purpose of preventing us from going on with pension legislation they should in good faith say so and let us go to our homes. [Cries of "Regular order!"

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the question of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am confining myself to it; but desire to criticise the fact that the discussions this evening have not been to the merits of bills presented, but have been entirely directed to a denial of the propriety of any of this legislation at all. And I repeat, if it is the purpose of gentlemen on that side of the House to raise the issue that we shall have no more pension legislation this session let them make it now and let the country understand it.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say a single word upon the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GLASS. I have nothing else to say, but I wish to make a word of reply to the gentleman on my right, whom I do not know——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me a moment?

Mr. GLASS. I will in a moment. I will say to the gentleman on my right, whom I do not know——

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is your misfortune. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. I will say to the gentleman that I did not know the gentleman from West Virginia was to be here to-night, nor have he and I had a conversation about these night sessions to-night or at any other time. The fact that we are here together to-night is purely accidental. I will state to the gentleman that I did come here with the view of seeing how small a number of members were passing these bills, and if it were totally out of proportion to a quorum I was disposed to make an objection.

Mr. SOWDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GLASS. I will say I did that without consultation with any other gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee I had not the slightest intention of attributing to him any conspiracy. I wished merely to ask him whether it is the purpose to raise the question here of the propriety of any pension legislation?

Mr. SOWDEN. The gentleman from Tennessee yields to me for a question.

Mr. WILLIS. I am satisfied the gentleman from Tennessee is through if gentlemen will only let him alone.

Mr. GLASS. I will hear the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

Mr. SOWDEN. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this is not the the first evening he has been here during the session?

Mr. GLASS. This is the first Friday night session I have attended.

Mr. SOWDEN. That is all I want to know.

Mr. GLASS. I am willing to have that go on record. My constituents did not send me here to work at night. They expected if I did an honest day's work they would be satisfied. I think if we meet here in the daytime and pass appropriation bills and revenue bills and then go home, the country will be better off.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to say a word about the bill under consideration. Many of us have bills that are meritorious. This bill, I think, is meritorious, as shown by a report of the committee, a majority of which are Democrats and a minority Republicans; all of them painstaking, honorable men. They have made their report. It comes on their honor after investigation.

Now, Friday night sessions, almost ever since I have been a member of this House, have been about like this Friday night session, except that there are more members here to-night than ordinarily are; and I submit to my friend from Tennessee that the proper way to proceed in the line of precedent would be to take the cases, case by case, and if the report does not show it is a meritorious case after discussion, then let him make the point of order there is no quorum here, and no doubt the gentleman in charge of the bill would withdraw it if the point of order was made under such circumstances, and then let the next one come up. A number of bills are here that I know are meritorious. I know of one especially where the claimant is old, suffering, and unfortunate.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is not discussing the bill before the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Then I yield the floor. I have no desire to speak further.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS S. HOPKINS.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I call up the bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Thomas S. Hopkins, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, now on the pension-roll, be, and he is hereby, exempted, by reason of mental incapacity, from the limitation prescribed in section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes," and he shall be entitled to and there shall be paid to him the same rate of pension, and the same arrears thereof, as if his application for a pension had been filed with and allowed by the Commissioner of Pensions prior to June 16, 1880.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, submit the following report:

The facts upon which this claim is based are set forth clearly in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which this committee adopt, with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

Thomas S. Hopkins, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Maine Volunteers, seeks relief from the limitations of the arrears-of-pensions act of March 3, 1879, on the ground that from a time some months prior to the passage of said act down to a period subsequent to the 30th of June, 1880, he was prevented, by reason of the extreme severity of his illness and by mental and physical disabilities, from making an application for arrears in accordance with the provisions of said act. It appears that upon the first return of mental strength, and as soon as he could dictate a letter, viz, on November 20, 1880, that he made an application for a pension, which was granted him.

This claim received consideration in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, and a bill granting the relief sought for passed the House of Representatives. The Senate Committee on Pensions, however, reported adversely upon it, on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to substantiate the claimant's disability. Subsequent to this report additional testimony upon this point was procured, including the following statement from Drs. W. W. Johnston and H. D. Fry, his attending physicians, which statement seems to your committee as conclusive evidence of the fact that during the time within which applications could be made for arrears of pension under the act above referred to the claimant was mentally and physically disabled from taking advantage of its provisions, and for these reasons the committee believe that the petitioner is entitled to the relief sought for, and they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill as a substitute for Senate bill No. 183.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine one or two questions. What is this claimant receiving now?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I believe it is $50 a month.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. His sufferings are very severe, I presume?

Mr. REED, of Maine. He is a very great sufferer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What amount of money will this bill carry?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I can not say. It simply puts him in the same position as he would have been in if he had not been mentally incapacitated from making his application in proper time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. He would receive arrearages upon the basis of the pension that he first received, I presume?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I so understand it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Not upon the basis of subsequent increases of pension?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I suppose not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like some member of the committee to make a statement about that.

A MEMBER. Is he in a dependent condition?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am informed by a gentleman at my side he is dependent for support on his family.

Mr. HAYNES. I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas that this bill proposes to give the claimant arrearages back to the time this disability came upon him. It came upon him very suddenly. It did not date back to the time of the war. My impression is that this covers arrears for a period of about three years. He was not pensioned at that time, as I understand, and the arrearages are not to date beyond the time when he was completely prostrated.

Mr. PRICE. The bill carries about $1,800.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The statements which have been made I think are satisfactory. They are so to me.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELLEN J. WELCH.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7721) granting a pension to Ellen J. Welch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ellen J. Welch, widow of John H. Welch, late of the Third Massachusetts Light Battery Artillery.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN W. PAYTON.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 7750) to place the name of John W. Payton on the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, instructed to place the name of John W. Payton, late a private in Company I, Eighteenth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ANNIE S. WEBB.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie S. Webb.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Annie S. Webb, a volunteer nurse in the late war, at the rate of $25 per month.

An amendment reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions striking out "twenty-five" before the word "dollars" and substituting "twelve" was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. LETITIA J. GARRARD.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 4816) granting a pension to Mrs. Letitia J. Garrard.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Letitia J. Garrard, dependent mother of Daniel Garrard, late captain of Company F, Twenty-second Kentucky Volunteers.

A MEMBER. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4816) granting a pension to Letitia J. Garrard, submit the following report:

Claimant is the widowed mother of Daniel Garrard, deceased, who was captain of Company F, Twenty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, and who was killed in battle near Vicksburg, December 29, 1862.

Her claim for pension was rejected on the ground that she was not dependent on the soldier for support at the time of his death.

Claimant's husband was, at the time of the soldier's death, living and in receipt of $1,700 per annum as a salary, as treasurer of Kentucky; his health was at the time of enlistment of soldier very feeble, so feeble that he could not perform the duties of his said office and kept the soldier in the office, where he (soldier) performed the duties thereof, and to that extent contributed to the support of claimant and her invalid husband.

The claimant's husband owned at the time of soldier's enlistment an interest in salt-works property in Kentucky, which was afterward destroyed by order of General Buell to prevent their falling into the hands of the confederates. The destruction of the property rendered it almost worthless, and it was afterward sold by the husband for a nominal sum. He also owned a small farm in Franklin County, Kentucky, but owed the purchase price therefor, and for which it was afterward sold. He also owned a house in the city of Frankfort, Ky., in which the claimant now lives; this being all that is left of the property of the husband. Soldier frequently during his service in the Army contributed to the support of his mother; the father died soon after the soldier was killed.

The claimant is now old and in needy circumstances, with no means of support, except what little money she earns by her own labor in keeping boarders.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD COLEMAN.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 8351) for the relief of Edward Coleman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is, authorized and directed to place the name of Edward Coleman, late a private in Company H, Fourth Regiment Illinois Cavalry Volunteers, and of Company C, One hundred and sixth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report in the case be read.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8351) for the relief of Edward Coleman, report:

That this claimant served through the Mexican war, and when discharged from that service was suffering from chronic diarrhea.

He made application for pension in 1850, but before the claim had been adjudicated the papers in the case were lost while in the hands of claimant's attorney at Stryker, Ohio, and were never found.

In August, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Fourth Illinois Cavalry, and served until March, 1862, when he was discharged by reason of chronic diarrhea.

On December 24, 1863, he re-enlisted as a private in Company C, One hundred and sixth Illinois Volunteers, and was honorably discharged in 1865.

Claimant in recent years has endeavored to establish his claim for pension for disabilities incurred in the Mexican war, but was unable to prosecute it to a successful issue, owing to the impossibility of securing evidence of comrades, &c.

In 1881 he filed application for a pension, alleging asthma, diarrhea, and dyspepsia as a result of his military service in the war of the rebellion. This claim was rejected on the ground that alleged disabilities existed prior to enlistment.

A special examiner of the Pension Office, who invested the case at the home of claimant, says that—

"This man is a total wreck; his mind is feeble, and he can not live long. He is a man of fair reputation, and I believe his statements could be relied upon if his memory was not so defective. After a careful examination of the case I am inclined to believe that as it now stands it ought to be rejected, although I believe the claim meritorious as to chronic diarrhea contracted while in the Mexican war."

Claimant was examined by the Terre Haute board of surgeons in 1885, who reported as follows:

"He is thin, spare, stoop-shouldered, and broken down. Bowels receding, slightly tympanitic. Increased dullness of hepatic area. Tongue red at tip and edges, and coated. Mucous membrane of anus pale and relaxed. Heart's action feeble and sounds indistinct. He is very poorly nourished, and totally disabled for the performance of manual labor.

The committee believe that claimant incurred chronic diarrhea while in the Mexican war, and that his service in the war of the rebellion aggravated his malady, resulting in his present incapacitated condition, and report the bill favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SILAS K. HAINES.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 2626) granting a pension to Silas K. Haines.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Silas K. Haines, late of Company H, Third Regiment Potomac Home Brigade Maryland Volunteers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 2626, submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted as a private soldier in Company H, Third Maryland Potomac Home Brigade, on March 8, 1862, and remained in the service until honorably mustered out at the close of the war. It is fully proved that he was a man of vigorous health when he entered the Army. In September, 1862, he was surrendered with his command at Harper's Ferry, Va., by Colonel Miles, and on his release on parole was sent to Camp Parole at Annapolis. While there, to wit, in November, 1862, a member of his company, who was his nephew, died with typhoid fever, and claimant and another comrade were granted leave to accompany the corpse home to Preston County, West Virginia. But on the day after they started, and when they had reached Pittsburgh, claimant was himself stricken down with the same disease, and with great difficulty reached his home, where he was prostrated with it for many weeks. This disease has permanently impaired his lungs, and left him a victim of increasing infirmity, suffering with swelling of joints of his lower limbs and with pains in his left hip to such a degeree that he has become helpless and destitute.

Dr. M. S. Bryte confirms these facts, which are testified to by several comrades, and says:

"That he has known claimant all his life, and has treated him professionally since the death of former physicians, and that there is no doubt claimant's present physical wreck is due to the same attack of fever above alluded to, and that it has never been aggravated by use of intoxicating liquors, from which claimant is an abstainer."

There can be no doubt that this fever was contracted in the parole camp, although its first attack was felt the day after leaving camp, and your committee have no doubt, under the circumstances proved, that claimant is well entitled to be put on the pension-rolls, and report accordingly.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. AURELIA C. RICHARDSON.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 1584) for the relief of Mrs. Aurelia C. Richardson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Aurelia C. Richardson, dependent mother of Albert H. Fillmore, late of Company F, Eleventh New York Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 1584, beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant is the dependent mother of Albert H. Fillmore, late of Company F, Eleventh New York Cavalry Volunteers.

The soldier enlisted in August, 1862, for three years, and died in hospital at Memphis, May 20, 1865, from confluent small-pox.

The claim was rejected on account of non-dependence upon the soldier at the time of his death.

The claimant is seventy-six years old, and the evidence shows that she is now poor and suffering from the infirmities of old age. Her husband, the stepfather of the soldier, is seventy-eight years old, a blacksmith by trade, broken down by physical infirmities, and unable to support himself and wife by labor. The income of all the property they now own is insufficient to furnish the commonest kind of a living.

At the time of the son's enlistment the property of the claimant was entirely insufficient for her support, and even with the earnings of her husband at that time was not enough to render them a comfortable living.

The evidence tends to show that at and before enlistment the son recognized his filial obligations by contributing to some extent to the mother's support.

We think this is a claim falling fairly within the rule adopted by the committee governing such cases, and finding it to be meritorious and just, recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CLARA L. PREUSS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 921) granting a pension to Clara L. Preuss.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Clara L. Preuss, at the same rate received by her deceased husband, Leopold B. Preuss, late captain of Company C, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE, supplied later) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 921) granting a pension to Clara L. Preuss, submit the following report:

Claimant's husband was at the time of his death drawing a pension for paralysis and varicose veins and varicocele, resulting from injuries received in line of duty. His widow's claim for pension was rejected on the ground that the disease which was the immediate cause of the death of soldier did not result from the injuries received in the service and line of duty.

The facts as shown by the record are as follows:

Soldier was captain of Company C, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Cavalry, and while in the line of duty was thrown from his horse and dragged a considerable distance by the foot, resulting in varicose veins in left leg and varicocele of left testicle, on account of which disabilities he resigned, as shown by surgeon's certificate of disability.

A board of medical examiners issued certificate of soldier's condition of date October 4, 1875, viz:

"(1) Varicocele of left cord of left scrotum of marked development; disability, one-half, $2.

"(2) Whole left calf, especially external and posterior surfaces, covered by enlarged or varicose veins, which collect and empty into the internal saphena, itself likewise enlarged to saphenous opening; disability one-half, $4. (The rating for No. 1 too low; should have been at least one-half, $4.)

"Present condition.—General paralysis, nearly complete; there is no voluntary movement of the arm, or hand, or finger; insignificant power over lower extremities, amounting to merely and barely movement; articulation indistinct. Pensioner is as helpless as a babe, and requires constant personal attendance and aid day and night; complains of intense pain over the whole body, but more especially in the back, result of chronic myelitis, consequent upon fall of horse.

"The disabilities Nos. 1 and 2, for which he is now pensioned, continue less marked because of the constant recumbency; pensioner had to be visited and examined at his residence. We find his disability, as described above, to be equal to and entitling him to special rating, $50. Should be exempted from biennial examination."

The decision of medical referee of Pension-Office is as follows:

"Immediate cause of death, paralysis of muscles of respiration. Remote cause not known; did not originate in the United States service."

Your committee think that the pathological sequence is very plain, and that the cause of death, "paralysis of muscles of respiration," is the outgrowth and extension of the general paralysis resulting from the injury received in the service, and from which claimant suffered for a number of years prior to his death.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendments:

Strike out in lines 4 and 5 the words "at the same rate received by her deceased husband" and add to the bill the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions—striking out the words "at the same rate received by her deceased husband," inserting the words "widow of" after the name "Clara L. Preuss," and adding at the end of the bill the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws"—were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the bill at the Clerk's desk is not accompanied with any report, the report not having been received from the Printer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then let some gentleman who is familiar with the case make a statement.

Mr. WILLIS. My colleague [Mr. TAULBEE] made the report. I am cognizant of the facts. This lady, the widow of Captain Preuss, resides in my city. The claim was rejected at the Department on a technicality. There is a report, which was made, as I have remarked, by my colleague [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the gentleman make a brief statement of the exact facts.

Mr. TAULBEE. The gentleman from Arkansas requests a brief statement of the facts. I did not remember the particulars in this case until my colleague [Mr. WILLIS] made a suggestion with reference to it. I now remember the facts. This soldier, while a captain in the Army, fell from his horse and was dragged a considerable distance by the foot, suffering severe injuries, for which he was granted a pension at the rate of $15 a month. He made application for an increase of pension, and the medical examining board rated him at $50 a month for the injuries which he had received to the left leg, consisting of varicose veins and, I believe, varicocele. So far, however, as appeared from any evidence which we could gather the pension recommended at the rate of $50 a month was not granted. The bill as originally drawn proposed to put the widow on the pension-roll at the same rate which had been received by her husband, the understanding doubtless being that he had been on the roll at the rate of $50 a month, which, however, did not appear from the records to have been the fact. The soldier died from paralysis, which, according to the report of the examining board, was the result of the injuries received when he fell from his horse. The report of the examining board stated that the soldier's left arm and left leg, in fact both legs, were paralyzed to a very considerable extent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This bill proposes to give a pension to the widow?

Mr. TAULBEE. The bill proposes to give a pension to the widow at the rate provided for under existing law.

Mr. WILLIS. Not at $50 a month.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I see no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. I know these parties in Louisville. They are a worthy German family—upright, honest people.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY SPRAGUE.

Mr. JAMES. I call up the bill (H. R. 5715) granting a pension to Mary Sprague.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary Sprague, a volunteer nurse in the late war, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her the sum of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5715) granting a pension to Mary Sprague, submit the following report:

The claimant, Mrs. Mary Sprague, volunteered as a nurse and was accepted as such May 22, 1861, and was in continuous service until December, 1863. That while serving at the Mansion House Hospital, attending to her duties, her health became greatly impaired through a contagious fever there contracted, which disabled her for duty and from the effects of which she is still suffering. That she is now unable to perform any kind of labor or household duty, never having recovered her health. She now asks that, being unable longer to labor, she be granted a pension of $25 a month; in support of such claim she presents the affidavit of Dr. D. W. Bliss, her own verified petition, and letters from J. B. Porter, surgeon U. S. A., and others, which are hereto attached and made part of this report.

The committee believe that the claimant is entitled to a pension, and they recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "twenty-five," in line 7, and inserting in lieu thereof "twelve," and as amended that the same do pass.

The amendment reported by the committee to strike out, in line 7, the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH SLENBAKER.

Mr. SHAW. I call up the bill (H. R. 4727) granting a pension to Elizabeth Slenbaker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Slenbaker, mother of Joseph Slenbaker, late of Company E, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade Maryland Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4527) granting a pension to Elizabeth Slenbaker, respectfully report:

Joseph Slenbaker enlisted in Company E, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade Maryland Cavalry, February 17, 1864, and was discharged June 28, 1865. He died September 18, 1870.

The soldier's mother applied to the Pension Office for relief, and her claim was rejected on the ground that it can not be established that the fatal disease of soldier was due to service.

In diverse statements before your committee among the papers on file claimant testifies as to her husband's inability to support her since soldier's death on account of his diseased condition. She was at different times in receipt of voluntary contributions from friends and relatives. Claimant has tried hard to procure the evidence called for by the Department, but usually has been unsuccessful in procuring same on account of so long a time having passed since the happening of the different incidents. She received no replies to many of her letters sent to the officers and comrades of her son.

As to the soldier's prior soundness, Dr. J. A. Taylor testifies that he always regarded the soldier as a healthy man. John Duerr and Peter K. Baker testify that they knew soldier for twenty-five years, and have every reason to believe that he was a hale, hearty, robust man prior to enlistment.

The evidence as to soldier's condition during service is very unsatisfactory. The captain of the company does not remember much about the soldier, and a letter addressed to John McIlwain, late assistant surgeon, was returned unclaimed.

Since service the soldier's condition is given by R. Zingling as follows:

"I saw soldier nearly every day before he went into the Army, and never knew him to complain in any way. He came home from the Army with a cough and hoarseness, which continued getting worse until his death, and about one year before he died he lost his speech entirely."

The attending physician in soldier's last days testifies that he was only called in professionally in the last stages of his (soldier's) illness, and can not say how long he had been suffering from disease of lungs; but phthisis was the immediate cause of his death.

There is quite a good deal of testimony in reference to soldier's condition since service, and it all tends to show that soldier went into the service a robust, healthy man, as far as the witnesses could tell, and returned to his home with hoaseness and a cough, which lasted until and was the cause of his death, as shown by competent medical evidence. It is also clearly shown that the claimant's husband was an invalid, and did not support her; also that the soldier did aid very materially in the maintenance of his parents.

Thomas H. Joy and Peter I. Wilkehn testify that they contributed flour and money to claimant and her husband in payment for labor of soldier; that soldier aided materially in the support of his parents; that soldier's aid was necessary for their support, as the income from their property was insufficient.

To recapitulate: The soldier was well and hearty when he enlisted; he returned home with a cough, which continued and resulted in phthisis, which ended in death. While well he contributed to the support of his parents, who are now poor and in want.

For these considerations your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SALLY B. BENT.

Mr. GROUT. I call up the bill (H. R. 6606) granting a pension to Sally B. Bent.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally B. Bent, dependent mother of David P. Bent, a soldier of the Union Army in the war of the rebellion, as shown by her application for a pension, numbered 268462.

Mr. GROUT. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6606) granting a pension to Sally B. Bent, submit the following report:

Sally B. Bent filed a claim as dependent mother of David P. Bent, a private in Company G, Fourth Vermont Regiment, who died of disease in the service. Her claim was rejected "on the ground that claimant was not dependent on the soldier for support at the time of his death, her son, C. C. Bent, having before that time agreed to support her, and having performed said contract."

It appears from the evidence filed in the Pension Office, and with this committee, that in the spring of 1861 the Bent family consisted of the claimant and her husband, two sons, and two daughters. The husband was at that time, by reason of poor health, able to perform but little manual labor, nor was he at any time before his death, which occurred in 1880. Both daughters were deformed in person and deficient in intellect and intelligence, being thereby unable to take care of themselves.

The family resided upon a farm in the town of Marshfield, Vt., which was situated nearly half a mile from the public road, and comprised 61 acres of wet, stony land. The buildings were poor, and the entire property, real and personal, was worth from $1,000 to $1,200.

July 9, 1861, Mr. and Mrs. Bent deeded their property to their eldest son, Charles C. Bent, in consideration of a life support for themselves and their two idiot daughters. The youngest son, David P., was a party to this arrangement, but, being a minor, could not appear of record. It was understood, however, that he should enter the service, turn over his pay for the support of the family, and on his return was to share in the title to the property. He enlisted September 21, 1861, and his State pay of $7 a month was drawn by the father, besides which he forwarded about $10 per month from his Government pay. He died in hospital at Washington, May 19, 1862.

The bar to the allowance of the mother's claim is in the contract for support made with the son Charles C. Technically, it destroyed her claim of dependence upon the soldier. In fact, we think, that dependence existed to a considerable extent. All the evidence tends to show that of the three male members of the family circle the soldier was the most competent.

The father was an invalid for twenty-five years, and the son, Charles C., has had several severe fits of sickness. The miserable little property involved was manifestly insufficient for the maintenance of two old people and two idiotic children. The father is now dead, also one of the daughters. But the mother, in her old age, is obliged to work hard for the support which is guaranteed to her on paper, but which the guarantor has been unable to furnish in fact. She gave her son to the country, and we think the country can well afford to waive for the few remaining years of her life the technical objection to granting her a pension.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally B. Bent, dependent mother of David P. Bent, late a private in Company G, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteers," and that as so amended the bill do pass.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the language stated at the conclusion of the report, was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

CHARLES RIDDLE.

Mr. McCREARY. I call up the bill (H. R. 6952) granting a pension to Charles Riddle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles Riddle, father of Milton Riddle, deceased, late of Company G, Eighteenth Kentucky Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6952) granting a pension to Charles Riddle, submit the following report:

Milton Riddle enlisted as a private in Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, November 18, 1861, and was killed in action August 30, 1862; he was never married; he left his father, Charles Riddle, surviving him; his mother died before his enlistment.

Charles Riddle filed claim for pension as dependent father May 24, 1880, which was rejected on the ground that the father was not dependent on his son for support at time of enlistment.

The proof is abundant and plain.

Milton Riddle was sixteen years old when he enlisted. He had, up to the time of enlistment, lived with and labored for his father, he being the eldest son.

Charles Riddle was, at the time of his son's enlistment, afflicted with piles, from which he has been a continual sufferer.

His family consisted of two daughters, aged eighteen and eight years, respectively, and three sons, namely, soldier, aged sixteen years, and two others, aged twelve and ten years, respectively. One of his daughters lost one of her eyes soon after the war; one of his sons was paralyzed; and one of his sons lost an arm.

The father owned a farm of about 50 acres, worth about $600, and from which his income was about $40 or $50 per annum, and he owned a very small amount of personal property, and depended on his labor for the support of himself and family.

He has married three times since the death of his son, concerning which fact the special examiner in his report makes the following observation:

"My candid opinion is, that the only thing in which he ever manifested any energy was in marrying."

The proof shows that prior to his second marriage he was compelled to procure homes for his children, he being unable to provide for them, and that after his second marriage his children returned home and his wife aided in their support.

The marriages of claimant were all honorable, and your committee believe were proper and expedient, and we regard the attempted reflection of the special examiner as in very bad taste, and an evidence of bad faith.

He acquired no property of any consequence by any of his marriages, and is now, and has been ever since his son's enlistment, in poor health and very poor.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET D. MARCHAND.

Mr. EVANS. I call up a bill (S. 226) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchand.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret D. Marchand, widow of Commodore J. B. Marchand, late of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have run through the report, and the case seems to be meritorious, but I would rather the gentleman should make an explanation.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, this claim was reported favorably and was passed by the House several weeks ago. The bill provided that Mrs. Marchand be pensioned subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

About the same time a separate bill was reported favorably and was passed by the Senate allowing the claimant $50 per month. Now, as I understand it, the House Pensions Committee report favorably the Senate bill.

It seems to me from the gallant, distinguished, and long services of Commodore Marchand that it is nothing more than an act of justice, but tardy at that, that this poor widow, who is now far in the decline of old age, being seventy-eight years old and in destitute circumstances, should receive this pension, which will, in a measure, add to her comfort the few remaining years of her life. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman the widow of Commodore Marchand is poor and venerable.

Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir; and has nothing to live on.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think that is enough.

Mr. EVANS. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

A MEMBER. Is this a favorable report?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed it is a favorable report.

Mr. EVANS'S motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE G. EARLY.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I call up a bill (H. R. 3379) granting a pension to George G. Early.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George G. Early, of Newton, Iowa, late of Company I, Third Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. NEECE. Unless the reading of the report is called for I hope it will be omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the habit to call for the reading of the reports.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I will not object to dispensing with the reading of the report if I am permitted to ask a question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Was this case rejected by the Pension Office?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; upon the ground the claimant could not furnish testimony. He was in prison at the time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Why has he not made a subsequent application?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. He was in prison.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Why did he not make application when he got out of prison?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. He could not get it when he was in prison.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But what prevented him from getting it when he got out of prison?

Mr. PERKINS. From inability at that late period to show the occurrence.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Let the report be read, and that will show the facts in the case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I thought we might get at it quicker by explanation on the gentleman's part.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is better to read the report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Very well; let it be read.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3397) granting a pension to George G. Early, submit the following report:

This soldier enlisted June 15, 1861, as a sergeant, Company I, Third Ohio Volunteers, was taken prisoner at Murfreesborough, Tenn., December 31, 1862, and was paroled January 27, 1863, and discharged June 21, 1864. He re-enlisted as a private in Company G, One hundred and eighty-seventh Ohio Volunteers, February 14, 1865, and was mustered out January 20, 1866, having served more than four years. He filed application for pension June 21, 1882, alleging disease of the heart, stomach, liver, and kidneys, or general debility.

His application was rejected for the want of proof showing the existence of his disability while in the service.

He has proven his four years or more of arduous service, which certainly ought to be conclusive proof of prior soundness; and he has furnished medical testimony of his general debilitated condition in 1866, immediately after his discharge, and from that time to present date. The following affidavit of Dr. J. R. Gorrell, of Newton, Iowa, gives a full history of the case, and is fully corroborated by other testimony:

"I have known George G. Early intimately, socially and professionally, since the spring of 1869. I have seen him, I believe, every week, and often every day, for months together, during the whole of that time. I began the treatment of his case in the spring of 1869, and he has been constantly under my care ever since. My diagnosis of his case then was obscure liver and kidney disease. During the fall of 1869 there occurred irregularity of the heart's action, which was then believed to be functional and to depend upon the liver and kidneys. As before stated, he has been constantly under my care professionally since 1869 for disease of the liver, kidney, and heart, which defied treatment, for he has slowly but steadily grown worse up to the present time.

"In view of the character of the disease at my first examination in 1869, and its persistence up to this time, and also as he had at one time (1862) in the Army an acute attack of kidney disease, attended with delirium for several days, I have no hesitancy in saying that the cause of his present disability was his army life. He was a brave soldier for four years and a half; was never off duty except a few days following acute attack referred to, from which he supposed he had recovered, but subsequent developments clearly point to the fact that the disease then contracted from exposure to cold, he being barefooted and with one ragged blanket on a forced march in January, only remained in abeyance and silently invaded other organs until his present physical wreck is the result. He has done no work for several years, he not being able to because of disease of his liver, kidneys, and heart, and there is no probability of a recovery. He is poor and has a large family. He was a true soldier, and is now an honorable man."

Garrett Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Newton, Iowa, in a memorial to Congress also set forth the same facts, and pray that he be pensioned.

That this man has no hospital record ought rather to be placed to his credit than set down against him. The fact of his four and a half years of faithful and honorable service, his capture, his imprisonment, his continued disability since, and his present disabled condition and consequent poverty, in the judgment of your committee, demand recognition and recompense by the Government. The passage of the bill is therefore recommended.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The report does not seem to develop why he did not make application for a pension, or why it was rejected if he did.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It does show his claim was rejected on account of the failure of the claimant to furnish proof showing that the disability was incurred while in the service.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is enough. Do you know this physician to be a responsible and competent man?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; Dr. Gorrell is a member of the board at Newton, Iowa.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SARAH P. M'KEAN.

Mr. STRUBLE. I call up a bill (S. 973) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah P. McKean, of Marion, Linn County, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of Mrs. Sarah P. McKean be, and the same is hereby, increased to $50 per month; and the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Sarah P. McKean on the pension-roll as a pensioner of the United States for the sum of $50 per month, said $50 per month being in lieu of all other pensions heretofore granted.

The report (by Mr. STRUBLE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 973) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah P. McKean, have examined the same, and report:

This bill, reported by the Senate Committee on Pensions with the recommendation that it do pass, provides for increasing the pension of Mrs. Sarah P. McKean from $30 to $50 per month.

She is the widow of General Thomas J. McKean, who was a graduate of West Point, was promoted to brevet second lieutenant in the Fourth Infantry July 1, 1831, where he served until his resignation March 31, 1834.

Subsequently he served as a private soldier in the war with Mexico; was appointed paymaster United States Volunteers June 1, 1861, and brigadier-general of volunteers November 21, 1861, in which capacity he served through the war of the rebellion, leaving the service a physical wreck and dying in 1870 from the effects of his service.

The present pension ($30) of Mrs. McKean is the rate for the rank of lieutenant-colonel, being the highest grade allowed under the general pension laws. The petitioner is now over sixty years of age and wholly dependent (for her support) upon her pension, which is inadequate to afford her a comfortable living.

In view of the long and distinguished services of petitioner's husband, her own needs, and the numerous precedents established by Congress in cases of this kind, your committee report the bill favorably and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. PRICE. I do not want to delay the proceedings, but this is one of the kind of things I do not want to vote for, nor do I think any man here would like to vote for it. I understand another similar case was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, the purpose of which is to raise the pension of an officer's widow. I wish now to call attention to the fact this is based on the rank of her husband, and not because of extraordinary gallantry.

Mr. STRUBLE. It is based on his long and valuable service.

Mr. PRICE. That is the case with all of them.

A MEMBER. What was the rank of this officer?

Mr. STRUBLE. A brigadier-general in the late war. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. STRUBLE'S motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FREDERICK ROBERTSON.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. I call up the bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Frederick Robertson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick Robertson, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Army, at the rate of $30 per month.

The committee recommend in the seventh line to strike out "at the rate of $30 per month."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The amendment strikes out "$30 a month," and leaves it under the operation of the pension laws.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What does the law allow to widows of surgeons?

Mr. BRADY. That depends upon the rank held by the claimant.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Do the surgeons have military rank? It is so long since the war that I believe I have forgotten.

Mr. BRADY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed he rank in this case was that of an assistant surgeon.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. An assistant surgeon ranks as a captain.

The amendment was adopted; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH S. DE KRAFFT.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I ask consent to call up the bill (S. 2223) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. De Krafft and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized anddirected to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth S. De Krafft, widow of John Charles Philip De Krafft, late commodore and rear-admiral in the United States Navy.

The report (by Mr. STRUBLE) was read, as follows:

As a review of the eminent and faithful service of the petitioner's husband, we quote from a letter recently written by Admiral Porter, and which is sustained by the records:

OFFICE OF THE ADMIRAL, 1710 H STREET, N. W.,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1886.

The late Rear-Admiral J. C. P. De Krafft had a varied service, having seen as much sea duty as any of the officers of his grade, and a great deal more than some others, his duty, while in the Navy, having (on sea and ashore) been almost continuous.

He bears a record of having been a most excellent officer, always gave satisfaction to his commanding officers, and never had any official difficulties so far as known. The record of his services is as follows:

He entered the Navy from Illinois, October 9, 1841, and was ordered to the frigate Congress, of the Mediterranean squadron, in which he served till 1843. In 1844 he was sent to the frigate Raritan, on the Brazil station, where he remained till 1846, being then ordered to the home squadron. He served throughout the Mexican war, being present at the first attack upon Alvarado. He was sent to the ship-of-the-line Ohio, on the Pacific station, in 1847, and afterward was sent to the Naval School, being promoted to passed midshipman August 10, 1847.

After passing his examination he served on board the frigate Raritan on the Home Station, and in 1851 was ordered to the Coast Survey. He was next ordered to the steamer Vixen, in which he served till 1852, on the home station, returning to the Coast Survey in 1853. He was attached to the United States steamship Michigan on the lakes in 1855, and was promoted to master in that year. On September 14, 1855, he received his commission as a lieutenant, and served in the sloop John Adams, in the Pacific squadron, from 1856 to 1858, returning to the Michigan in 1859. In 1861 he was on board the Niagara, employed in special service. In that year he participated in the attack on Fort McRae, in the harbor of Pensacola. He was constantly employed during the war, especially in the West Gulf blockading squadron. In 1862-'63 he was on duty at the Washington navy-yard, and commanded the steamer Conemaugh from 1864 to 1866, participating in the attack on Fort Powell, Mobile Bay, when he commanded a division of five gunboats on August 5, 1864.

He was made a commander July 25, 1866; was on special duty in Philadelphia in 1867, 1868, and 1869; was fleet captain of the North Atlantic squadron. In 1870 he was again employed on special duty at Philadelphia, from which point he was ordered to duty at the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H., where he remained till 1872. He was commissioned as captain November 20, 1872, and was ordered to the command of the Richmond, flag-ship of the Pacific station, and as fleet captain of that station.

From this station he was transferred to similar duties in the Asiatic fleet, where he remained till 1875. His next service was at the Washington navy-yard, as captain of the yard, from 1877 to 1880.

On the 12th of July, 1880, he was ordered to duty as hydrographer of the Navy Department, and on October 1, 1881, was promoted to be a commodore.

On August 22, 1883, he was made president of the naval board of inspection and survey, on which he served under my command till the day of his death, having been in the mean time made a rear-admiral. He performed all his duties in the most intelligent and satisfactory manner.

Very respectfully,

DAVID D. PORTER,
Admiral, U. S. Navy.

The widow, Elizabeth S. De Krafft, was granted a pension of $30 per month.

In view of the long, varied, and distinguished service of petitioner's husband, extending from October 19, 1841, to his death, October 29, 1885, a period of forty-four years, and in view of the needs of the widow, and the precedents heretofore established by Congress, your committee think that petitioner's pension should be increased from $30 to $50, as is provided for in this bill.

We therefore recommend that said bill do pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to ask some questions in connection with this bill of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MATSON. This bill comes from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PRICE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield the floor for that motion?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will continue my questions before I yield. Who speaks for this bill?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I do.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This is the widow of an admiral.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. She is without property, as I understand.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; she has very little.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Where does she live?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Here in Washington.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. She has not married since the war?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. No, sir; and I will say to the gentleman that this is following the line of precedent established by the House for many years.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We understand that. I would like to ask the gentleman further, is she aged?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; she is sixty or seventy years old.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This report speaks of her being in reduced circumstances.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir; she has very little property.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. She is in need of the money, then?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This gives her $50 a month?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like to say to the gentleman from Arkansas——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am satisfied; I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say as to the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that I am satisfied a brief explanation will convince him it ought not to be made. These naval pensions are not like the pensions voted for Army purposes, which come out of the general Treasury. These naval pensions come out of the pension fund, which is raised by the sale of prizes captured by the Navy, and it is not a burden upon the Government like the appropriations for Army pensions.

Mr. BRADY. Fifteen millions of that pension fund I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas are now out at interest.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to ask another question in reference to this fund. As I understand it, it is a fund created by law for a specific purpose.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Does the law also specify certain classes of pensioners who shall draw against it?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Now, is there any danger when you make additions to that list that you may do an act of injustice to worthy pensioners who have been heretofore placed upon that list?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. There is no danger of that; it is a very large fund.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is there a surplus now?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRADY. It has accumulated to a very large extent, and this addition could not possibly deprive anybody. There are already fifteen millions of it at interest. It has been expressly set apart for naval pensions.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have no objection whatever to the passage of the bill. I am entirely willing to put additional meritorious pensioners upon it provided it does no injury to other good pensioners now there. In that case I would desire payment from another source.

Mr. STRUBLE. Let me say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that as to the rank of this officer it is the same relative rank as that of the officer whose bill was passed a short time ago in the presence of the gentleman. I hope, therefore, that my friend will not do more than indicate his opposition to it by voting against it, and will not insist upon the presence of a quorum.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to detain the committee longer than is absolutely necessary, but it is not the amount of money involved in this or any of these cases that is going to destroy the Government. It has gone abroad all over the country that we are doing this thing night after night and day after day in the way of granting these large pensions; now these people believe all this to be wrong when they see bills of this kind passed. I sympathize in that conviction myself in view of the fact that we have hundreds and thousands of people that have no pension at all. It has been our fault that there has been an absolute failure to grant pensions in many cases that are pending, and cases are sent away from the Pension Office and rejected there on testimony that would convict a good man of murder in any court in the country. Following that they send out special examiners, and if a man can find one out of eighteen witnesses who will swear to any fact in opposition to the claim of the soldier they will take it and delay the whole question of granting the pension.

These people should be attached to this Government because they believe it is a square one; and yet when they read in the papers of these cases of pensions at $30 being called up and increased to $50 in both the Army and Navy, they have a right to say we are not doing this justly and fairly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. May I ask the gentleman to what class does he refer?

Mr. PRICE. I refer to raising the pension of anybody who has a reasonable support, raising it to an extraordinary amount, or a greater amount, whether extraordinary or not, purely on the ground that there is a precedent for it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman is referring to what we are doing just now.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. To what class does the gentleman refer when he speaks of what we are not doing?

Mr. PRICE. I was referring to thousands and thousands of widows of gallant soldiers who died in the ranks, and to soldiers who are physical wrecks to-day, who have fallen into abject poverty or are eking out a miserable existence in a poor-house, who, because of some infernal law that should never have been passed, are starving for want of support. And at the same time we are taking these distinguished people, because of their rank, and increasing their pensions. You can write up the history of any of these men—it is well written no doubt; you can get it in one of James's novels. And we allow this gush, this sentiment, to make us do this unfair thing. Independent of the amount of money which is involved we create the impression among the people who should be attached to the Government that we are unjust to them, and go on day after day moved by a sickly sentiment. And when no other argument can be put forward there is the argument that we have a precedent for it. In the name of common sense, is this Congress to be tied down by what some other Congress has done? Let us adopt a course that will be more creditable, more just, and that will commend itself to the judgment of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin make a motion to lay the bill aside with the recommendation that it do lie on the table?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir; I make that motion.

The motion was disagreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question being taken, the Chair stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BRADY. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 18.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar under the special order, had directed him to report sundry bills with divers recommendations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first report the bills of the House which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Before that is done I ask that the bills which increase the pensions from $30 to $50, three in number, be referred to a full House for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Clerk will lay the bills indicated aside for the present and report the bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. BRADY. What is the motion of the gentleman from Indiana?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON] objected to three bills being acted on with the others collectively, and desired there should be separate action on those bills.

Mr. BRADY. To-night?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

The bills indicated, S. 226, S. 973, and S. 223, were laid aside until action should be taken on the other bills reported.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the House of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 2964) to restore to the pension-list the name of Abel Mishler, of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. 8556) granting a pension to Abraham Points;

A bill (H. R. 7721) granting a pension to Ellen J. Welch;

A bill (H. R. 7750) to place the name of John W. Payton on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 4816) granting a pension to Mrs. Letitia J. Garrard;

A bill (H. R. 8351) for the relief of Edward Coleman;

A bill (H. R. 2626) granting a pension to Silas K. Haines;

A bill (H. R. 1584) for the relief of Aurelia C. Richardson;

A bill (H. R. 4527) granting a pension to Elizabeth Slenbaker;

A bill (H. R. 6952) granting a pension to Charles Riddle; and

A bill (H. R. 3379) granting a pension to George G. Early.

House bills of the following titles were reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments. The amendments were severally adopted, and the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 3363) granting a pension to Jennette Dow;

A bill (H. R. 2358) granting a pension to Mary Renfro;

A bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie S. Webb;

A bill (H. R. 921) granting a pension to Clara R. Preuss;

A bill (H. R. 5715) granting a pension to Mary Sprague;

A bill (H. R. 6606) granting a pension to Sallie B. Bent; and

A bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Frederick Robertson.

The bill (S. 1584) for the relief of Cornelia R. Schenck was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS S. HOPKINS.

The bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, was reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman having this bill in charge whether this is the case in which arrears of pensions are carried?

Mr. HAYNES. It is that bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask to have it laid over till the other bills are disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are now only remaining this bill and the three Senate bills which were laid aside at the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSTON]. The Clerk will report the bill referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the passage of this bill. Is it in order to have the bill read again at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

The bill was again read.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment there are two very grave reasons why this bill should not pass. The first is that under this bill the claimant has the benefit of the act increasing the rate of pension to certain persons on the pension-roll at the time of the passage of the act increasing pensions from $50 to $72 per month.

This case is singled out, for reasons which I have been unable to discover, from many other cases equally meritorious. Another feature of this bill is that it proposes to give the claimant arrears of pensions, although he failed to file his claim in time to avail himself of the benefit of the act granting arrears. I object to that. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed wholly to the theory of arrears of pensions. I do not think it is tenable from any standpoint; I do not think it is good practice.

I have always taken the position that every person who was disabled in the service of the United States should receive a pension from the date of his application, and that the widow, the dependent father, or other relations of such a person recognized by the law should, in case of the death of the soldier in consequence of his service, be entitled to pension from and after the date of the filing of their applications. I believe that is the correct theory of pensions; I believe that is the proper ground on which we can afford to put these cases, and I shall certainly oppose the passage of this bill, because this claimant, who appears from the report to have been a practicing attorney in the city of Washington and doubtless had full knowledge of his rights, failed to file his claim in time for reasons best known to himself, and which, perhaps, the friends of this bill may be able to explain.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I think I shall be able to demonstrate to the House that it is entirely consistent with the principles which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] has announced that this bill should pass. The law relating to arrears of pensions contained a limitation, but from that limitation were excepted all cases of insanity, meaning, as I suppose, such mental disability as disqualified the man from making the necessary application. In other words, the same provision was made in that law that is made in all sensible statutes of limitation, exempting persons who were under such disability, either of coverture or nonage or mental disqualification, as would prevent them from doing the thing which their fellow-citizens not so circumstanced could do.

This man was not technically "insane" in the opinion of the Pension Office, yet he was suffering under a disability which rendered it impossible for him to make the application. Of that there is ample proof. It is true that he had been a practicing lawyer, but at the time in question he was prostrated by nervous exhaustion, which rendered him incapable of making the necessary application. The proof of that is contained in the report, and it comes from Drs. Johnston and Fry of this city. Dr. Fry I do not know. Dr. Johnston I do know. He is a physician of the highest standing and celebrity here in Washington, a man incapable of stating anything but the truth. He says that he was one of the regular medical attendants of Thomas S. Hopkins during his long illness; that his disease "has been the severest case of nervous exhaustion which has ever come under my observation;" that "from March, 1879, to November, 1880, he was absolutely disqualified, both mentally and physically, from attending to the business of applying for a pension, or any other business, by reason of the intensity of his symptoms, and that there were no intervals, however short, during that period when he could have safely undertaken the work;" and that "the effort he made in applying at so early a date as he did apply seriously retarded his recovery."

Now, what does this bill propose to do? It is very simple. It proposes to put this man in the same position as if he had been technically "insane." Is that right or wrong? Under the principle announced by the gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] he would not deprive this man, thus circumstanced, of the right which the laws of the country have given to other citizens similarly circumstanced.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. At what rate of pension will this man go on the pension-roll in case we pass this bill?

Mr. REED, of Maine. He will receive the same rate of pension that he would have received had he made his application in time.

Mr. TAULBEE. In time for what?

Mr. REED, of Maine. In time to avoid the statute of limitation.

Mr. TAULBEE. As to the pension or as to the arrears?

Mr. REED, of Maine. As to the arrears. He is now on the pension-roll. Every fact necessary to entitle him to a pension has been proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Pensions. I have listened to this bill carefully, and in my judgment it can do nothing except put him in the same position that he would have been in had his mental condition been such as to permit him to make the application in time. He will receive the pension allowed by law—only that.

Mr. PERKINS. If this bill should pass, the testimony showing the condition of the beneficiary from the time he incurred the disability up to the time when he was put on the pension-roll will be considered by the Commissioner for the purpose of determining what pension he shall draw.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not pretend to be an expert in pension law, but cases have come under my observation where a man has been graded for a number of years at $4 a month, for another series of years at $8 a month, and for another term of years at even a higher rate. So that under the terms of this bill the man's pension will be graded by the actual disability which existed (and which will have to be shown at the Pension Office) from the time when the disability was incurred up to the time when he received the pension already granted him under the testimony on file in the Pension Office.

Mr. PRICE. Can the gentleman state how long that time was?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I can not.

Mr. TAULBEE. If I understand the reading of this bill, it attempts to accomplish two things——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Only one thing.

Mr. TAULBEE. One is to extend to this claimant the arrears which he would have received had he filed his application at the Pension Office prior to July 1, 1880.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will the Clerk have the kindness to read the bill again? I desire that the gentleman from Kentucky shall see what its language is.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman will see that the bill is exactly as I stated. It merely puts this man on the pension-roll at the same rate he would have received had the application been made in time.

Mr. TAULBEE. My understanding of the pension law is that all persons who on the 16th of June, 1880, were on the pension-roll at the rate of $50 per month were to receive thereafter $72 per month. The date of June 16, 1880, has nothing whatever to do with the limitation for arrears of pension. That limitation cut off all claims for arrears of pension filed subsequently to June 30, 1880. This rerating of pensions extended up to June 16, 1880, the law providing that persons who were on the pension-roll prior to that time at the rate of $50 a month for disabilities equivalent to those for which this claimant is now on the pension-roll at that rate should have their pensions increased to $72 a month. Otherwise, why the propriety of providing in this bill that the claimant shall not only have the benefit of the arrears of pension, but shall be exempted as to rating from the limitation which ran out June 16, 1880?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to make the suggestion that under this bill this man would receive any more than if he had made application at the proper time?

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not claim that under this bill the claimant will have any more rights than he would have had if he had filed his claim in time to avail himself of the benefit of this increase of rate; but I do say that the clause in the bill to which I have referred can mean nothing else than to increase this rate of pension from $50 to $72 a month.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What can be the objection to putting this man in the same position in which he would have been had his mental condition been such that he could have made application in proper time? That is all the bill does.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not claim that an argument such as the gentleman seems to have understood me to offer can be maintained on any grounds of fairness or right. Granting that this claimant, subsequently to the development of his disease to a pensionable degree, was not in a condition to make his application—grant that his disease was so sudden in its development as to deprive him of all power to make his application—in that state of facts the law, as has been stated by the gentleman from Maine, would have made provision for him. But he refrained from making his application during the progress of the development of the disease from which he claims to have suffered on the 30th of June, 1880, and immediately prior thereto.

But with reference to that point of rerating, I say that if this claimant, with his present disabilities, is entitled to that increase of rate, if this act should be retrospective in regard to him, I can see no reason why there should not be a general law extending these benefits to all persons now laboring under disabilities equivalent to those under which this claimant is laboring. I maintain that this bill, if passed——

Mr. MATSON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I think he is laboring under a misapprehension in reference to this case. The point and strength of the case, as I remember, consisted in the fact that this man was stricken with this disease before the enactment of the arrears law at all; that the disease continued to render him utterly helpless until after the expiration of the limitation, which was on the 1st of July, 1880; that he having been stricken with the disease in 1878, there was no moment of time from the enactment of the arrearage acts in January and March, 1879 (for there were two acts), until after the expiration of the limitation, or, indeed, until the present time, when he has been able to make application.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is what the report states.

Mr. MATSON. This claim was regarded as being sui generis, there is no other like it, so far as we have ever heard, and hence we consider it one which can not constitute a precedent.

Mr. TAULBEE. If my colleague on the committee [Mr. MATSON] desired to ask me a question I have failed to catch its purport.

Mr. MATSON. I desired to ask the gentleman whether he understood the fact I have stated.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not; but in order that I may understand the exact state of the case let me ask the gentleman whether or not the disease with which this claimant is now affected developed gradually or whether the attack was so sudden and severe as to render him incapable of making application from the time the disease appeared?

Mr. MATSON. The history of the disease, as I understand it, and of this sudden attack, is substantiated by some of the most eminent physicians of this city and country I was talking to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] a while ago, and he told me that Dr. Weir Mitchell, of Philadelphia, one of the most eminent physicians in the country, attended this man, and that the history of the disease is thoroughly shown. There is no doubt he had this disease, and all the physicians agree, including an eminent physician of this city, Dr. W. W. Johnston, that this attack of paralysis, or whatever they may choose to call it, was incurred in the service. This insidious disease caused the sudden attack to which the report refers.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Nervous prostration.

Mr. MATSON. There is no doubt about the disease, whatever it may be called, causing this sudden attack. I yielded a reluctant consent and only after I had thoroughly examined the case. I think we ought not to make any precedent to open the question of arrears in any way by special legislation, but I regarded this case, as I said before, as a case exceptional in its character.

Mr. TAULBEE. If I understand the statement of the gentleman correctly, this bill is not intended to give this man any rating other than that he would have been entitled to if he had made his application in time for arrears. With that view of the case, Mr. Speaker, I will move to strike out all that part of the bill which relates to "June 16, 1880," and insert in lieu of it the words "June 30, 1880."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to strike out is not in order, but will be entertained, if there be no objection.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Wait a moment. Of course I am not familiar with the details of the bill, and I do not know why June 16 was put in. We may be making a mistake about this thing.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the words "June 16" be stricken out and the words "June 30" inserted it will give this claimant the benefit of arrears just as the law in reference to total disability provided it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why shall he not have the rerating if he were in the position he would have been under the old law?

Mr. TAULBEE. I am opposed to the present provisions of the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let me read to the gentleman from Kentucky the language of this report made by the committee. It says that—

Thomas S. Hopkins, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Maine Volunteers, seeks relief from the limitations of the arrears of pensions act of March 3, 1879, on the ground that from a time some months prior to the passage of said act down to a period subsequent to the 30th of June, 1880, he was prevented, by reason of the extreme severity of his illness and by mental and physical disabilities, from making an application for arrears in accordance with the provisions of said act.

If he were in that condition why should he not have the benefits of the act of March 3, 1879?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And when he was unable to make application to be rerated?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why should he not have that benefit?

Mr. MCMILLIN. The condition of the proposition is just this: If you pass this act in its present form you give him a rate of pension you do not give to others with similar disability merely by the action of this committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not understand that.

Mr. TAULBEE. But that is true.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. TAULBEE. The chairman of the committee will corroborate it.

Mr. MATSON. A man who is placed upon the pension-roll now because of total helplessness and in a condition to require the attention of another person gets $50 a month. Those in that condition on the 30th of June, 1880, within the rule, are allowed $72 a month.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is the point I was making.

Mr. TAULBEE. By the terms of this bill he will be given a rate as if his claim had been filed and allowed on June 16, 1880; or, in other words, he will get the rate of $72 a month.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Whereas if he were placed on the roll at the time, however meritorious the case might have been, he would be allowed only $50 a month.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. If he had been mentally sound at the time he would have received the higher rating.

Mr. TAULBEE. His application is the question.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is not a question of the degree of disability.

Mr. MATSON. If the claim were filed and the disability existed on the 16th of June that is the rate to which he would have been entitled under the law.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this particular point of law is as new to me as it is to anybody else in this House, or else I certainly should have stated it, since I always try to state the law of my case as well as I can. But under the peculiar circumstances of this case I shall, I think, still urge the House to allow the bill to stand.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, my first understanding of the position taken by the gentleman from Maine was that he did not insist on giving this claimant the benefit of the increased rate of pension, and that it was not the purpose of the bill to increase the rate from $50 to $72 a month. Since then I understand that the gentleman proposes to insist that it shall be passed in its present condition, which, perhaps, would give him a rating of $72, instead of $50, as he now has.

Mr. BAYNE. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. Suppose this man had had the sense to file his application, or somebody had filed it for him, within the time fixed by the law, would he not, with the disability from which he was suffering, have received $50 a month?

Mr. TAULBEE. If this claim had been adjudicated prior to the 16th day of June, 1880, with the present disabilities of the claimant, if they entitle him now to $50 a month it would have given him $72 a month. The existing law would give such disability as I understand him to be laboring under that rating a month.

Mr. BAYNE. But would he not have got $50 a month if the case had been filed for him and adjudicated upon the evidence before the committee as to his disabilities?

Mr. TAULBEE. As to that I am not able to say, because it is generally understood that the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and even the House itself, takes more latitude with reference to existing law, giving pensions and the adjudication of claims, than the Pension Office can take, which is held to a strict enforcement of the law. We may go outside of the legal question in the consideration of the case and take an equitable view of it, while the letter of the law does not confer such authority on the office.

Mr. BAYNE. But if this man with his present disabilities had been granted his pension prior to the 16th day of June, 1880, then he would have been entitled to the increase which was subsequently made by the change in the law to $72 a month?

Mr. TAULBEE. But the evidence before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the persistence of the attorney he had prior to June 16, 1880—the persistence manifested by them in reference to his case—certainly would raise the suspicion that this claim would have been filed within the time had it been considered meritorious or sufficiently so to warrant its filing. If the physical and mental condition of the claimant had been such as to enable him even to have given his consent, or make his mark to his declaration for pension, it undoubtedly would have been filed within the time.

Mr. MATSON. The trouble is that he could not do even that.

Mr. TAULBEE. Do I understand the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to say that from the time of the development of this disease to a pensionable degree he was never thereafter able to sign his declaration for a pension? Do I understand that to be the fact?

Mr. MATSON. I do not say that.

Mr. TAULBEE. For on any other state of the case I shall certainly oppose it.

Mr. MATSON. I can not say that exactly. The disease had been developed prior to the passage of the arrears law and continued until after the expiration of the law. But whether there was absolutely total disability prior to June 16, 1880, or not is another question. There is no doubt of the existence of the disease at the time specified. The man was so helpless that he could not look at an object for a moment without excruciating pain. He was an absolute physical wreck.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand this case aright this soldier was under disabilities on the 16th day of June of the year mentioned and for some time prior such as would give him $72 a month. Now by reason of mental disabilities he was not able to make his application, and in consequence, if the law does not now relieve him, he would be entitled to but $50 per month. What we are asked to do here is to take advantage of a technicality and deprive that soldier of what he would have been entitled to if he had been in the same condition on the said 16th day of June. I do not think the House or the gentleman from Kentucky would wish to do that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The state of facts would exist that he designates if the application had not only been filed but acted upon; whereas if it had been filed and not acted upon in the Department he would not get $50.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But this, gentlemen, allow me to state, was a lawyer of standing, a lawyer of good reputation and influence in his profession, and was present here in Washington——

Mr. RANDALL. Besides that, we ought not to take the pension of a soldier away because of any neglect on the part of his lawyer.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I speak of the man himself as being a lawyer. He was present here and knew the law——

Mr. RANDALL. At any rate I do not think that he was a very good lawyer at this time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But prior to the incurrence of this disability, which happened before the arrears act was passed, it is presumable that he would have taken advantage of the act if his mental condition was such as to enable him to do so. Is it unfair then in undertaking to do justice to him to presume that the claim would have been prosecuted to a successful conclusion by a man who knew the law if his mental capacity had not been impaired? The presumption must be that it would.

Mr. MCMILLIN. He could not have known the limits of the law, because the $72 rate was given by a law that was in a sense retroactive, that is, it was a law passed after a certain number were on the pension-rolls, and it did not apply to any except those on the rolls. It did not apply to applicants at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. By the courtesy of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if it is not a fact that there were many meritorious cases awaiting action that were carried over?

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is true.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Exactly the same weight attaches to those cases that attaches to this case.

Mr. RANDALL. Whenever they come up we can act upon them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What we are called upon to do is to guarantee the efficiency of the Pension Bureau against the effects of a limitation law. We are to guarantee they shall pass upon every case coming within the law. Now Congress fixed a limit. I do not know why it fixed a limit. It had its own reasons at that time. And I would like to see that matter very clearly opened up before I go beyond that limit.

I think it would be unfair to this applicant to deprive him of anything he would have been, beyond all question, entitled to if he had made his application prior to June 16, 1880. But there was no guarantee that he any more than any of the others that had applied prior to that date and did not get $72 a month—there is no guarantee that had he been of sound mind he would have got the $72 a month. We have heard no argument in favor of the proposition that we should take up that entire line of applicants who had their cases in the Pension Bureau and failed to receive the benefit of early and prompt action on the part of the bureau.

Mr. REED, of Maine, addressed the Chair.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think not. I think the Speaker was mistaken in saying so. I had the floor and yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to make a statement when the gentleman from Maine gets through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MATSON addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. MATSON. I was going to demand the regular order; or I was going to suggest to these gentlemen, as I am satisfied no agreement can be arrived at by this discussion, that this bill go over with the previous question ordered on it until next Friday.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think we can settle it to-night.

Mr. MATSON. I am afraid not.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I want to say just a word and will then ask the House to vote. I do not think there is any disposition to embarrass the matter or to prevent having a fair vote. I want to treat the question fairly.

The argument on the other side is this, and I address myself to it just as I find it. As I said to the House before, this peculiarity of the pension law was unknown to me when we commenced the discussion, and consequently I have answered incorrectly at least one of the questions of the gentleman from Kentucky; but of course I answered it as I understood it.

The objection made to this is the following: It is said that this bill gives to this man the same right that he would have had had his case been adjudicated in his favor on June 16, 1880, but that it does not follow that if he had made an application and been sane—it does not follow that he would have had his pension case completed by June 16. That is true. But here is a case peculiar in its character. It is a case unlike any other one that has occurred, and I think it is fair to say unlike anything that is likely to occur.

Here is a man, a lawyer by profession, who knew his rights or would have known his rights had he been in proper condition, who would have presented his claim under the arrears act, and who would undoubtedly, as every member of the committee knows, by his persistence, by the care with which he has attended to this case since he has got partially into a condition to attend to it, although very much disabled, who would doubtless have prosecuted his case with care and alacrity, being here in Washington; and the probabilities are enormous that he would have been on the pension-rolls within thirteen months after the time the application was made. Now this House is asked to put this man in the condition in which he would have been had he been a sound man when the arrears-of-pension act passed.

Those are all the facts in the case. There are no arguments that can ever be made on any such case beyond the fair statement of the facts. Now is it not a fair thing to put this man on the pension-roll as he was on June 16? To me it does seem to be the fair thing.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to inquire how long this man was a practicing attorney after he was discharged from the Army before he was stricken with this disability?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Up to 1878.

Mr. McMILLIN. Thirteen years.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes. It is as I have said and as has been said by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions a very remarkable case of an injury going along for years and finally culminating after this long lapse of time in this very disastrous result.

In the mean time I suppose that neither Mr. Hopkins nor his people had any suspicion that any such thing was coming upon him. It is a peculiar case of the effect of a wound upon the nervous system, but there have been a good many such cases. I have personal knowledge of a case, a young man, a school-mate of mine, who for years filled certain public offices, yet to-day, if I can judge from his letters, he is in very much the same condition as this man, the effect in his case resulting from the severing of the sciatic nerve by a ball.

These things do happen, and we may as well recognize them and deal with such cases fairly and squarely. Here is a man who was capable of earning $5,000 a year, and actually earning it; yet thirteen years after receiving this injury he is stricken by a disability which renders his talents, his mind, his body entirely useless, so that he requires the constant care of an attendant; and the question before the House now is upon treating his case fairly. It seems to me that we ought not to hesitate in such a case to be even a little generous. The presumptions ought to be in his favor; they certainly ought not to be against him. After all, that is just what the case is, a question of presumptions, which Congress has a right to pass upon. It seems to me from all the facts of the case that the presumptions are in favor of the applicant, and I ask the House to pass this bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have the floor, I believe. I was about to ask for the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I trust the gentleman from Maine will not call for the previous question. I wish to make some further observations with reference to this bill, and after so much has been said with regard to the position I have taken, I think it is due to me that I should be permitted to say an additional word.

Mr. REED, of Maine. You shall have an opportunity. I am only desirous of consulting the wishes of the House.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I just want to get at the law of this matter. I understand that if the application was filed before the 16th of June but not acted on until the 30th, the man would draw a pension of $50 a month; but that if it was acted on prior to the 16th of June he would draw a pension of $72 a month.

Mr. BAYNE. That is right.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is the law as it has been developed here.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Now, you propose to grant this man his pension at the rate of $72 a month because he was not in a condition to make his application in time. I merely want to suggest this proposition: If he ought to have this pension because he was not in condition to file his application in time, would it not be proper for us to go back and raise the pensions of men who did file their applications but never had them acted upon? Would not that be an act of justice to those men?

Mr. REED, of Maine. There might be some cases where that ought to be done, and there might be cases where it ought not to be done. Each case would depend on its own merits. I yield now to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, before I proceed to answer what has been said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], I wish to place myself right before the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. He seems to have understood me to take the position that this applicant would not be entitled to the benefit of the arrears of pension act by reason of insanity. Now, I have made no such statement as that; I have taken no such position; nor have I said anything that could be reasonably construed as meaning that. The truth is that the law itself which provided for the payment of arrears of pension also provided that in any case where mental disability existed, such as to render the claimant incapable of making his application and filing it in the Pension Office prior to June 30, 1880, he should not, in consequence of his mental disability, be deprived of the benefit of that law.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman states that matter a little inaccurately. The language of the statute is "insane persons." It does not apply to mental incapacity.

Mr. TAULBEE. I accept the gentleman's correction. But the word "insane" is the word used by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of that law—and such, I understand, is the construction placed upon it by the Department—was that where any mental disability existed rendering the party incapable of filing his application, the benefit of arrears should extend to him. This is not a case of that kind. If it were, there would be no necessity of this special bill, because the law as it now stands upon the statute-book would extend the benefit of arrears to this claimant, even though his application had not been filed until to-day. I am contending for no such principle. I am not, upon any such argument, asking that this bill shall not pass. I do not stand upon that ground, and need not stand upon it.

In reference to the rerating proposed in this bill, each member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions who is now present will bear witness—and I know I do not betray any confidence of the committee by this statement—that when the attorney for this claimant appeared before the committee I put to him the question whether or not this bill was intended to rerate this pension, and his statement was that it was not so intended. The bill passed the committee with the understanding in my mind that it was not to increase the rate of this pension from $50 to $72 per month. I do not attribute any bad faith to this claimant. I know nothing about him except as I have learned his history in the progress of this case.

Mr. MATSON. My friend from Kentucky will permit me to say that the gentlemen who appeared before the committee in this case were not the "attorneys" of this man.

Mr. TAULBEE. I understand that; I withdraw the remark.

Mr. MATSON. They were ex-confederate soldiers, both of them.

Mr. TAULBEE. They were attorneys and citizens of Washington, friends of this pension bill, and they appeared before our committee to advocate its passage. But that matter does not affect the state of the case.

In the first place, I take the ground that there is nothing in the record of this case—and I accord to the testimony the very highest credit—that should lead a fair mind to conclude that this claimant could not have made his application after the development of his disability to a pensionable degree in time to avail himself of the benefit not only of the arrears but of the increase of rate from $50 to $72 per month. And I can see no good reason why this case should be placed on a different footing from many hundreds of cases where claimants were not acquainted with the law—lived in rural parts of the country, away from county towns, did not know their rights—and by reason of this ignorance were deprived of the benefit of the law. Upon this ground I say the bill ought not to pass; and in any event the amendment which I have presented ought to be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether in my brief statement of what I believed to be the point at issue in this case I misstated the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky or not. I now understand him to say he did not argue in that direction; yet his amendment would have the effect of reducing the amount intended to be given this pensioner from $72 to $50 per month.

I care not whether the terms of the law refer to "insane persons" or "persons mentally disabled." The result is the same. I desire by the enactment of this bill to so modify the existing law that this claimant shall not suffer by reason of any failure to make application between the 16th and the 30th of June of the year stated. The effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky would be to make him suffer; and that I desire to avoid. I had no intention of misstating in the least degree the position of the gentleman from Kentucky. I do not care whether his argument was in that direction or whether he rests upon the language of the existing law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania state how many cases were on file in the Pension Bureau prior to June 16 which were not acted upon?

Mr. RANDALL. Of course I can not state the number with any accuracy. I might guess at it. But I want every case of this character to stand upon its own merits.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Exactly.

Mr. RANDALL. As each case comes up let us decide it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What are the merits of this case? In this instance we propose to give effect to the assumption that the application, if made in season, would have been favorably acted upon. I believe in putting this applicant exactly where he could have put himself if he had been of sound mind.

Mr. RANDALL. We propose still to leave to the Commissioner the discretion to determine the extent of the disability.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is another question. Now, we assume that a man of intelligence here upon the ground would have been able to obtain favorable action at the Pension Bureau. If we assume this for the most favorably situated and the most efficient we should have very poor ground, as a matter of justice, for not assuming it in behalf of those not so able and who were more remote from the point of action than this applicant was. Now, to what extent this opens up legislation we are not told. The gentleman from Tennessee, who is quite conversant with this business, states that he thinks a large number of cases which were on file were not acted on. In that view I think it would be dangerous to give effect to an assumption that this case would have been acted on.

Mr. BAYNE. There could not have been many of those cases.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I call the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to inquire whether my amendment will be voted upon.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I so understand; I have admitted it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question be ordered, the first question will be upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish the amendment to be understood before it is voted on. My motion proposes to strike out that part of the bill relating to rerating, and the date, June 16, 1880. If the Clerk will read the bill I will indicate the amendment.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to strike out that part of the bill which relates to June 16, 1880, and in lieu thereof to insert "June 30, 1880."

The previous question was ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were ayes 26.

Mr. TAULBEE. No further count is asked for.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the several votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARGARET D. MARCHAND.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (S. 226) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchand.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I understand every one of these bills has been passed, with three exceptions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only three more bills remain to be acted on.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I merely wish to say this, Mr. Speaker: I made objection here because I believe the principle involved is wrong. I am not going to make a speech, but I believe it to be injustice to the persons who are now needing pensions and not able to get them. I believe it to be an injustice to thousands in this country asking to be pensioned and who can not get pensions, because we are told it is piling up the aggregate of pensions. When these men knock at our door and ask for pensions that aggregate is flung in their faces. That aggregate is brought up, and it is said we have such an aggregate of pensions, amounting to millions of dollars, we can not afford to grant any more. I have been asked to withdraw my objections, and as I do not wish to stand in the way as an obstruction, I am willing to do so. I wish to say, however, this much before doing so, that every man who votes for this class of pensions is doing injustice to the poor men and women who are unable to get their pensions. I withdraw my objection at the request of gentlemen here.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, were severally taken up and ordered to a third reading; and they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 973) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah P. McKean, of Marion, Linn County, Iowa; and

A bill (S. 2223) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. De Krafft.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the several votes by which the bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Gentlemen kindly consented to allow me to submit some remarks this evening, but as the hour is late I am unwilling to detain gentlemen, and therefore ask the same permission be extended to me for next Friday evening.

Mr. MORRILL. After the regular pension business has been disposed of.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BENNETT: Petition of colored citizens of Mecklenburgh County, North Carolina, in reference to migration to Africa—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BUNNELL: Petition of citizens of Franklin, Bradford County, Pennsylvania, praying for a law to prevent adulteration and counterfeiting of food products, especially butter—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: Petition of Grange No. 619, of Pennsylvania, asking such legislation as will suppress the manufacture and sale of all imitation dairy products—to the same committee.

By Mr. CANDLER: Petition of Susan Davis, of Lumpkin County; and of Jane A. Head, daughter of Elizabeth Baugh, deceased, of Gwinnett County, Georgia, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of Elizabeth Baugh, of Gwinnett County, and of Susan Davis, of Lumpkin County, Georgia—to the same committee.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Petition of physicians of Saulte Ste. Marie, Mich., asking increased compensation for hospital stewards, United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of hospital stewards, United States Army, for same—to the same committee.

Also, petition of James J. Ayers, and others, citizens of Austin, Mich., asking for pension legislation recommended by Grand Army of the Republic—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DIBBLE: Papers relating to the claim of Rudolph Labriger—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of the Board of Trade and Transportation of New York, urging the issuance of one and two dollar notes—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, memorial of the Produce Exchange of Denver, Colo., against taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of John E. Carr and 18 others, citizens of New Hampshire, and of Newton Bell and 12 others, citizens of Saint Albans, Vt., for a tax on oleomargarine—to the same committee.

By Mr. T. D. JOHNSTON: Petition of colored citizens of Buncombe County, North Carolina, asking to be sent to Liberia—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. LORE: Petition of E. Y. Richardson and 40 others, citizens of Laurel, Del., for the redemption of the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. LYMAN: Papers and proofs to accompany House bill 9004, for the relief of Caroline P. Bolton—to the Committtte on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MATSON: Petition of Thomas A. Prewitt and 40 others, citizens of Hendricks County, Indiana, asking that a special act be passed granting a pension to Anna Grave—to the same committee.

By Mr. McMILLIN: Papers relating to the claim of Greenberry Williams, of Sumner County, Tennessee—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Papers relating to the claims of Morgan Layton, of Emanuel M. Hoover, of Curtis Yates, of Joseph Click, of Solomon Beery, of Samuel H. Wampler, and of William K. Abbott, of Rockingham County; of Sarah Ambrose, of Samuel Fetzer, of Harrison Fauber, of Samuel Roller, and of John T. Hottel, of Shenandoah County; of Harriet Walter, of Thomas W. Russell, and of John Sams, of Virginia—to the same committee.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia favoring the enlargement of the powers of the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. PERRY: Petition of James L. Roane, of Richland County, South Carolina, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of James L. Roane, of Richland County, South Carolina—to the same committee.

By Mr. SENEY: Protest of Pittsburgh Grain and Flour Exchange, of Denver Produce Exchange, and of Atchison Board of Trade, against taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also papers of John H. Beall, for taxing oleomargarine—to the same committee.

Also, paper of J. Twing Brooks, favoring the amendment of section 5258 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER: Petition of the New England Shoe and Leather Association for the issuance of one and two dollar bills—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. STRAIT: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Saint Paul, Minn., protesting against the building of low bridges across the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Missouri River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WAKEFIELD: Petition of 105 citizens of Martin County, of 17 citizens of Watonwan County, and of 88 citizens of Blue Earth County, Minnesota, asking for action of Congress to determine the true condition of certain lands in that State alleged to have been improperly certified by the Interior Department to the Saint Paul and Sioux City and the Southern Minnesota Railroad Companies—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, resolution of the Saint Paul Chamber of Commerce condemning low bridges across the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Missouri River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of citizens of Alabama for the passage of the educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

The following petition, urging the adoption of the bill placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, taxing the same 10 cents per pound, and urging the adoption of such effective measures as will save the dairy interests from ruin and protect consumers of butter from fraud and imposition, was presented, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture:

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of certain citizens of Alexandria and Fairfax Counties, Virginia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 29, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONSULAR REPORTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, accompanying the report of consuls of the United States, on the trade and commerce of foreign countries.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 28, 1886.

The SPEAKER. Unless ordered by the House the Chair will not direct the reports themselves to be printed at present.

STATUE OF LIBERTY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with inclosures, an estimate from the Secretary of State of the expense of inaugurating the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World;" which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH D. RIDDLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General inclosing the account of Joseph D. Riddle, with accompanying papers, for legal services for defending persons under appointment by the United States circuit judge of the district of California; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

LAWS OF DAKOTA TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies, and to authorize and empower the Legislative Assembly of said Territory to pass such general laws; returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Territories, I move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the request for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the managers on the part of the House during the day.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. MATSON, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MORRILL, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. JAMES, for three days.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 1532, to regulate interstate commerce, now on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having been reported back from the Committee on Commerce, be considered also under the special order when the House bill to regulate interstate commerce shall be called up.

Mr. SPRINGER. The request of the gentleman is that the Senate bill be also included in that order?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is that bill?

The SPEAKER. It is the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

Mr. DUNHAM. But it is not upon the same Calendar.

The SPEAKER. No; because the Senate bill proposes a commission, and is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but the fact that they are on different Calendars makes no difference.

Mr. DUNHAM. We have not both of those bills here, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. They are here.

Mr. DUNHAM. I shall have to object for the present at least.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois supposed the Senate bill was not on the Calendar. I have explained to him the situation, and that the object was to consider it with the House bill, to which I understand he is willing to withdraw his objection.

Mr. DUNHAM. I shall withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Without further objection the order requested by the gentleman from Texas will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

MAILING OF OBSCENE MATTER.

Mr. MERRIMAN, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7544) to amend section 3893 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relative to the transmission of obscene matter through the mails; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 290) for the relief of Davidson Dickson and others; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Speaker, to-day was set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, but of course it is impossible to get to-day for that purpose. I ask unanimous consent therefore that so much of the order setting apart to-day for the consideration of such business be continued over and apply to June 15.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If objection is made to continuing that order until the date fixed, is not the Committee on Indian Affairs entitled to a date hereafter anyhow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. This day was specifically set apart, and no other day, for the business reported from that committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to know what business is to be called up and what restrictions are made as to other orders?

Mr. HOLMAN. The reservation of other business should certainly be made before the order is made.

Mr. WELLBORN. Of course the same order will prevail which excepts appropriation and revenue bills, reports from the Committee on Public Lands, and prior orders.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the order requested by the gentleman from Texas will be made.

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. HATCH was then agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee when it rose yesterday had reached the eighth section. The Clerk will report the pending amendment, offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "two;" so that it will read:

"That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 2 cents per pound."

Mr. HATCH. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a statement in reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN], who I regret is not in his seat, and one or two telegrams, that have been read from the Clerk's desk, from certain Knights of Labor in Chicago and Milwaukee. I ask that the telegram which I send to the desk may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 28, 1886.

Acting under instructions from the General Assembly of the Knights of Labor,

I desire to state that no person whatever is authorized to speak for this organization, either in the affirmative or negative, upon the question of the regulation of the sale of oleomargarine now pending before Congress. Please bring this to the attention of the proper committees.

T. V. POWDERLY,
G. M. W., K. of L.

HON. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of House Reps., W.

[Applause.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I have been requested by several gentlemen to state authoritatively the construction placed by the Committee on Agriculture on the effect of the second section of this bill, which I will read.

Mr. PARKER. I desire to call the attention of the House to the importance of the statement now being made by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the committee to be in order.

Mr. HATCH. The second section reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine," namely: All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all mixtures and compounds of oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral: all lard extracts and tallow extracts; and all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef fat, suet, lard, lard oil, vegetable oil, annotto, and other coloring matter, intestinal fat, and offal fat made in imitation or semblance of butter, or calculated or intended to be used as butter or for butter.

I want to state that the two lines I have emphasized in reading, the last two lines of this section, apply to and interpret each and every single word in the section that I have read. I did not suppose there was a misapprehension existing on the part of any gentleman in this House as to the proper interpretation of this section. If gentlemen had been present at the evening session when members of the committee fully explained this bill there would have been no question about it. According to the interpretation of that section, as interpreted not only by the Committee on Agriculture but by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who submitted it to the law officer of that Department, who has revised every single word and comma in it, it means this, and nothing but this, that the mixture of any two or more of these compounds into a substance to be colored and flavored and packed and sold as butter is to be taxed under this bill 10 cents a pound; but if lard and cotton-seed oil are mixed together, if lard and tallow and cotton-seed oil are mixed together, if any other two or more of these substances are mixed, placed on the market, and sold for what they are, in good faith and in fact, and not colored and flavored as an imitation and fraud upon butter, they are not liable to the tax under this section, and no reasonable construction of that kind can be placed on that section or the bill as an entirety.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri a question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why not insert a proviso to make it clear that that is the construction? The House has a right to criticise the language of the bill as well as the law officers of the Department. The gentleman would avoid all trouble by inserting a proviso giving the construction which he indicates.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia there is no proviso that can be added to that section that will make it any plainer to the law officers of the Government who will have to execute the law than as it stands in the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to say this: Suppose his opinion is correct, but the House should differ with him, is it not better to make it clearer to other gentlemen who do not see it so plainly as he does?

Mr. HATCH. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia, but I will say to him that such products are sold upon the market now every day, and it is known to every commercial man in the United States and to every produce exchange in the United States which handles lard at all, that more than 75 per cent. of the hog's lard now put upon the market and sold as lard is adulterated with cotton-seed oil and cheaper fats.

Mr. DUNN. Cotton-seed oil is the best lard.

Mr. HATCH. That is the opinion of the gentleman from Arkansas, and I will take no issue with him as to his taste. If he prefers cotton-seed oil he can have it and mix it in any quantities he chooses to suit himself.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. What is the pending motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAMMOND. I was not in the Hall when that motion was made.

Mr. HATCH. I moved to strike out the last word merely to give me an opportunity to make this statement.

Mr. LONG. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to me for a question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONG. I notice that the language of the section is, "or intended to be used as butter or for butter." My question is whether it is not desirable to strike out the words "or for butter." To be used "for butter" would imply to be used instead of butter, which I do not think is the meaning of the gentleman.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Massachusetts will note the fact that the expression is used in connection with the language "made in imitation or semblance of butter." The language is:

Made in imitation or semblance of butter, or calculated or intended to be used as butter or for butter.

Let me say further to the gentleman that in the construction of that sentence the language of the laws of more than a dozen States and the decisions of the higher courts of the State of New York, as far as they have interpreted the New York State law on this subject, have all been thoroughly discussed and considered by the Committee on Agriculture, and the language here used is language that has already been passed upon by the highest State tribunals in the land.

Mr. LONG. But when you say that this is to be taxed if used "for" butter, that means when it is used instead of butter.

Mr. HATCH. I will say further to the gentleman that the testimony before our committee establishes beyond any sort of controversy the fact that if these gentlemen are honest, if they simply mean to manufacture a wholesome food product, all they have to do is to strip it of the fraudulent disguise which it now wears and under which they attempt to palm it off on people for butter.

Mr. LONG. The bill makes this article oleomargarine subject to a tax in two cases: first, if it is used "as" butter; second, if it is used "for" butter.

Mr. MILLS. In other words, the gentleman proposes to make the raw material free, but to tax the finished product. It is simply carrying out in this case the general theory of my friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture whether, in order to remove all doubt upon the subject, he will not consent to an amendment to the second section of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has expired. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to renew the formal amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I renew the amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to go back, by unanimous consent, to the second section, and add a proviso to the effect that it is not designed by this bill to tax oleomargarine or any of these other products enumerated in the bill when they are marked as such. Will the chairman of the committee consent to that?

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman will frame his proviso in writing and submit it to me I will take it into consideration and lay it before the committee. The gentleman knows that having passed the second section we can not return to it unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I know that; but if the committee mean to be fair, and mean the House to understand what they do by this bill, all they have to do is to agree to such an amendment.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman will reduce his proviso to writing we will take it into consideration. Of course I can not gather its effect with any accuracy from a mere statement here in this colloquy.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not undertake to give the language of the proviso. I simply suggest that a proviso be added to the second section to the effect that it is not intended by this bill to tax oleomargarine when it is sold as what it is not—that is, as "butter."

Mr. HATCH. "Tax oleomargarine"—"oleomargarine" is now manufactured and sold in imitation of butter, and one of the objects of this bill is to define what that article is and to tax it.

Mr. REAGAN. But if the gentleman desires to make the meaning of the bill plain he sees very well that he can make it plain in the way I have suggested.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] correctly, he is not willing that any change shall be made in the bill.

Several members addressed the Chair.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The confusion is so great that it is impossible for us to make progress. No one seems to understand who is entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The House will be in order.

Mr. REAGAN. The time that was allowed to me I turn over to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] a question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I move to strike out the last word. I, for one, thank the Committee on Agriculture for the new light which they have imparted to the House this morning in regard to this bill, for it certainly is in direct conflict with and contradiction of the arguments that have heretofore been made by the advocates of the bill. I assume, Mr. Chairman, that the advocates of this bill are pressing its passage in good faith, and I trust that the gentlemen who favor it will concede the same good faith to those who oppose this measure upon what they believe to be grounds of public policy and constitutional inhibition.

Assuming, sir, that this bill is not intended to blot out any wholesome article of food, assuming the fact, which can not be successfully contraverted, that the article known as oleomargarine when made properly is a wholesome, cheap article of food which should not be taxed out of existence, I am not here to advocate or excuse the perpetration of a fraud by the manufacturers of oleomargarine or by the manufacturers of any other product in this country, and I had prepared, before the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture took the floor, an amendment which I think will meet the view expressed by him. The amendment protects the honest manufacturer and dealer in oleomargarine, which the chairman does not intend to reach under this bill. It is in the line of the admission that the gentleman has just made, only that it goes further against the manufacturers of oleomargarine than he claims that he contends for.

I will now read the proviso for the information of the committee, and give notice that at the proper time I shall offer it, either at the conclusion of the eighth section or at the conclusion of the bill. I read:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to the manufacture, sale, or offer for sale of any substance known as oleomargarine, which shall be shown, before the same is sold or offered for sale, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations as he may adopt, to be wholesome as an article of food and what it purports to be, as shown by the marks and brands thereon.

And further, that the constituent elements thereof, separately and combined, are in no way deleterious to health: And provided further, That said substance known as oleomargarine shall be put in packages marked and branded as provided in this act. Any manufacturer, wholesale or retail dealer, or other person who shall knowingly manufacture, sell, or offer for sale any such substance as oleomargarine for butter, or as butter, or without the same being put in packages plainly marked and branded as in this act provided, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Now, gentlemen, if it is the purpose to protect a wholesome article of food which is branded and marked—if it is the purpose not to crush out an industry which is proper and honest (and I shall not accuse any gentleman of bad faith in this matter), then it seems to me that this provision affords full protection. It protects the manufacturer, the wholesale and the retail dealer, who sells the marked article for just what it purports to be; it requires that the article shall thus be sold; and further, the burden of proof is thrown upon the manufacturer or dealer to show that the article as a compound, as well as every constituent element entering into its composition, is healthful; that there is nothing contained in the article which can be injurious to the health of the consumer. It is an absolute protection against fraud either in the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, upon hearing the explanation of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], but before I had re-examined the bill, I was tempted to withdraw my amendment; but on examination of the eighth section I find that the construction of the gentleman from Missouri is not correct. The second section declares—

That for the purposes of this act certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine."

The eighth section declares—

That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof.

Now the eighth section does not declare that only the imitation article shall be taxed 10 cents, but it declares expressly that all oleomargarine shall be so taxed.

Mr. CANNON. My colleague will allow me to say that the second section is the dictionary section, defining what shall be considered oleomargarine under this act; and when throughout the bill oleomargarine is mentioned, the reference is to oleomargarine as defined in the second section.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am afraid that the construction placed on this bill by my colleague [Mr. CANNON] is not correct. Oleomargarine is a well-known article; its definition is understood. It is an article composed of certain ingredients. The name is common and well understood. Now, I have an apprehension that under the eighth section of this bill the courts will hold that no oleomargarine can be manufactured and sold without paying a tax of 10 cents, although it may be sold under its true name and with full knowledge by the purchaser of its true character. For this reason I think the section should be amended by the addition of some such proviso as has been indicated by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HENLEY. To obviate the gentleman's objection the eighth section could be amended by inserting the words "oleomargarine as defined by the second section of this act."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Perhaps some such amendment as that might reach the difficulty.

Mr. HENLEY. Three or four words would do it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I only make the point that unless there be some amendment of this character confusion may result, and perhaps all oleomargarine will be taxed.

But, Mr. Chairman, even if this amendment be adopted, I still maintain there is no need for so large a tax as 10 cents per pound; we should content ourselves with imposing a tax of 2 cents per pound; and therefore I shall insist on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Chair will consider the formal amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I desire the Chair to take notice that when the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] gets through I wish to be heard in opposition to striking out the last word. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will take notice of the gentleman's announcement.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I desired last evening to take the floor to answer the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH]. That gentleman said:

It has been proclaimed by those who speak for the agricultural interests of the country—and I represent this with other interests—that all that is desired in this matter is such a law as will place the manufacture of oleomargarine separate and apart from the manufacture of butter, &c.

Now, there is not a man on this floor who does not know that a tax of 2 cents is ample and more than ample to bring about that result, &c.

Now, we on this side are for protecting American industries against every kind of foreign competition.

And yet the gentleman pleads the cause of less than five hundred men who must be convicted of counterfeiting a staple article of production, of commerce, and of consumption before this bill can touch them, and pleads against the interests of four or five million of the farmers of our country.

He pleads against the collection of sixteen or eighteen millions of revenue to be derived from a business that can well afford to pay it, and still enter the lists and maintain itself as the producer of regular butter.

The "specter of free trade may stalk in every town and village in this country within five years," but it will haunt the bedside of those who would justify "free trade" in counterfeit money or butter rather than the slumbers of those who would place under the ban of the law a sham, a cheat, and a false pretense.

When the specter comes, if it does come, we, who would shield the consumer and producer of a healthy article of food, can say:

Thou canst not say I did it: never shake
Thy gory locks at me.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the eighth section, now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Wisconsin to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, there have been a half dozen speeches made here in favor of striking out the last word, and I have never yet heard one in opposition to that motion; now, I want to be heard on that. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend lines 1 and 2 of section 8 so as to read:

"That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured or sold as butter there shall be assessed and collected a tax."

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to support this bill if it be amended in proper way. As I understand the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, he does not desire to impose this tax except upon oleomargarine when sold as butter; and the purport and meaning of my amendment is to impose the tax of 10 cents per pound, as provided in the bill, upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold as butter.

Now, sir, all legislative power, as I understand it, under the Constitution is vested in Congress; and it is fair and just to the Committee on Agriculture to assume that when they report a bill they desire to benefit this country in some shape or manner. This bill proposes, first, to raise revenue. Its object seems to me, in its present form at least, to tax an industry out of existence. As I understand it, 200,000,000 pounds of oleomargarine were manufactured last year. If you impose a tax of 10 cents per pound upon oleomargarine it does make a big revenue, amounting, say, to some $20,000,000. Now, it has been shown here, and I will not go into the figures, that at present there is no necessity for increasing the revenue tax; that, in fact, we had last year nearly $50,000,000 of surplus.

If there be no necessity for increasing the revenue tax why pass a bill for that purpose?

I call attention to the next point in the brief time that I have; that is, whether we can afford to tax an industry out of existence. The manufacture of oleomargarine has become a great industry in this country. It has been shown here, and it can be proven, that the ingredients of oleomargarine, where it is an honest product, are healthful, and that, in fact, nearly all of them are used upon the tables of many of our best people. It can also be shown that oleomargarine has been to a certain extent a benefit to the people, for it has reduced the price of that kind of food. It is also a benefit to those who raise cattle and hogs, for cattle and hogs are used in the manufacture of oleomargarine; and furthermore, Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of this Congress to encourage, as far as possible, all healthful and honest industries; and I protest against anything that seeks to strike down any leading industry in this country. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture says he does not desire to impose a tax except upon oleomargarine when manufactured and sold as butter.

If that is his meaning it ought to be made clear in the bill, and the eighth section, now under consideration, is the proper section in which to incorporate such an amendment. I offer the amendment, that we may put it in the bill so as not to permit a construction to be given to the bill which will not be warranted hereafter. At a future time it may be that the courts of this country will not construe the bill as the gentleman who is now the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture does; and in order that its purpose and effect may be clearly understood we ought to perfect it now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I desire to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that my statement was plain and frank and intended in good faith to the House, and that I do not desire him to put any construction upon what I said as favoring this amendment to the eighth section if it is not covered by the language of my own.

Now, sir, to place the Committee on Agriculture properly before the Committee of the Whole I ask unanimous consent that in line 12 of the second section of the bill there may be added after the word "or," where it occurs before the word "calculated," the words "so made;" and in line 13 strike out the word "used" and insert the word "sold;" so as to read:

Made in imitation or semblance of butter, or, when so made, calculated or intended to be sold as butter or for butter.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not see any material difference between that amendment and my own.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to state then that if it is made as oleomargarine and sold as oleomargarine, not as butter, it will not come within the operation of this restriction?

Mr. HATCH. I think the language I have used is perfectly plain and intelligible.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Perhaps the gentleman had better restate it.

Mr. HATCH. I stated plainly and distinctly that the mere branding it as "oleomargarine" or "butterine" would not take it out of the operation of the law; but if manufactured out of tallow and lard or tallow and cotton-seed oil, or all three, making a mixture of tallow, lard, and cotton-seed oil, it is not within the provisions of the bill. But whenever they use the fraudulent stamp of "oleomargarine" upon the package that is made in imitation of butter, and intended to be sold as butter, it does come within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me a question right there?

Mr. HATCH. With pleasure.

Mr. BLOUNT. Suppose the product is made up of these various elements, lard, tallow, &c., as the gentleman has described, and it is so branded, but has coloring matter making it similar to butter, is it then taxable?

Mr. HATCH. With coloring matter similar to butter?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HATCH. Unquestionably.

Mr. BLOUNT. Although there is a brand disclosing the component parts of it?

Mr. HATCH. Unquestionably; because it is simply a new name of a counterfeit.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Has the Chair submitted any proposition to the committee for objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not?

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to make the amendment to section 2 which I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to return to section 2 of the bill for the purpose of enabling him to offer the amendment which the Clerk will read.

Mr. BEACH. I will object.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition must be stated before the gentleman's objection can be entertained.

Mr. BEACH. It has been stated.

Mr. HAMMOND. Let the RECORD show it.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 2, line 12, after the word "or," where it occurs the second time, insert "when so made;" and in line 13 strike out the word "used" and insert "sold;" so that it will read:

"Made in imitation or semblance of butter, or when so made calculated or intended to be sold as butter or for butter."

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment may be adopted.

Mr. BEACH. Unless there is an opportunity of further amendment of the section, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that section 2 be amended as indicated.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Regarding this proposed amendment as only adding further deception to the original fraud of this bill, I object to it.

Several members called for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] is not properly an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]. That the matter may be better understood, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. TOWNSHEND, as follows:

In section 8, line 3, strike out "ten" and insert "two;" so that it will read:

"That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 2 cents per pound."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky when this amendment is disposed of.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York can reserve the point of order to be made when the amendment is offered.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to inquire whether the amendment just read has not been once voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. Several amendments to the amendment have been voted upon. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] is recognized.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLS. It is understood that the time for debate should be about equally divided between those opposing and those favoring a measure. It seems to me all the speaking this morning has been in favor of the bill. One gentleman has spoken against it and all the rest for it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible for the Chair, while these amendments are pending, to know whether gentlemen rising to speak favor the bill or not.

Mr. MILLS. I oppose it and would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he can not be accused of partiality in this matter. He now recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], who has not been heretofore recognized in the general or the five-minute debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope order will be preserved that the gentleman from New Jersey may be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have thus far voted with the Committee on Agriculture. I am in favor of the passage of this bill provided it does not make the taxation excessive. I consider the license tax already imposed too high, but even with that provision in it I am in favor of the bill. But, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is not adopted I shall be compelled to vote against the passage of this bill, and I hope the majority of this House will vote against it; for no matter what gentlemen in favor of the passage of the bill may say, it will have the tendency of driving out of existence a legitimate industry, and it will have the tendency of raising by legislation the price of butter. While butter is now being sold and brought into the New York market at 16½ cents a pound, we consumers have to pay at this present time from 30 to 40 cents a pound. If this bill passes in its present shape it imposes a tax of 10 cents on oleomargarine. The result must be that the price of butter will go up. This result must, I think, be conceded by all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I give notice to the gentlemen who are in favor of the passage of this bill—and I am in favor of it so far as its object is to cause oleomargarine to be sold for what it is—that if they reject the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois I shall be compelled, although a friend of the bill, to vote against it.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the few gentlemen who have been opposing this bill will not be misled by a mistake as to the character of the explanation which has been made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. Gentlemen must understand that this bill came into the House for a purpose and that purpose has not been abandoned. That purpose is to broaden the doctrine of protection and to adopt it in the United States as between different classes of industry. It has so been proclaimed this morning on the other side of this House. When the original doctrine of protection was proclaimed in this country it was proclaimed as a national necessity.

It was said that we must have protection to certain industries to foster and build them up in order that we might have power to defend ourselves against foreign nations; that we might become involved in war, and therefore it was necessary that we should build up some great institutions that could make cannon, that could make shot and shell, that could manufacture clothing and implements of war, so that we might be self-sustaining in case of a conflict with a foreign power. In those days the whole doctrine of protection lay close to the national safety. It was based upon Americanism, and on that ground it was deemed necessary to discriminate in favor of American industries against foreign industries. But, sir, that is not the doctrine that is proclaimed here to-day—the doctrine of discriminating as between two American industries. That simply means spoliation of one to build up another. The doctrine of our fathers was that this is a Government under which every man is equal.

Each one of our constituents is a sovereign, and a sovereign who has no subjects. We, as their representatives, come here to make equal laws, laws that shall fall, like the rains of heaven, equally upon all, and our Constitution has been formed in that spirit. "Equal rights to all men, exclusive privileges to none," is the cardinal truth that underlies the whole of our American institutions. And yet, upon this floor it is proclaimed this morning that this bill is designed to protect the dairy interest. Against what? "Protection" when used in its economic sense means to protect one industry against the competition of another industry. The word is not used there as it is used in the criminal or the civil laws in other respects, meaning to protect one against the wrong of another; in business it means to give one an exclusive privilege against the competition of another.

Gentlemen, if you intend to go into that business in this country you have got to uproot all the institutions created by your Constitution, and announce to the people of the United States that this Congress is ready, at the bidding of any powerful class in the land, to break down another class that is less powerful. That is the doctrine, and it is a new departure in American politics. If you adopt it, every constitutional guarantee is worthless to you, whether it be of life, of liberty, or of property. Whenever a powerful interest comes here and asks that it shall be "protected" against the competition of another interest, the one that is stronger will devour the one that is weaker.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, although I have the honor of representing a district as largely interested in the results of this bill as any other in the country, I have heretofore abstained from occupying any time by talking upon the floor. I have felt it a privilege and a duty to follow the admirable example of the chairman of the committee that has presented this bill, in acting in such a manner as to avoid delay and hasten a vote. It seems to me that this bill should have passed before this time. The views of those thinking as I do have not needed expression by me, as our position has been fully, concisely, and felicitously stated by our spokesman, my friend and colleague from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

As the discussion is to go on I will take a part in it.

As to the suggestion made a while ago, that some new light has been given this morning in regard to this measure by the explanation of the force of the second section made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], that is an error on the part of gentlemen who have not studied this bill or the other bills that have been introduced on the same subject. Upon the 15th of February last a bill was introduced involving, in principle, precisely the idea involved in this second section, the idea of taxing the fraud, taxing the imitation, taxing the counterfeit, and leaving the honest commodity free, and of so guiding the language of the section that it should not run counter to the judgment of the court in the case of The People vs. Marx, decided in the State of New York, or in any other of the decided cases.

Now, as to the question of the amendment which has been presented here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] taken in connection with that offered by Mr. MCCREARY to limit the meaning and scope of the "oleomargarine" as named and taxed 10 cents per pound by section 8. One gentleman has indicated this morning that he is unwilling to support the bill unless the amendment is adopted. It will be noticed that the second section of this bill says that "for the purposes of this act" certain manufactures shall be called oleomargarine. For what purposes of this act? For all the purposes of this act; for every section and every clause of this act "oleomargarine" is what is described in section 2. Therefore, when you come to section 8, and say that "upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold or removed" there shall be assessed and collected a tax of 10 cents per pound, what oleomargarine is meant? Not something that may happen to be in the market, not something that is spoken of in the books, but the "oleomargarine" defined in section 2 of the bill as "oleomargarine" "for the purposes of this act." It is that and nothing else. Therefore it is the oleomargarine taxed as an imitation, taxed as a fraud, taxed as a thing intended to be palmed off as butter, to which this tax of 10 cents a pound applies; and I challenge any lawyer who will look at the matter closely and give it the benefit of his thought to find any other reasonable construction of the provisions of the bill. Hence the amendment is unnecessary and might prove injurious.

Now it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we have reached the crisis of this bill. If the bill can be passed with this tax of 10 cents per pound upon the imitation, the fraud, we shall have done what we intended to do and what no man—I am not criticising any gentleman personally—but I say we shall have reached a result which no man who aims at an honest result can object to. First, we ask for revenue; second, we ask for protection to the dairymen; third, we ask for protection to the consumer; fourth, we ask for power to mark and label a fraud. The money is needed for use. It is needed to pay pensions. It is needed to rebuild our Navy. As Mr. Tilden lately suggested, it is needed to fortify our coasts. In short, it is needed for all the purposes of government.

But gentlemen deny the right to tax. Naturally we are sent back to original principles, and hence again quote section 8 of Article I of the Constitution:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

It is not necessary to discuss the relation, construction, or bearing of the "general-welfare" clause. Ample powers are granted us outside of that clause.

In Dobbins vs. Erie County (16 Peters, 447), the court, by Mr. Justice Wayne, says:

> Taxation is a sacred right, essential to the existence of government—an incident of sovereignty.

Acting under the Constitution and in pursuance of this sacred right we propose, in an orderly procedure and by legal methods in accordance with time-honored and successful precedents, to lay and collect upon this commodity named in this bill and described as oleomargarine the tax provided; and upon similar grounds and in a similar manner to tax the manufacturers thereof and those who sell the same.

It being granted that some revenue is necessary for the purposes of the Government under the language of the Constitution, Congress has the sole power of deciding what property shall be taxed to raise this revenue, subject only to the rule that the tax shall operate with the same effect upon the subject of taxation wherever found in the United States. Suppose we need all of the revenue we now have and something more, how shall we derive it? We may select our subjects of taxation—and we tax for revenue, not for revenue only, but under the Constitution for revenue—we select oleomargarine as the subject, and no man can complain.

It has been held legal to tax playing-cards, proprietary medicines, perfumery, distilled spirits, tobacco and cigars, and other classes of property. Why is oleomargarine sacred?

Why may we tax manufactured whisky and not tax manufactured imitation butter? The right to tax involves the right of selection. We have the right to select whisky, or tobacco, or oleomargarine, or other commodity. The right to select involves the right to discriminate, and that not only among articles now free of tax, but also as to articles now subject to a tax, customs, or other duty. For instance, we have the right to take the tax off railroad iron and put an equal amount on oleomargarine. We have the right to take it off Bessemer steel and put it on patent medicines.

Do these gentlemen claim that a tax once placed must remain unchanged?

Again, we have the right to take the tax off from sugar and put it on oleomargarine. I repeat, the right to tax includes the right to select the subject; the right to select includes the right to discriminate; the right to discriminate includes the right to choose from the several kinds of property subject to customs duty or to internal-revenue tax, as well as that which has been untaxed.

Hence it follows, and I challenge any man to question it, that we have the right to add to our revenue by a tax on oleomargarine this session $20,000,000. And we have the right to take off $20,000,000 from sugar this or the next session, leaving the net income the same as now, and he would be a very vicious or a very silly man who denies our power or our right so to do.

Therefore, suppose we need annually no more revenue than we are now receiving. We have the right to change the subjects of taxation, to drop one, to add another, according to our judgment, and only impertinence could presume to question our motives. We may, at will, according to our judgment, change or substitute the subjects of taxation.

Again, suppose we decide to reduce our annual gross revenues $20,000,000 and to tax oleomargarine $20,000,000. We have the absolute right and the absolute power to do it by taking off $40,000,000 of the taxes we now pay on imported sugars.

It is not necessary that this adjustment should be in one bill or in one session to be legal. We may take the several steps at our will.

Gentlemen have complained that there is no plan in this movement of the friends of honest butter to adjust taxation to the amount of revenue needed.

I will propose one, and I am prepared to work up to it now and hereafter. It is this: place ten millions or fifteen millions, more or less, of revenue upon imitation butter and take off forty millions of taxation upon sugar. Place the tax on oleomargarine now; take the tax off sugar at the first opportunity.

These manufacturers claim that they have discovered a new combination and a new method of making much wealth at little cost.

The gains have not gone to the consumer, but have been divided between the manufacturer and the retailer. The immense profits seem to come to them almost as an accidental bounty. Let us apply a tax to this sudden, unearned gain as we once applied the succession tax. Another ground is because these manufacturers and dealers can well afford to pay it, and are subject to the tax upon the theory of the income tax. Upon moral grounds, it is merely taxing into the public fund part of an enormous and unfair profit.

In the bill before us and the action upon it we see a remarkable growth of public opinion.

In the Forty-seventh Congress, the first time I ever ventured to address the House of Representatives of the United States (1882), I spoke in the interest of honest dairy products as against the oleomargarine counterfeits. I believe that I made the only speech on that subject in that Congress.

In this debate in this Forty-ninth Congress I have seen twelve members at a time seeking recognition to address the House on this subject.

Why is this? It is because the public will is known. The public press has honestly and fully reflected this public will, and public men have promptly responded. And in this country the voice of the people in public affairs is in reality as the voice of God.

I do not claim that this bill is fully sufficient or final, but it is all that can now be obtained; and this bill enacted, it will be comparatively easy to supplement with all legislation that experience shall show necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, if there be no objection, will consider the formal amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if I can not be heard in opposition to the motion to strike out the last word, then, sir, I move to amend by adding the word "notwithstanding." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it has occurred to me this morning, and I believe this impression is shared by other members of the House, that there is a disposition on the part of somebody (of course I will not make any imputation against the Chair), to suppress my impassioned oratory. [Great laughter.] But, sir, I wish to assure you and the House that it is not my purpose and that I have no desire by my fervid and persuasive eloquence to overpersuade this House into the adoption of any unconstitutional or hurtful measure. [Laughter.] Sir, I would scorn to take any such advantage of the weakness of this House. [Great laughter.]

Sir, I have modestly kept my seat, when not marching between the tellers, now for a whole week, and listened to the discussion and dilatory motions that have been made on this oleomargarine bill. The House seems, sir, to be unwilling to vote on it until it has had further light. It is waiting for something, and, sir, I am impressed with the belief that it is unwilling to act on so important a measure until I have been heard from. [Laughter.] And modest as I always am, yet resolute and willing to contribute my great weight to help along the legislation of this great country, I have determined to come to the front. [Laughter.]

Just here it might not be inappropriate to suggest an idea that has occurred to me. My name, you see, is one of the first on the list. I am one of the first on the Democratic side to vote and one of the most reliable voters. I remember that in the early part of the session the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] said leaders would spring up from the new members in this House. Now, would it not be well for our Democratic friends to select me as a leader? [Great laughter.] Acting on this idea, and with a just sense of the fitness of things, I say to the gentlemen on this side of the House, "Behold your leader! Follow me." [Great laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of expediting business I am willing to forego this cherished amendment of mine, the addition of the word "notwithstanding," and to say seriously a few words in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], the proposition to strike out the 10-cent tax and insert a 2-cent tax instead.

Mr. Chairman, I represent on this floor a purely agricultural constituency. Our people have in the past confined their efforts almost exclusively to the production of our great staple, cotton, as a source of revenue, and we have worked hard and grown poor raising cotton, on which there can in the very nature of things be no protection, while they have all the while been heavily taxed to protect other industries. Sir, of late years our people are trying to diversify their industries, and they are going largely into dairying and stock-raising.

Creameries and dairies are springing up in our section and giving new hope to our people. I, sir, am engaged in dairying myself. I am a strong believer in the cow and a staunch friend of the cow. In my judgment if protection could be defended at all it could be defended for the cow against all comers, and if I would vote for protection to any industry it would be the dairy or butter-making industry; but, sir, being as I am opposed to the whole system of protection for protection's sake, I can not give this bill in its present shape my support.

I think of all the mean frauds the fraud on the cow is one of the meanest, and if the committee will accept of the amendment of 2 cents tax instead of 10 I will vote for the bill, so as to put bogus butter under the supervision of the Internal Revenue Department, and require it to be stamped so as to prevent fraud and imposition. Gentlemen in opposing this bill have had much to say against the internal-revenue system, but, sir, we have the system and it is in full operation in every county and hamlet in this great country. This bill will add other duties to its officers, but no new offices, and as we are not likely to get rid of the system, and as I am not yet ready to vote to get rid of it, I see no impropriety in adding oleomargarine to the list of articles now under the supervision of that department.

If I were to vote for this 10-cent tax I could not fool myself into the belief that I was voting for it simply for the revenue it would raise. I would know that the motive prompting me would be a desire to tax oleomargarine out of existence to benefit the butter interest; and, having always opposed such legislation, I can not change my principles nor vote against them because it might benefit my people and myself. It is a sort of legislation the effects of which have already borne oppressively on us, and which would curse us again in a thousand ways. Let the bogus butter be stamped; then let those buy it who wish. As for me, I am sure when it is stamped I will buy none of it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG obtained the floor and said, Mr. Chairman, I tender to the Democratic "leader" half my time, if he will take it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly much obliged to the gentleman from Massachusetts; but I suppose the House only wanted to know where I stood; it understands that now, and is probably ready to proceed with business. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi. Instead of the word "notwithstanding," which he proposes to place at the end of the section, I desire at the proper time to amend by adding to the section a proviso practically embodying the amendment which the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HATCH] asked but did not obtain unanimous consent to have considered. The words which I propose to add are these:

Provided, That no tax shall be imposed on oleomargarine except when made in imitation or semblance of butter, and, when so made, calculated or intended to be sold as butter or for butter.

Mr. Chairman, my favorable consideration was asked for this bill by some of our leading produce dealers in Massachusetts. They very frankly stated to me that while they were very heartily in favor of the bill, they did not claim that butterine or oleomargarine as made by the best manufacturers is deleterious to health. They did not claim that the manufacture or sale of butterine or oleomargarine as such is objectionable or should be prevented. They frankly acknowledge, as I think the good sense of the House and the country must acknowledge, that the manufacture or sale of butterine or oleomargarine as such, aside from any fraud or imposition of it as pure butter, is proper and warrantable. All they demand, and all that I believe can be demanded, in behalf of the dairy interest, of the consumer, or of the dealer in dairy products, is that imitation butter shall not be sold as genuine butter.

We are invoking the taxing power of the country for the purpose of preventing this fraud, and not for the purpose of preventing the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine or butterine as such. And that distinction should be preserved. In order that we may prevent that fraud we invoke the internal-revenue system. It seems to me, therefore, when we have applied that internal-revenue system to prevent fraud, when we have the supervision, inspection, and control of the Internal-Revenue Department, we have accomplished all that can be asked of us. The next question is, having invoked that supervision, what tax is necessary? Shall we tax up to the extreme figure? Shall it be a tax that accomplishes a purpose that even the dairy interest does not claim, to wit, the prohibition of the manufacture and sale? In other words, a tax only is desired to prevent the sale of butterine as butter and to secure the supervision, inspection, and control of the Internal-Revenue Department. Certainly a tax of 10 cents a pound is not necessary for that purpose; a tax of 2 cents is sufficient.

The only thing desirable, the only thing which can be claimed by the advocates of this bill is the inspection and control of the Internal-Revenue Department. Let us do that with the smallest possible tax.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts let me ask him a question?

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to understand your position. Do you think it is a proper use of the constitutional power to levy tax simply to protect one industry against another's fraud?

Mr. LONG. I do not say that, but I will say if you pass a law imposing tax the presumption is—and will go out and can not be escaped—that that tax is imposed for the purpose of revenue. I have nothing to do with the motives of men. The law will stand on its own footing; the law will be interpreted as a revenue tax.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think we need a revenue tax? Do we need revenue?

Mr. LONG. I do not think we do at present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LONG. I wish before taking my seat to offer an amendment which I have prepared.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendment is not now in order.

Mr. HENLEY was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the formal amendment as withdrawn, and will recognize the gentleman from California to submit an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HENLEY. I have an amendment similar in purport to the one proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], and therefore it becomes unnecessary to submit it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what I wish to say to the committee is this: While I have been voting all the time for and favoring this measure, I do not intend, in the language of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], to vote as a slave, regardless of right or wrong, or at the dictation of any one. Now, I beg the House to give me its most earnest attention. Those who have hitherto opposed this measure have done so upon the ground, and it was a proper one if properly laid, that it was taxing one industry out of existence for the benefit of another.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HATCH] comes in here this morning and absolutely leaves those who contend that way without any ground whatever to stand upon, because the bill, as he has proposed himself to amend it, is intended to provide, and will provide, if his amendment shall prevail, that nothing but fraud, nothing but foulness, nothing but impurity should be taxed by this measure. Who will declare himself as opposed to such a purpose?

Mr. DANIEL. No; it does not.

Mr. HENLEY. Yes, it does, as I construe it, and it admits of none other.

A MEMBER. That is a matter of construction.

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] resorted to a favorite expedient of gentlemen who are a little lame in their logic in his reading of this bill. He gives it an interpretation that suits his own purposes—he defines it himself; in other words, he sets up a man of straw, and he encounters of course no serious difficulty in overcoming such an adversary. He says this is a bill to protect one industry at the expense of another. Is the gentleman warranted in elevating arson, or murder, or any other crime interdicted by the decalogue to the dignity of an industry? Are foulness, unwholesomeness, and all sorts of impure things which may be the means of infecting humanity with disease—are those industries?

Mr. DANIEL. Whoever heard of putting a tax on arson or murder?

Mr. HENLEY. In various ways those who violate its provisions must suffer the penalty.

A MEMBER. A tax is a license.

Mr. HENLEY. A tax is a license, and penalties may also be inflicted.

Mr. DANIEL. Well, what about license?

Mr. HENLEY. Let us practice the virtue of candor in respect to this matter. Our opponents declare that this bill taxes out of existence an honest industry. Let us test their sincerity. Any amendment they are disposed to offer curing this supposed objection, I am satisfied, will be cheerfully accepted by the other side. The controversy makes it clear nothing is going to be taxed save that which is imitation or semblance of butter. The bill is squarely in the interest of honesty.

Who is opposed to this? Why, I admonish you, gentlemen, that the time has come when the farmers of this country are to be heeded in their prayers and wishes. A gentleman on the other side of the House, the gentleman from Indiana, said the other day that the farmers of the country did not desire this legislation. It is impossible for me, Mr. Chairman, to express the profundity of my commiseration for the ignorance of a gentleman as to popular sentiment who does not know that the farmers of the country demand this or some similar measure of justice. The gentleman can look nowhere, he can not pick up a newspaper from his desk, if he happens to have one there, which will not afford abundant evidence of the wishes of the agricultural community upon this question.

This is a representative government, as I understand it. If we can not consent to submit ourselves to the wishes of our people, upon the theory that this is a representative government, we should resign. The terminology of the Constitution is that we are representatives of the people, and if we do not obey their behests we are not representatives, and should quit the business.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated and repeated upon this floor that the declaration this morning of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture throws a new light upon this whole subject. I desire to call attention to the fact that on last Tuesday evening the honorable Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, a member of this committee, in speaking of this bill used these words:

> And right here let me say that this bill does not prevent the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, nor does it lay a tax upon that article if made with its natural color, but simply taxes the article when colored and made in semblance of butter or mixed with butter; leaving the market open for the sale of the uncolored grease, and the cheap food can be sold untaxed, the poor man and the rich can buy it and use it and mix it in his own way, with his own butter, for his own use, but not for sale.

If the House did not heed these words it is not the fault of the committee, but of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I can not be interrupted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I only wanted to correct the gentleman by calling his attention to the eighth section——

Mr. BUCHANAN. I can not yield. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE] went on and used this language:

> And while I think that the uncolored neutral, which may still be sold under the name of butterine or other names which may be invented, ought to be inspected by competent chemists and microscopists before being sold, yet we are now dealing with this one question, and it is a step in the right direction.

It is no new light, therefore, but simply a reiteration by the chairman of what the propositions which have been embodied in the bill from the very beginning mean when properly construed.

One word more before I conclude. We have heard many threats here with reference to the action of gentlemen upon this floor. I utter no threat, but simply a prediction, that if this bill is not passed the farmers of the country will be heard from.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend by adding the following proviso at the end of section 8:
> "Provided, That this act shall not be understood or construed to impose any of the taxes mentioned in it on oleomargarine, or any of the products or compounds mentioned in it, where the same is plainly marked with the name of the particular product, and sold or offered to be sold as such."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will reserve the point of order the Chair will entertain it hereafter.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture made the impression on the mind of several members, myself among the number, as did certainly the gentleman from California with the suggestion which he made, that the construction he gave of the second section shows that it was not intended to tax oleomargarine as such where made of pure materials; and the gentleman from California assumes that it is a great piece of ignorance not to understand it in the same way. Let us read that section and see what it is:

> That for the purposes of this act certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine," namely: All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all mixtures and compounds of oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all lard extracts and tallow extracts; and all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef fat, suet, lard, lard oil, vegetable oil annotto, and other coloring matter, intestinal fat, and offal fat made in imitation or semblance of butter, or calculated or intended to be used as butter or for butter.

Now that section simply defines what oleomargarine is, and the other substances that are intended to be taxed. No other construction can be placed upon it; and the suggestion made does not in any way change the simple definition of what is intended to be taxed as plainly set forth in that section.

The third section goes on to impose the tax on manufacturers and on wholesale or retail dealers in oleomargarine. The section imposes a special tax, the first being the tax of $600 on manufacturers of oleomargarine; the second, of $480 on wholesale dealers, and $48 on retail dealers; and section 8 prescribes the tax of 10 cents per pound. Now, if the chairman of the committee did not mean to mislead the House, and if the gentleman from California did not intend by his argument to deceive the House, the amendment I have presented would enable them, if they will agree to it, to undeceive everybody. That provides that all of these articles when labeled as they really are, or sold or offered to be sold for what they really are, instead of for butter, shall not be taxed. If they say that, and will agree that that is the object of this legislation, we can vote for the bill. If it is not a bill to tax one industry out of the way of another, or to give more profit to dairymen, but to prevent fraud—if that be the object, or if they mean to prevent fraud, the amendment I have offered says that clearly and unmistakably; but if they do not mean that, of course they will defeat all such amendments and ask the House to believe that this section is merely intended to qualify the tax; and every man knows, who can read the English language, that it has no such meaning.

That is all I have to say. I desire to present an amendment which will determine the question when we come to act upon it whether we mean to tax one product out of existence to give an increased profit to another, or whether we mean to prevent frauds by the imitation of one product by another.

Mr. HATCH. In reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] I can only reiterate what I said before this morning. My language has been taken down and will be in the RECORD, and I propose to stand by it. If the gentleman from Texas did not understand me and if the House did not understand me I do not know it is possible for me to speak more plainly. I stated in as plain English as I know how to use that any substances mentioned in the second section that were mixed or compounded and simply sold for what they were and branded as what they were would not be subject to this tax. I did not state, I did not intend to convey the impression, and certainly no gentleman could have understood me to say, that I meant that these materials could all be mixed or any number of them could be mixed, branded oleomargarine, and sold without the tax, because that is the word used in the second section to designate the compounds. But I stated that when so mixed and branded in imitation of and to be sold as and for butter the tax attached.

I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman yield me the balance of his five minutes before he makes that motion?

Mr. HATCH. I withhold the motion for the present, and yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN. I desire to make a brief explanation. I was not in the House this morning when a dispatch was read from Mr. Powderly. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture intimated that this dispatch was in reply to something I had said on the floor in reference to this bill. I know full well that the convention now in session in Cleveland would not interfere as a body with the legislation proposed in this House. I did not say, I did not intend to say, that I spoke for the convention, and I did not propose to represent the Knights of Labor as now in convention. I did say that I believed, as I believe now, that the Knights of Labor, being consumers and interested in that respect, were opposed to this legislation. And I have reason for that assertion and now repeat it. I presume the dispatch sent to Mr. Powderly was answered properly, although the dispatch to him was not read, for I know him to be a prudent man, and I know quite well he would not desire an organization which is to produce great benefits to his class and the peace of the country should exert its influence in an interference with legislation such as is now under consideration.

Mr. HATCH. It has been suggested to me that probably the committee without going into the House will consent that all debate upon the section under consideration and all amendments thereto may be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object.

Mr. HATCH. Then I insist on my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope the gentleman will allow me a moment. I have an important substantial amendment to offer to this section.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw the motion for the present, and yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia to have his amendment read and to speak to it, and will entertain it when the time arrives for doing so.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to offer an amendment to abolish the internal-revenue tax upon tobacco, which I am informed by the chairman, comes in properly at this stage. I shall then offer an amendment after that has been voted upon to abolish the internal-revenue tax upon fruit brandy—not together, but separately; and if it is the pleasure of the House I will make a few remarks upon that subject now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can have these amendments read in his time, or having given notice of them he can now proceed to speak to them.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to have them read now.

The Clerk read the first amendment proposed by Mr. DANIEL, as follows:

Add to the pending section the following:

"Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1886, the taxes herein specified imposed by the internal-revenue laws of the United States now in force, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, namely: The taxes on manufactured tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the special taxes required by law to be paid by dealers in leaf-tobacco, retail dealers in leaf-tobacco, dealers in manufactured tobacco, peddlers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, and manufacturers of snuff and of cigars: Provided, also, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco, and snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, held by manufacturers, factors, jobbers, or dealers at the time such repeal shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be a drawback or rebate in favor of said manufacturer, factor, jobber, dealer, or other owner of said tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes to the full amount and extent of the tax so paid thereon, but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within ninety days following the date when such repeal shall take effect; and no claim shall be allowed for a less amount than $10; and any special-tax stamp covering taxes repealed by this act may be redeemed for the portion of the special-tax year unexpired at the time of the repeal, when the amount claimed for such stamp shall not be less than $10; and all sums required to satisfy claims under this act shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect: Provided, also, That all internal-revenue laws limiting, restricting, or regulating the manufacture, sale, or exportation of tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes are hereby repealed on and after the 1st day of October, 1886, and that there shall be no drawback allowed upon any such articles which shall be entered for export on or after that date: Provided, That all laws now in force shall remain and have full force and effect in respect to all offenses committed, liabilities incurred, or rights accruing or accrued prior to the date when the repeal of the taxes specified in this act shall take effect."

Mr. HATCH. I reserve the point of order on this amendment. I understand it is offered at this time for information.

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated the amendment was not now in order as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], but that the Chair would recognise the gentleman from Virginia to move it when the other amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. I understand the pending amendment is to change the tax of 10 cents to a tax of 2 cents?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then it would become very important for us to know whether we were to give up the tobacco tax before we vote on this, because, according to some gentlemen, this is an effort to raise some money, and I should like to know how much we shall have to raise.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the other amendment may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1886, all laws and parts of laws heretofore passed by Congress and now in existence imposing an internal-revenue tax upon liquors distilled from apples, peaches, and other fruits, shall be repealed: Provided, That no person or persons shall be allowed to manufacture distilled spirits partly from fruits and partly from grain without the payment of the full tax required by law upon the making or manufacture of spirits distilled from grain, and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on the amendment just read.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I shall at this stage, so few are the moments allowed me, confine myself to a few brief statements on this subject without any effort to make a speech. The President of the United States, Mr. Arthur, in his annual message in 1882, recommended to Congress the abolition of the internal-revenue system with the exception of the tax on distilled spirits. In his message of 1884 he renewed that recommendation in this language:

In case those taxes shall be abolished, that which still remains to the Government will, in my opinion, not only suffice to meet its reasonable expenditures, but it will afford a surplus large enough to permit such tariff reduction as may seem to be advisable when the results of recent revenue laws and commercial treaties shall have shown in what quarter those reductions can be most judiciously effected.

In the platform of the Democratic party which assembled at Chicago and nominated the present President of the United States for that position there was a distinct declaration and pledge of that party to abolish war taxes. The internal-revenue system was distinctly a war-tax measure, and to that tax this language was no doubt candidly and honesty directed.

Now, sir, this seems to be agricultural day in the House, and while we are attending to the interests of one class of our farmers, am I not justified in asking this House to hear the long and patient cry which has ascended to this Government for twenty-five years from that class of farmers who during that period have borne this burden of war upon their shoulders? Mr. Chairman, the tobacco tax and the brandy tax are in no wise essential to the support of this Government. The tax upon apple brandy amounts to a mere song—$1,300,000. It is not 1 per cent. of your internal revenue. It is a mere drop in the bucket. And yet, to sustain that tax, the country of which I am in part the representative is hounded over by a vast brood of officers of this Government, domiciliary visitations are made upon the homes of small farmers, and the pursuit of happiness is made impossible by the spies and informers who infest that country.

Neither, sir, is the cause of temperance in the least degree subserved. Drunkenness in its worst form—in its poisonous and most noxious form—is made by this tax; for instead of drinking a pure article the people are merely compelled to drink an adulterated and more noxious article; and neither is the Government nor society nor temperance nor morals nor anything that is good subserved by the perpetuation of this tax.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to what is to me a fundamental error in the theory of the present bill. The Republican party, if it can vote for this bill in its present shape to destroy one industry for the sake of another, utterly abnegates and entirely abandons that theory of American protection which has captivated thousands of votes in this country. I understood the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] the other day to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was entitled to a vote of thanks for past services. The past services of the gentleman have in nothing more definitely and clearly consisted than in advocating this distinct doctrine.

In America all for each and each for all, but America against the world. Now, sir, protection utterly divests itself of its garments, utterly hauls down and tramples in the dust its standard, utterly turns its back upon everything that it has paraded before the American people for the last twenty years; and, raising the hand of one American laborer against another American laborer, raising the hand of one American manufacturer against another American manufacturer, raising the hand of one American farmer against another American farmer, raising the hand of Americans in every town and village and county and State of this country against other Americans, adopts the very worst phases of the policy of the old and effete monarchies of Europe, against which all Americans raised their hands in 1776. [Applause.]

Mr. LONG. I desire to say that I will not offer the amendment which I indicated a few minutes ago, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HATCH] having stated to me that when he shall have control of the bill in the House he will then offer the amendment which he proposed this morning, to come in at the end of the second section, which he considers a more appropriate place than at the end of section 8.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer as a substitute for the pending amendment the proposition which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 8 add the following:

"That all laws and sections and clauses of laws imposing a tax or taxes on brandy distilled from fruit, and all laws and sections and clauses of laws providing for the collection of a tax or taxes on brandy distilled from fruit and prohibiting without the compliance with certain statutory requisitions the manufacture or distillation of brandy be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HATCH. I reserve a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. COWLES. Sir, I am opposed on principle to all internal-revenue taxation. The whole system is a festering sore on our body-politic, inseparably connected with the most distressful period in our history, and while it is continued it keeps in force a system of espionage upon the citizen in the transaction of his private business that is totally at variance with the principles of our free institutions and the motives that actuated our patriotic ancestry in their establishment. Spies and paid informers, detectives, and the destruction of private property, even under the guise of law, have never yet made or tended to make a people more honest; but, on the other hand, such a system rather excites resistance to and evasion of the law, and breeds, as in a hot-bed, all manner of frauds, perjuries, and crimes, until it stinks in the nostrils of all law-abiding, God-fearing, liberty-loving people, and can only be excused on the plea of dire necessity, and such necessity no longer exists.

But, sir, if it is constitutional to tax other branches of our industries—whisky, brandy, and tobacco—why is it not constitutional to tax any? And who shall say where the line is to be drawn? Surely, sir, it is not well to exercise the taxing-power for the purpose of driving out of existence or prohibiting any branch of industry, nor is it wise to tax one industry for the benefit of another. But, sir, if it is necessary in order to raise revenue to keep up this internal-revenue taxation, why not have a more equal distribution of the burden. And while we impose upon other sections heretofore exempt, why not in the same bill relieve some of those that have long borne the burden alone? The whole system is wrong in principle, and capable of being exercised in the most oppressive manner, and if this measure has no other effect, I trust it may open the eyes of those who have not heretofore been brought face to face with the uses that may be made of it.

Now, sir, the total amount received from the tax on brandy distilled from fruit for the last fiscal year is, in round numbers, $1,300,000, and the amount estimated that will be received under this act will be $20,000,000. If we are to receive this sum under this bill, why not relieve the people in the fruit-growing regions of this country of the oppressive tax of 90 cents per gallon on brandy distilled from fruit? We surely can afford to give to the people $1,300,000 worth of relief if we in the same bill impose upon them $20,000,000 worth of burden in addition to that which they have heretofore borne and now bear; and I ask the gentleman who has charge of this measure to accept this amendment.

Sir, the fruit-growing regions of this country are for the most part situated in sections remote from easy, quick, and cheap transportation. It is impossible to market the fruit in kind, and every year when Providence blesses them with full crops in their orchards millions of bushels of apples and peaches rot on the ground because they can not be profitably utilized and marketed. The owners of these orchards are farmers, the profits of their orchards are in many instances the only little surplus they can make, and I submit to this House if it is right and just to oppress this industry with this onerous tax long after all pressing necessity for it has passed away and "fair delightful peace" has for more than twenty years blessed our nation. The distillation of fruit does not affect the supply of breadstuffs by the consumption of grain, as is sometimes argued by those who favor the tax on whisky, but on the other hand it does increase materially the purchasing power of the people, by converting into money that which would be otherwise wasted. And I earnestly appeal to Representatives here to adopt this amendment, and it will be hailed as a harbinger of better times, and thousands who are now vexed by the continual presence of the tax-gatherer will rise up and "call you blessed."

Sir, I honestly believe that by a proper adjustment of the tariff all the revenue that is necessary for the proper expenses of government can be had, and the whole internal-revenue system and tax abolished. But they say we can not do this all at once. Then let us commence now and here, by abolishing the tax on brandy, which is the least profitable to the Government of any branch of the internal-revenue tax, and which is the product of the fruit that is gathered from the trees, requiring but little extra labor or care, and the people well think that it is extremely hard that the laws of man in a free country should prevent them from making it profitable in supplying the means of obtaining the necessaries of life for themselves and families. It is the experience of the best and most observing men that live in the country where distilling is carried on, so far as my acquaintance goes, that the laws imposing taxes and special requirements do not tend to lessen the evil connected with it or to lessen the evil growing out of the abuses of the use of liquor itself, but rather to increase them. The frauds connected with the evasion of the law are among the greatest abuses of public morals. One of the temptations of these frauds is the higher price which the article attains by reason of the tax levied by the Government. Thus we have this picture. A rich and powerful Government tempting by the means which it adopts in obtaining its revenues its own poor, weak, and humble citizens to the commission of crime. Now, who that is just, who that is honest, who that is true, and who that loves his country does not wish to see such a system abolished. Let us take the tax-gatherer from the doors of our people. Let them once more feel and realize that they live in the free country of our fathers, and let us lay such a reasonable tribute upon foreign nations for the profit they enjoy in coming here and trading with our rich and growing country as will defray all the necessary expenses of our Government. Let us do this, instead of by extravagant legislation making necessary the present oppressive system of taxation. Now I appeal to the Democratic party to shake off the shackles of all selfish interest, and let us rise up and be more worthy of the enduring principles of the party to which we belong. Let us remove these vexatious burdens, and, returning to the people who sent us here, meet with the approval of a thankful constituency.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose somebody's amendment—any amendment that is calculated to impair the usefulness of this bill. Up to this time I have remained silent in this debate; but when I hear on this floor the repeated charge that this is an effort to tax one industry out of existence for the benefit of another I want to repel the charge. The friends of this bill have again and again proposed to strip it of any such misconstruction, and make it so plain that no man can misunderstand that if oleomargarine can be manufactured in its pure and simple form, retaining its natural color and sold as such, we are willing to let it stand upon its merits without taxation. But they have declined to allow us to make such a change in the bill.

Sir, as the manufacture of this article is now practiced and carried on I refuse to recognize it as an "industry." Here is a great mistake made by some members. The manufacture of this article as now conducted is a fraud and not an "industry;" and while I am for protecting the dairy interests of this country, I am also interested in protecting the people from that fraud which is being perpetrated so universally upon those who consume the article. But it is claimed here that oleomargarine is the poor man's food, and that the Knights of Labor are protesting against the passage of this bill. Sir, in the name of the poor man and the laboring man of my State I protest against it. There is not one of them but would repudiate this article as soon as any man upon this floor. Who is there here that would place it upon his own table for consumption? Not a man. If there be one, let me know who he is. But, sir, if we are taxing this so-called industry for the benefit of another, it would not be murder in the first degree. We have the highest precedent for such legislation. In 1863, when the national-bank act was passed, a tax of 10 per cent. was imposed upon State currency for the avowed purpose of driving it out of circulation. Here was a business tenfold greater than the manufacture of oleomargarine, and yet it was taxed out of existence. Would my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] whom I see standing before me pronounce that legislation "protection gone mad?" Why, I venture to say that if he had been here then he would have so pronounced it.

Mr. TILLMAN. It was a war measure.

Mr. CASWELL. The gentleman says it was a war measure, yet it stands as a monument of the wisdom of the Congress that enacted it to the present day, as useful now as it was then. The people had suffered all over the country by a depreciated currency, and the object in imposing that tax was twofold—to protect the people from the losses they had constantly sustained from a depreciated State currency, and to tax that currency out of existence so that the national-bank system might be inaugurated.

But, sir, we are not driven to that extreme. Who can say that the national Treasury does not need every dollar that is to be collected under this bill?

Mr. OATES. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether Congress has not the constitutional right to control the currency at any rate?

Mr. CASWELL. If Congress has the right to control the currency, we might still question, from the standpoint of my friend from Alabama, its right to tax State-bank currency out of existence.

But I desire not to be diverted at this point from the line of my argument. We are not driven to that extent in defending this measure. Who shall say the Treasury does not need the money which will be derived from the taxation imposed in this bill? While there is a debt of seventeen hundred millions hanging over us; while we are maintaining a pension-roll of $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 a year; while we have a navy which would do dishonor to any fourth-class power, and while the people of this country are waiting for a Congress that has the courage to raise sufficient revenues and build up a respectable navy; while there is a party in power that threatens to inaugurate free trade and deprive the Treasury of more than $100,000,000 annually—shall we say we may not need the slight increased revenue which will arise from the enactment of this law?

The estimated expenses of the Government for the next year, as submitted by the administration to this Congress, exceeds by fifteen millions the estimated revenues, and every dollar likely to arise from this taxation will be needed.

Mr. HUDD. Mr. Chairman, as the youngest child of the House, dating from my admission to this floor, I can hardly ask to be voted a "leader;" but I am perfectly willing to follow even a Moses from Mississippi, if he will vote with me on this measure.

Mr. Chairman, it has occurred to me that I shall have to oppose any amendment to reduce the 10 cents per pound tax as originally proposed by the Committee on Agriculture, though I shall vote for the bill even if the tax be reduced. I should regret the reduction in fear that it might not accomplish the object that I am free to say inclines me to the support of the measure under consideration, for I fly the flag of an intent to destroy the manufacture of the noxious compound by taxing it out of existence. For this we have the warrant of the Constitution as well as the precedents of former Congresses, for when it was thought best in the interest of a sound and enduring currency to tax the State banks out of existence all the people said then, as they will say now if this act shall have the same effect, amen.

I favor the principle of this bill in the interest of the preservation of an honest industry as against a dishonest, counterfeit, and destructive process that may not be dignified as an industry, save as we are willing to affirm that the adulterers of a food are to be classed among the honest artisans of the land—that the frightful-looking bird of freedom, supposed to represent an eagle, engraved on the base coin will make it the equal of the genuine. Just as it may and does deceive the unwary in coin, so does this compound called oleomargarine deceive the very elect in honest butter.

The lawyers of this body have, I understand, admitted the constitutionality of the proposed law as coming under the general gift to Congress of taxation. With a long line of decisions in that direction no one would be hardy enough to deny our right of taxing this so-called commodity. If that right were not found in the taxing power simply and plainly, then the entire oft-quoted section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States furnishes the authority for our action, the further provision therein, "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," going hand in hand with taxation.

Representing as I do on this floor a large constituency engaged in the dairying business, I, sir, could not go home and look an honest cow in the face failing to vote for and work for the passage of such a measure as we now have under consideration, and the hand of every honest man in my district would rise up against me, and justly, too, if I were derelict in this regard.

Why, sir, one alone of the five great agricultural counties of my district, all of them being largely interested and engaged in the product of honest butter and wholesome cheese—Sheboygan County, of the State of Wisconsin—exported last year, over and above what was consumed at home and in various parts of the Union, a million dollars' worth of her dairy products to Europe. It is a proud fact for Wisconsin to know that Sheboygan County butter, good butter, bald-headed butter, with no suspicion of a hair in the same, together with its cheese, in the world's great mart for dairy products, Liverpool, stands and is ranked A No. 1. Can I, can any wise or otherwise legislator here, fail to provide, if possible, against any spurious article taking the place of this food that came in with God (first Genesis), and is almost coeval with Eden, if we are to believe the record called Holy Writ; for it tells us that the Promised Land that was to gladden the weary waiting feet of old Israel was flowing with milk and honey. No mention of cotton-seed oil, the fat of dogs, or any biting acids that burn like—well, like sheol, which, I believe is a new name for an oleomargarine factory, if all the revelations and assertions of the hot compounds that go into the product are verities.

Sir, they who would argue and charge this to be a measure in the line of protection, as we understand the line is politically defined between Republican protection and Democratic revenue reform and ultimate free trade, if you please, are much out of the way. This, as I claim to understand it, is an act to prevent in the only way the Federal Congress can legislate in that direction a crime against the health and morals of the nation—for it is a crime against health to palm off a manufactured stuff as genuine butter, as is the ultimate result of the putting this compound on the market so far as the consumer is concerned, and it is the consumer we wish to protect, for the article is acknowledged here to be no more butter than that the truth is a lie, a vice a virtue—it is a crime to adulterate a food or a drink or in the semblance of an article of food made so as to correspond to the genuine for the purpose or that it may allow of a deception being practiced in its sale or use.

It is a moral wrong to allow, if we can prevent, the manufacture and use of this compound, as it lessens the standard of general honesty, as does smuggling a gathering in of immense profits without that honest toil or effort that we are told is the heritage of all, that in the sweat of his face man shall eat bread.

I am here called to notice the singular fact that on yesterday my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. VAN SCHAICK] had sent to the Clerk's desk and read a dispatch purporting to come from an assembly of the Knights of Labor in the metropolitan city of my State, Milwaukee, against the passage of this bill. It might seem strange at a first view that an organization presumably in the interest of honest labor should seek to even lend a hand in aid of a fraudulent industry, and that seen to be wholly in the interest of capital ill directed. But, sir, when we come to also remember that it is now an open secret that in many of the so-called labor organizations of the land unscrupulous capital and some of the great corporations have managed to smuggle in or place their emissaries within the organizations, as we hear, if we do not now know, was the case in the late great strikes and labor troubles of the East and West, we may not be surprised to find that the skilled manipulator is even there, in the interest of oleomargarine, to guide and direct men, honest in their non-directed view, well-meaning in their purpose, but counseled to wrong conclusion for a sinister purpose. While I have a high respect for the Knights of Labor of Milwaukee, many of them personally known to me to be honest and law-abiding citizens, still I think I see the hand behind the curtain. It may be the hand of Esau, but the voice is that of a Jacob; that same old Jacob who was in fact the original stock-broker of history—the first man to attempt to water it or deal in margins, as witness his fraud on his anticipated father-in-law, who practiced oleomargarine tricks with the animal kingdom and colored rods of trade for the multiplication of his own profits without regard to the morale of the transaction. Knights of Labor! Why this bill is in the interest of and demanded by more than seven million of the veritable and original knights of labor. Yea, the very kings and princes of the toilers, the farmers of this great and broad land of ours—by the hands that scatter the seed, that guide the plow, the hands that feed the world.

Shall we give no heed to their cry for relief in this strait? I am for this bill as it came from the committee because it is demanded in the interest of general and national honesty, and because it is for the discomfiture of the sham, the fraudulent, the unhealthy compound that has been described by the master of the poets, he who wrote, as no other man has, the minutes of nature—Shakespeare. As we are under obligation to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] in calling our attention to the "hell-broth" made by the witches in Macbeth, and as it was said in that connection, in that self-same play, by the same disgusting hags of evil, in contemplation of the regicide they saluted—so say we, or should say, all of us: Oleomargarine! hail and farewell!

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when Mr. HUDD'S five minutes had expired, Mr. PRICE obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. HUDD, who then concluded his speech.]

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege—the privilege of not being classed with any set of men whose convictions are at all "mixed" upon the question now under consideration—the privilege, to be more specific, of not going into the RECORD in this debate as from the State of Pennsylvania, as yesterday's issue, on page 5008, in giving remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT], puts me. Ordinarily, sir, I might not object to being credited to the grand old State of Pennsylvania—the State of "brotherly love," the nobility and hospitality of whose people are proverbial; but I can not permit it in this connection, for the reason that her Representatives on this floor are somewhat "mixed" on this question of oleomargarine, some of them showing a strange disposition to pay their devotions at the shrine of this myriad monster, this mixed mystery of the modern magician. Hence, I ask that the RECORD at the point I have indicated may be corrected and that I may be credited where I belong.

Mr. KELLEY. Pennsylvania makes no objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROUT. I thank you, sir. Mr. Chairman, only for the kind consent of the distinguished gentleman it might have been difficult.

Mr. BAYNE. My friend will allow me to suggest that when the vote shall be taken on this bill it will be found that the Representatives of Pennsylvania are not very much "mixed."

Mr. GROUT. Very likely; but I want to be credited where I belong, since Judge KELLEY is willing I should be; and that is to the little but constant State of Vermont, whose people neither make nor eat oleomargarine, but do make 25,000,000 pounds of butter annually, with which you may butter your bread and not feel under the knife-blade as you do it the wiggling kick of a million animalcules. [Laughter.]

But, since the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my friend Colonel BAYNE, speaks hopefully of the Pennsylvania delegation, let me ask that this correction be made without prejudice to him and without prejudice also to all others of that delegation who prefer butter to oleomargarine. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider all formal amendments as withdrawn.

Mr. BLAND. I move to amend by striking out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I believe I represent an agricultural constituency; and I may have some direct personal interest in the subject before the committee. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, we should consider the effect this bill will have, or, in other words, whether it will accomplish the end intended. If the manufacturers of oleomargarine can pay the license of 10 cents a pound and still survive, what have we accomplished? We have simply licensed and taxed and authorized the manufacturer to come into competition with the manufacturer of pure butter; and therefore instead of having accomplished the purpose designed we have simply authorized monopolies to extend that competition. So in my mind it may become a question whether the bill should not increase the tax on oleomargarine to such extent as will crush it out if it be found that 10 cents has not accomplished that purpose.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the question arises whether it is proper to be done, and if it is not a proper matter to be here, whether it is not a proper matter for the States to regulate and not for Congress.

So it does seem to me in so much as it is admitted on all sides, so far as the mere question of revenue is concerned, that it is not a public necessity at this time, and the revenue feature in the bill, if there at all, must be for the purpose of suppressing the manufacture of oleomargarine, I will suggest it is not high enough for that purpose. If you do not suppress it and it survives you say to these parties, we allow this manufacture to exist by exacting a tax from it, and therefore you can go on with your competition with the manufacture of pure butter, as we have nothing to do with that. In that view of the bill it has not accomplished its purpose.

It seems to me that we should deal fairly and squarely with this subject. If it is simply intended to require those interested in the manufacture of it, oleomargarine or butterine—and I believe that is all the farmers of the country do require—shall place it upon the market branded for what it is, and nothing else. Now, the amendment of my colleague [Mr. WARNER] provides, where it is manufactured as such, where it is marked as such and for what it is worth, after it has been examined and found not to be deleterious, it shall be allowed to be sold, and that is all we should do. If we are proceeding upon the theory we are only to protect the farmer, that will protect him against fraud; but if we propose to suppress the thing altogether, 10 cents a pound will not do it. I am in favor of rooting out this fraudulent composition, yet I may have to vote for the bill, although I do not want to be considered as in favor of it unless it can be amended. I believe the true theory and the true doctrine to be incorporated in this bill is simply that this article shall go upon the market and be sold for precisely what it is, so as to let the purchaser have the choice between oleomargarine and pure butter. Then there is not an honest farmer in the land that will ask for anything else.

I am quite satisfied the amendment of my colleague will have this effect and make this bill what it ought to be, a true and honest bill in favor of honest competition and against fraud. And that is all we ought to ask.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is always distasteful to an honorable man to adopt the method of a jockey, although he sometimes may be forced to do it by stress of circumstance. I object to this bill as it stands because it is equivocal, because it looks one way and goes the other, because it pretends to be in the interest of revenue, and yet upon the declaration of its friends is in the interest of an existing industry. I suggest any legislation of that sort which is twofold in its character, which is deceptive in its character, ought not to be adopted unless there is a feeling on the part of this House there is a public exigency which makes it necessary.

It is said this bill resembles the law passed some years ago imposing a tax of 10 per cent. on State banks. In some respects it does. That law was proper to pass, because it was believed to be absolutely necessary in the interest of the public service to preserve the purity of the national currency and give effect to the doctrine of the country in respect to our national banks. And although the law itself, as an abstract proposition, might be open to objection, it was sustained and defended because of the great reasons of public policy underlying it. But we propose now in this bill to pass a law nominally in the interest of revenue, but in reality, in fact, to protect the dairy industry of the country against another industry of the country. And to show precisely the object of the bill I wish to refer to a statement made only a day or two ago by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], who, in the earnestness of the moment, stated precisely the purposes and objects of the bill when he said that if you reduce this tax from 10 cents to 2 cents a pound you will fail in your object; then oleomargarine can be so manufactured that it will drive butter out of the market.

Now, sir, that confession, to wit, that oleomargarine, if only subjected to a tax of 2 cents, will drive honest butter out of the market, is a distinct admission to the effect that in order to protect the dairy interests of the country in the manner proposed it becomes necessary to destroy entirely that important branch of industry known as the manufacture of oleomargarine; and it is because I believe that to be the necessary effect, as the bill now stands, without the several amendments to which reference has been made, that I am opposed to it in its present shape. If it can be so framed, as suggested by the Representative from Missouri, that it shall be limited in its operation and effect to oleomargarine simply when intended to be put upon the market as butter, and apply only to that part of the industry which is a fraud, then I am quite willing to support it, and I trust the Representative from Missouri will so frame his amendment as to put that matter beyond all possible doubt, because as the bill now stands, if he will allow me a moment or two, it is subject to a very serious criticism. I submit that a fair construction of the bill will apply to every manufacturer of oleomargarine, whether it be intended as a fraud upon butter or as an honest product, because the second section of the bill, if he will listen for a moment, declares that certain manufactured compounds shall be designated as oleomargarine.

This section provides as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine," namely: All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all mixtures and compounds of oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral—

Which are to be recognized as oleomargarine. Then comes the second classification, "all lard extracts and tallow extracts," &c., and then a semicolon, showing a distinct division; and following that:

And all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef fat, suet, lard, lard oil, vegetable oil, annotto, and other coloring matter, intestinal fat, and offal fat—

To which are also added the words:

made in imitation or semblance of butter, or calculated or intended to be used as butter or for butter.

Now it seems to me the construction would be that these last words qualifying the paragraph would refer only to that class which is specified in the third subdivision following the last semicolon.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with profound interest to the discussion of this subject and have been surprised by the invective and passionate declamation which have been indulged by honorable members. The question whether oleomargarine or imitation butter made in the form, flavor, and likeness of the genuine article, which is the product of the dairy, but does not possess its ingredients, should be subject to taxation, is purely economic and ought to be considered as any other economic question, from the high plane of reason and of public policy.

Every lawmaker in deciding what his course should be with reference to questions requiring his action should first apply to it the test of the Constitution. The present measure which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture will stand this test. Its constitutionality can not be doubted. The language of the Constitution is as plain as the letters of the alphabet. Section 8, Article I of the Constitution says that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes," &c. The power being conceded, then, its exercise in the particular case under consideration becomes simply a question of public policy and expediency. I am supporting the bill for the reason that it is sound public policy and therefore expedient.

I do not agree with those who support it simply as a measure of protection to any other article with which imitation butter comes into competition. The primary object of the grant of power to impose taxation is not for protection to favored classes, but to raise revenue for the support of the Government. A revenue tax upon any article, whether direct or upon imported goods, affords incidental protection. It is an inevitable consequence, and is not in conflict with the Constitution. The proposed tax upon imitation butter will incidentally protect a very large and growing branch of the agricultural industry which affords sustenance and support to every other avocation. Agriculture is the fundamental source of the country's wealth. Whatever benefits agriculture contributes to the country's prosperity and greatness. While the bill will afford incidental protection to the stock-raising and dairy-producing class of farmers, it will not tax imitation butter out of existence. The cost of producing this article is trifling in consequence of the cheapness of the materials from which it is manufactured. The cost of manufacturing it is estimated at 7 cents a pound. Add a tax of 10 cents and it will be put on the market at 17 cents a pound. I have before me a circular of an imitation-butter manufacturer proposing to furnish it at 10 cents a pound. It is known that genuine butter—the product of the dairy—can not be made for less than 25 cents a pound with fair profit to the producer. This will leave a margin of reasonable profit to the manufacturer and handler of the imitation article. It will secure life to the former industry, and will not destroy the latter.

I base my support of the bill upon the ground that it is a tax for revenue, and not for protection or prohibition. In round numbers the annual expenditures of the Government are $300,000,000 a year. The party of which I am a member is pledged to reduce this expenditure to the lowest figure compatible with the efficient administration of the Government. But, nevertheless, the money must be raised for its support. It can be done only by taxation, and the burden should be so imposed as to bear as lightly and as equitably as possible upon the people. A tax upon pretended butter would fall principally upon its wealthy manufacturers, who under existing laws are untaxed. A single firm is said to realize a profit of a million dollars annually. This princely revenue is derived from the toiling people of the country, who, in consuming the article, are doing so in the belief that it is genuine butter. I would prefer that the tax should be fixed at 6 cents a pound. That would yield an annual revenue of $12,000,000. A tax of 10 cents a pound would yield $20,000,000. In imposing this tax sound policy would dictate a corresponding reduction upon the absolute and indispensable necessaries of life, such articles of food as sugar and salt, and of the implements of labor, machinery, farming and mechanical tools, and wearing apparel. The imposition of the tax, while thus incidentally benefiting a great and growing industry, and reducing the cost of articles of absolute necessity, would involve but small cost in its collection. The internal-revenue law, which will remain in force as long as it is expedient to tax distilled spirits and tobacco, provides the necessary machinery for collecting the tax.

It seems to have been overlooked that the proposed tax applies only to imitation or fraudulent butter, not to an article which sails under its own colors.

I have not based my support of the bill upon the ground assumed by some of its advocates that oleomargarine is a fraud; that the materials of which it is composed render it deleterious to public health, and that it should be taxed out of existence for that reason upon the same principle on which laws are passed to establish a national board of health, and to prevent the introduction and spread of diseases destructive to human life. That is a domain upon which I do not choose to go. Its qualities, whether wholesome or pernicious, do not enter into the consideration of the subject as far as I am concerned. The testimony and the arguments upon this point are widely divergent. Mr. Armour, of Chicago, the leading member of the largest oleomargarine firm in the country, makes the following statement, under oath, of the materials and methods employed by his company in its manufacture:

STATE OF ILLINOIS, Cook County, ss:

Philip D. Armour, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a resident of the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois, and that he is a member of the firm of Armour & Co.

Deponent further says that said firm of Armour & Co., in the course of their business, makes and sells oleomargarine and butterine, and that this deponent knows of his own knowledge the materials and the methods used by said firm in the making of said products. They are as follows:

METHODS OF MANUFACTURE.

The fat is taken from the cattle in the process of slaughtering, and after thorough washing is placed in a bath of clean, cold water and surrounded with ice, where it is allowed to remain until all animal heat has been removed. It is then cut into small pieces by machinery and cooked at a temperature of about 150° until the fat in liquid form has separated from the fibrine or tissue; then settled until it is perfectly clear. Then it is drawn into graining vats and allowed to stand a day, when it is ready for the presses. The pressing extracts the stearine leaving the remaining product, which is commercially known as oleo oil, which, when churned with cream or milk, or both, and with usually a proportion of creamery butter, the whole being properly salted, gives the new food product, oleomargarine.

In making butterine we use neutral lard, which is made from selected leaf lard in a very similar manner to oleo oil, excepting that no stearine is extracted. This neutral lard is cured in salt brine for forty-eight to seventy hours at an ice-water temperature. It is then taken and, with the desired proportion of oleo oil and fine butter, is churned with cream and milk, producing an article which, when properly salted and packed, is ready for market.

In both cases coloring matter is used which is the same as that used by dairymen to color their butter. At certain seasons of the year, namely, in cold weather, a small quantity of salad oil made from cotton seed is used to soften the texture of the product, but this is not generally used by us.

Deponent further says that no other material or substance except as above stated is used by Armour & Co. in making oleomargarine or butterine.

If this compound is not sold as butter the bill does not tax it. It taxes only the article which purports to be butter and bears its semblance but is not what it is represented to be.

On the other hand, the following testimony as to the deleterious qualities of the imitation article as food are submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE] in his argument in support of the bill:

The following is a list, taken from the patents recorded in the Patent Office a Washington, of the ingredients claimed to be used in the manufacture of this article. Manufacturers deny that they use all the ingredients named in these patents, but it is certainly not unfair to assume that when they mention a certain ingredient in their application for a patent, as necessary for its making, they actually use it. This list was obtained officially from the Patent Office by Assistant State Dairy Commissioner Van Valkenburgh, of New York:

Nitric acid, sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, butyric acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, curcumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry blood albumen, saltpeter, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, caparic acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame (or benne), turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, cows' udders, sal soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery elm bark, olive oil, broma chloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda.

It is not sought to show that all these ingredients are used in a single process, but the fact is established that nitric acid is used in all, and it is probable that the other acids named are employed when the most powerful agents are necessary for deodorizing putrid or diseased fats.

* * * * * * *

Professor Clark, of Albany, made a specialty of the physiological features of his subject, making experiments in digestion and microscopical investigations, and in other ways showing the importance to public health of a thorough knowledge of what enters into any food product. As a result of his researches he arrived at the conclusion that oleomargarine is unwholesome and dangerous to health for four reasons: First, because it is indigestible; second, because it is insoluble when made from animal fats; third, that it is liable to carry the germs of disease into the human system; and fourth, that in the eagerness of manufacturers to produce their spurious compounds cheaply, they are tempted to use ingredients which are detrimental to the health of the consumer.

* * * * * * *

When Dr. H. A. Pooler, president of the board of health in Goshen, Orange County, was examined he was asked what nitric acid was and how it affected the human system. This question was suggested by previous testimony as to the use of nitric acid in the manufacture of oleomargarine. Dr. Pooler replied:

"Nitric acid is produced by the action of sulphuric acid upon nitrate of potassa, about equal parts; it is a powerful caustic; it destroys animal tissue rapidly and almost irreparably when it comes in contact with it; upon animal fat it destroys the tissue, and deodorizes it by destroying its smell. It is also a preservative, in a measure. Undoubtedly substances submitted to the action of nitric acid would not be decomposed so rapidly as those which had not been submitted to it; but the acid would affect the digestive organs very seriously. Upon the human stomach it is a deadly poison when taken in overdoses. When taken in a diluted form not sufficient to cause death, and taken for any length of time, it produces similar effects to that of mercury. The teeth at first become whiter, afterward decay, and then become loose; it stimulates the excessive flow of secretion and poisons the system generally. Its caustic properties are so great that it destroys the tissue and impairs the circulation. Where a person loses a nail from it it is generally because of the accumulation of the acid around the root of the nail; it cuts off the circulation which supplies the nail, consequently the nail will slough off for want of proper nourishment. The acid has to be diluted in order to be safe in any degree as a remedy. In its pure form it is deadly."

The following is given by the same gentleman as the testimony of Professor Nachtrieb, of the State University of Minnesota, found by an analysis of what was sold for butter in Minneapolis at retail this year.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROFESSOR NACHTRIEB'S REPORT.

The following is an extract from the illustrated report of Professor Nachtrieb, of the State University, to the dairy commission, of the samples of butterine given him for microscopical examination:

"The examination of these samples was by no means exhaustive, and they would probably yield much more than the accompanying figures indicate. The best and cleanest looking sample had a butter odor and taste, and would readily pass for butter. It had a very small variety of living organisms, but a great many spores, which, under favorable conditions, I have no doubt would have germinated. It also contained masses of dead mold, bits of cellulous wood, various colored particles, shreds of hair, bristles, &c. The other two samples teemed with life and yielded microscopic preparations of the molds and bacteria that would have gladdened the heart of the student of biology. The microscope revealed the fact that the greatest variety of life existed in the inner portion of these samples, and that the outer portions contained the greatest quantity of active bacteria. The animals found in the butterine belong to the type of protozoa. Doubtful portions of worms were also noticed. Many of the protozoa, under favorable conditions, pass into an encysted stage or develop spores within protected capsules, and in these conditions lie dormant till the environment is again favorable; and it can hardly be doubted that some of the many spores found in these butterines were merely in a dormant state. The great number and variety of organisms found in the samples indicate the use of foul water and a criminal filthy process in making it. There can not be the slightest doubt that the person who eats so promiscuous and so lively a mixture as the butterine examined is running great risk, morally as well as physically. The peace and happiness of future generations is greatly involved in the life of the present generation. By indulging in our home articles of food filed with spores and seeds of the various classes of the lower organisms we are increasing the dangers of parasitism. Spores that now are harmless, may, by gradual adaptation, through more or less circuitous routes, become inimical to the health and happiness of countless millions."

I present the foregoing affidavit of the leading oleomargarine manufacturer on the one hand, and of scientists and specialists on the other in regard to the materials that enter into the production of imitation butter without expressing an opinion of my own, or without entering upon the question whether a prohibitory tax should be imposed upon it for the suppression of fraud and the preservation of the public health. I have based my advocacy of the measure upon stronger and unquestionably constitutional grounds. If, by imposing the tax in the exercise of its sovereign power, without invading the rights of any class, the Government should lighten and equalize the burdens of taxation, and at the same time afford incidental benefit to the great agricultural industry for the relief of which so little has been done, and from which it chiefly derives its revenues, the true economist and patriot will have cause to rejoice.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania evidently does not understand what the Knights of Labor want in regard to this question. The Knights of Labor in my own State are like all other people. They have the same needs as other people; and simply because they are laboring men they none the less want good food; and it seems to me it is an insult to them and to every class of workingmen in this country to assume that they want the cheap and the nasty.

Indeed, it is not certain that they will get even cheap food by the free sale of oleomargarine, to say nothing of its being bad. Upon this point gentlemen on the other side do not agree among themselves. While some of them assert that since the invention of oleomargarine the price of butter has been cheapened, others say that it has been all the time growing dearer.

I was glad to hear my friend from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] so eloquently and truthfully state the position of the Republican party upon the tariff question in his speech this morning: "In America, each for all, all for each, but America against the world." That, gentlemen, is the doctrine of the Republican party.

It is a grand and patriotic doctrine, grand and patriotic as the record of this great party which saved the Union, a record which I stand here to say makes the proudest pages in American history. And, Mr. Chairman, we do not abate one jot or one tittle of that doctrine or cast any stain upon that record in supporting this bill. I hope the gentleman from Virginia himself, when the tariff question shall come before this House to be discussed, will stand by the proposition: "In America, each for all, all for each, but America against the world."

We shall be glad to welcome the powerful aid of the gentleman in favor of this good Republican doctrine, which is the fundamental principle upon which the American revenue system rests. If he will heartily embrace and earnestly practice, wherever it applies, this doctrine so well stated in his own words for all that those words signify, he may be as valiant and useful a Republican as the best of us, and become the chief corner-stone of the edifice of protection. I repeat, we depart not at all from this doctrine in supporting this bill, neither in raising revenue upon oleomargarine, a compound whose reputation is as unsavory as some of its ingredients, nor in protecting against it the honest, healthful product of the farmer.

Over and over again it has been assumed here that this is a bill to destroy one industry in the interest of another. Indeed, this comprises the entire argument upon the other side, except what is said against internal-revenue taxes. If it were true I would not support the bill, but while gentlemen assume that oleomargarine is pure, we shun it because it is put forth under a false name, and that fact makes a prima facie case against it. Hence the burden of proof is upon its friends to show that it is pure.

How do they undertake to do this? They say that some samples of the best manufacturers have been tested and shown to be pure. But what of all the rest? Have we any assurance that it will be found to be like the samples? Indeed, have we not a right to assume that in this respect, as well as in stealing a name which never belonged to it, fraud has been practiced?

My friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] says that the manufacturers themselves say it is pure, and they ought to know. I agree they ought to know. I have no doubt they do know; nor have I any doubt that the thief arraigned at the bar of justice for larceny, and who says he is innocent, ought to know and does know what the fact is, but who takes his word for it?

Mr. Chairman, I favor this bill for the purpose of raising revenue. I would like to have any gentleman tell me why an internal revenue is an infernal revenue, as it has been called by gentlemen in this House, unless it is so styled because it is in part laid upon an infernal business.

It is certainly within the jurisdiction of Congress to levy taxes where they will bear most lightly upon the people. It is patriotic and sound policy so to levy them. Can any taxes be less burdensome to the people than those which are imposed upon such harmful luxuries as whisky and tobacco and an article of food which is an unwholesome counterfeit?

Is an excise tax more unequal and unfair than a tax by duties upon imports unless the latter be so laid as to protect our home industries and the wages of our workingmen? It is objected to on the ground that it necessarily creates a system of espionage repulsive to our people. So does every form of taxation. The income tax did it, the tariff does it. If the marshal and his deputies invade the premises of the distiller, the manufacturer, and the dealer, so do collectors of customs and their subordinates board our vessels, examine their cargoes, pry into and ransack our trunks, and even go through the apparel of people suspected of having smuggled goods concealed about their persons.

I am an uncompromising protectionist. I believe that every American industry which is honest and useful should be protected against foreign competition until it shall have attained such strength as to be able to stand alone and unaided against its rivals beyond our own country; and that he who opposes this doctrine is, though it be unwittingly, an enemy to the people and, as a consequence, to the welfare of his country.

But I am not a protectionist run mad. I am not so pregnant with fear that every ill wind will blow our protective system over that I desire to brace it up with fictitious props. I have so much faith in its intrinsic strength that I am sure it can stand upon its own feet. I have so much faith in the wisdom and patriotism of the people that I believe they will stand by the laws which protect their industries and give fair wages and dignity to labor. Protection does not lean upon crutches; it does not require that we should allow whisky, tobacco, and a vicious mixture of unknown ingredients to go untaxed and have free course and be glorified that it may not fall to the ground.

It is said upon the other side that we do not need the revenue which this bill will give us. I have not the time to go fully into the discussion of that subject now. It is sufficient for the present to say that so long as we owe $1,400,000,000 and are paying $50,000,000 as annual interest upon that debt we have an ample opportunity to make a good use of all our revenues, and a government, like an individual, can never be burdened with a surplus income so long as all that comes into its coffers is not sufficient to both meet its necessary expenditures and pay its debts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. There are several amendments pending to this section which have been discussed and rediscussed, and there are gentlemen who desire to offer other amendments, which can not be done until votes are taken on the pending amendments. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending amendments to this section may be considered as closed, and that we proceed to take the vote on those amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not prevent other amendments being offered and debated.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8328, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue. And pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending amendments to section 8 be closed in one minute.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 8.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 190, nays 11, not voting 121; as follows:

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. I am paired, but not to break a quorum, and have voted "ay."

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, with Mr. RICE.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. HOLMES.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, with Mr. HAYDEN.

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. PIRCE.

Mr. EDEN with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. WINANS with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. GOFF.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. DAVIS. If present, Mr. ARNOT would vote for the pending bill, Mr. DAVIS against it.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. LITTLE. If present, Mr. DIBBLE would vote against this bill.

Mr. FORAN with Mr. LONG.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. LE FEVRE would vote for the bill and Mr. O'NEILL against it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY with Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. MCCOMAS would vote for the bill and Mr. DOUGHERTY against it.

Mr. VIELE with Mr. LAIRD. If present, Mr. LAIRD would vote for the passage of this bill.

The following pairs were also announced:

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. BURROWS, for the remainder of this week, on all questions touching the pending bill. Mr. BLOUNT would vote against the bill and Mr. BURROWS for it.

Mr. TARSNEY with Mr. CUTCHEON, on this bill.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. FINDLAY, on this bill for to-day. Mr. KETCHAM would vote for, and Mr. FINDLAY against the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, with Mr. WADSWORTH, for this day. Mr. WEAVER would vote for the pending bill.

Mr. WILSON with Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. STRUBLE would vote for the bill and Mr. WILSON against it.

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, for this day.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. HEWITT, until Tuesday next on this bill. If present, Mr. BROWN would vote for the proposition to amend the bill by reducing the tax to a point as low as 2 cents a pound, and, on the final passage, would vote for the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. MORRILL, from May 29 till June 2.

Mr. MATSON with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, from Saturday, May 29, until Wednesday, June 2, inclusive.

Mr. BYNUM with Mr. OWEN, on this bill.

Mr. WOODBURN with Mr. LOUTTIT, on this bill. Mr. WOODBURN would vote for and Mr. LOUTTIT against it.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. TURNER, on this bill. Mr. PETERS would vote "ay" and Mr. TURNER "no."

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. ADAMS, of New York, on this bill. If present, Mr. GLOVER would vote for the bill and Mr. ADAMS against it.

Mr. HALSELL with Mr. THOMPSON, for this day.

Mr. MCRAE with Mr. WAKEFIELD, for this day.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. BUCK, for this day.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. WADE, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. WISE, on this vote.

Mr. CROXTON with Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, on this vote.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. WEST, for this day.

Mr. VAN EATON with Mr. HANBACK, on this vote.

Mr. DOWDNEY with Mr. MARKHAM, for this day.

Mr. BLISS with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, for this day. If present, Mr. HENDERSON would vote for this bill.

Mr. GAY with Mr. BINGHAM, for this day.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], but as I was given to understand that he was present I voted. I find now that he is not present, so I withdraw my vote.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, if I am not necessary to make a quorum I desire to withdraw my vote.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum without the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MATSON] on the final vote on this bill, but not on preliminary votes. For that reason I have voted, and for the additional reason that if Mr. MATSON were present he would give the same vote that I have given.

Mr. TURNER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for the rest of the day, on account of indisposition.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The motion is agreed to, and debate on the amendments pending to section 8 of the bill is limited to one minute. The question now is on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of revenue bills, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pending bill (H. R. 8328), defining butter, &c. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, section 8, strike out "ten" and insert "two."

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending section and amendments has been closed. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], which the Clerk has just read.

The question was taken, and the chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 82.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand tellers.

Mr. HAMMOND. I suggest that there is no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia make that point?

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not care to make the point.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 97.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

The Clerk read as follows;

Insert at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to the manufacture, sale, or offer for sale of any substance known as oleomargarine which shall be shown, before the same is sold or offered for sale, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations as he may adopt, to be wholesome as an article of food and what it purports to be as shown by the marks or brands thereon, and further, that the constituent elements thereof are in no way deleterious to health: And provided further, That said substance known as oleomargarine shall be put up in packages marked and branded as provided in this act. Any manufacturer, wholesale or retail dealer, or other person who shall knowingly manufacture, sell, or offer for sale any such substance known as oleomargarine for butter or as butter, or without the same being put up in packages plainly marked and branded as provided in this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon being convicted, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years."

The question was taken on the amendment; and there were—ayes 44, noes 96.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point that there is no quorum voting, I would ask the chairman of the committee having charge of this bill to permit us to have upon this amendment, which is certainly a material amendment, a yea-and-nay vote in the House.

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I stated to the gentlemen yesterday that I could not make any such agreement upon this or any other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right——

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I never have called a quorum in this House, but I shall be compelled to call a quorum upon this, because I think this amendment is harder upon the manufacturer than the bill itself is according to the interpretation given to it by its friends.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] make the point that no quorum has voted?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Yes, sir; if the chairman of the committee will not consent to a vote upon this amendment in the House I must make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WARNER, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HATCH, to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 115.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will next be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following proviso at the end of section 8:

"Provided, That this act shall not be understood or construed to impose any of the taxes mentioned in it on oleomargarine or any of the products or compounds mentioned in it when the same is plainly marked with the name of the particular product and sold or offered to be sold as such."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the pending section the following:

"Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1886, the taxes herein specified imposed by the internal-revenue laws of the United States now in force be, and the same are hereby, repealed, namely: The taxes on manufactured tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the special taxes required by law to be paid by dealers in leaf-tobacco, retail dealers in leaf-tobacco, dealers in manufactured tobacco, peddlers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, and manufacturers of snuff and of cigars: Provided also, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco, and snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers, factors, jobbers, or dealers at the time such repeal shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be a drawback or rebate in favor of said manufacturer, factor, jobber, dealer, or other owner of said tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes to the full amount and extent of the tax so paid thereon, but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within ninety days following the date when such repeal shall take effect; and no claim shall be allowed for a less amount than $10; and any special-tax stamp covering taxes repealed by this act may be redeemed for the portion of the special-tax year unexpired at the time of the repeal, when the amount claimed for such stamp shall not be less than $10; and all sums required to satisfy claims under this act shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect: Provided also, That all internal-revenue laws limiting, restricting, or regulating the manufacture, sale, or exportation of tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes are hereby repealed on and after the 1st day of October, 1886, and that there shall be no drawback allowed upon any such articles which shall be entered for export on or after that date: Provided, That all laws now in force shall remain and have full force and effect in respect to all offenses committed, liabilities incurred, or rights accruing or accrued prior to the date when the repeal of the taxes specified in this act shall take effect."

Mr. HATCH. I make a point of order on this amendment, the decision of which I am willing shall be reserved by the Chair pending the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] or any other gentleman who desires to speak on the amendment before the point of order is discussed.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, no species of taxation is so odious, especially to a free people, as the system of internal revenue, with its espionage and arbitrary restrictions on domestic trade. Not alone have we examples in the history of our own country, such as the Pennsylvania rebellion and the troubles in Rhode Island with regard to the whisky tax, but there was never in Great Britain any species of taxation that so excited the animosity and opposition of the British people as the internal system of taxation.

When you read English history you find that nothing so stirred up the English people as the old and odious form of taxation known as hearth-money, the chimney and window tax, and even in modern times the tobacco and spirit tax—excise duties. Our ancestors from the British islands knew the horrors of internal taxation and so naturally rebelled against it here. William Rufus, all the Henrys, the Richards, John, Edward, William III, the Jameses and Georges down to Victoria, imposed piratical levies in the shape of internal taxes. Internal taxation in those days was both grotesque and barbarous. Internal-revenue duties were and are unpopular in England. Says Mr. Noble, in The Queen's Taxes, "Excise duties were first levied in the year 1643 by a parliamentary ordinance, which imposed duties on ale, beer, cider, and sherry, and on the maker thereof. The royalists soon after followed the example of the Parliament, but the unpopularity of these imposts was so great that both parties pledged themselves to their abolition at the close of the war."

In fact, a great British orator, addressing the house of commons, said once when this was the prevailing form of taxation, instead of duties upon imports, that the instruments of government in Great Britain had been "simplified to the tax-gatherer and the hangman."

And more especially in a country like ours will this system always be odious. Speaking for myself on this question of taxation, if ever the issue is put to the American people squarely whether the revenues of this Government shall be raised by duties upon imports or by a system of internal taxation I have no fear as to the result of that contest. I am firmly convinced that there will be such an overwhelming majority of our people in favor of duties on imports as against internal taxation that an election on that issue would decisively settle the question for many years.

Reverting again to Great Britain and the tobacco tax, let me say that Sir Henry Parnell in 1833 estimated that about one-half of the tobacco consumed in England and Ireland was smuggled. Smuggling tobacco still continues there, except in so far as our heavy internal tax has made tobacco dear here. See The Queen's Taxes, page 15. Tobacco may almost be said to be a necessity to a large number of people. A parliamentary committee in England in 1844 stated that, notwithstanding the heavy duty, nine-tenths of all importations were consumed by the working people. The tobacco tax is levied directly, almost entirely, from operatives, mechanics, and laborers. It is the luxury of the workingmen.

Gentlemen on this floor, especially on this side of the House, who are in favor of the internal system, and who represent States in which the manufacture of whisky is a large business, assume to themselves, it seems to me, with all due respect to them, a self-abnegation and virtue on behalf of that industry to which it is not entitled. I have the honor to represent on this floor a district where the tobacco manufactories are very large concerns, and the great manufacturers of tobacco, so far as I have ever heard their views cited here, are strongly in favor of the tobacco tax. They are able and enterprising, and not to be blamed, as things go. The tax does not injure, but rather benefits them, and as business men they favor those laws which we make for them. I might join my whisky friends and claim for our kindred industries that from patriotic motives, and out of true goodness, they just delight in being taxed. If the tax affected them as it does the consumer they would, I feel sure, join me in asking its repeal. The consumers, who are in the majority, and the small makers are opposed to the internal revenue.

In the last Congress a distinguished member of the House, speaking on the question of bonded whisky, drew a picture of the whisky manufacturers being taken up into the mountain of temptation, and when these pure spirits—for, of course, being whisky men, they were pure spirits [laughter]—when these pure spirits got up into the mountain of temptation they were approached by the devil of tariff, who said to them: "If you will fall down and worship me I will free you from the cruel bonds of the internal revenue." [Laughter.]

If you will kneel down and acknowledge the virtue of omnipotent tariff, whisky will be allowed to be manufactured and sold without any tax being imposed upon it whatsoever. The goddess of reform only turned away her virtuous gaze and shed a tear. And this was held out to the House as an exhibition of heroic virtue, of tremendous self-abnegation, and of unparalleled unselfishness, when in truth they refused to have the tax taken off their industry because they know that taxing it legalizes it and gives them a monopoly of the business. They do not want every man making his own whisky. These virtuous gentlemen know too much for that. Why, sir, if that was unselfish, then it is unselfish to go in when it rains.

And, sir, let members of this House understand the question that there is nothing that makes so strong the manufacturers of whisky or that strengthens the hands of the great manufacturers of tobacco as against smaller ones as the internal-revenue system. There is no moral question involved in it, because the taxing of whisky is the strongest argument against the prohibition movement, as the temperance people will claim.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, now before the committee, involves the entire abolition of the taxes now imposed upon tobacco and its various manufactures. My unbroken record publicly and privately has been in favor of the abolition of the entire system of internal-revenue taxation. Everything that has been uttered on this floor looking to that end meets my hearty approval.

But while this amendment may be germane to the bill it is plain to all that it is the opponents, not the friends, of the measure who are proposing it. It is also plain to every thoughtful man that there is no prospect of securing any such legislation at this time. Therefore I shall oppose this amendment.

I have refrained, Mr. Chairman, from participation in this discussion because, being friendly to the passage of the bill, I thought it was a useless waste of time and that further discussion simply retarded final action. Besides, everything that can be said for or against the measure has been said.

But the subject of internal revenue has been frequently introduced in the debate by gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber. My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] makes his opposition to that system the ground of his opposition to this bill. I hope it may not be considered disrespectful in me to refer again to the ill success he had with his own party friends in his efforts to repeal these laws in a previous Congress. My colleague from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES] took the same ground. I beg to refer him to the labors of that little band of patriots who, under the leadership mainly of the Senators of his own State, met during the session of the Forty-eighth Congress in the upper chambers of this building for the purpose of finding a way to reduce internal-revenue taxation on tobacco and brandies distilled from fruits.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] participated in that conclave. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CANDLER] was there, and the now governor of his own State, then a member, Mr. Scales, and the other members of that delegation. But what was the result? When that measure was called before the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] the supporters of the measure did not command a corporal's guard. I need hardly say that I was found among the number. As a matter of history and proof of how delusive are all hopes in this direction, it is proper for me to say in this connection that the Ways and Means Committee of the last Congress had before it over seventy-five propositions relating to internal revenue for its modification, abolition, or otherwise. They sleep the sleep that knows no waking.

At the Democratic national convention of 1884 it was declared that so long as the internal-revenue system was continued "the money derived therefrom should be sacredly devoted to the relief of the people from the remaining burdens of the war and be made a fund to defray the expense of the care and comfort of worthy soldiers disabled in line of duty in the wars of the Republic and for the payment of such pensions as Congress may, from time to time, grant to such soldiers." The limit, therefore, of the continuance of the system, according to this declaration, will have arrived when the burdens of the war shall have ceased and pensions are no longer granted.

For economic reasons, my esteemed friend who touches no subject that he does not illumine with his intellect or adorn with his eloquence [Mr. TILLMAN, of South Carolina] raises his voice in favor of the abolition of internal-revenue taxes and against this bill. Yet he stands in this controversy side by side with the honorable gentlemen who clapped their hands in glee a day or two ago when my colleague from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], in a flight of imaginative oratory, exorcised from its grave the ghost of free trade and predicted that it would stalk through every village in the land in five years if the principle of this bill prevailed. Thus we find the strength of the opposition to this bill is composed of gentlemen whose views on economic questions are as divergent as the poles.

In the light of these facts it is folly to expect the abolition of the internal-revenue system in the near future. There are some who ask for the perpetuation of the tax on tobacco and spirits on moral grounds and for moral purposes; others to perpetuate whisky and tobacco monopoly; others, again, gild it with patriotism and stand on patriotic ground. Thus with different motives and different purposes we find a strong combination to maintain the system. For myself I declare that I am ready at any time to support any bill for its total abolition, reported to this House, coming from the authorized and regular channels of legislation, the Committee of Ways and Means. But every one must see that in the present temper of the House, as now organized, and in the position in which we find ourselves with respect to economic questions, it is idle to expect any such action.

It has been intimated that the pending measure is inconsistent with any defined policy.

Let me remind the committee that the House will shortly be called upon to discuss a measure that I regard of the greatest consequence to the future welfare of the country. I mean the bill to prevent aliens from acquiring real estate in the Territories of the United States. That bill is based upon the principle that American soil, wherever Congress has the right, shall be owned by Americans; that it shall be the national policy in administering our land system that the agricultural lands shall be the property of actual settlers for purposes of cultivation.

Among the most grievous complaints of the nation for years against those who have had control of the Government was the prodigality with which the public lands were wasted and given over to large corporations. Among the most important legislation proposed by Congress is that involving the forfeiture of these lands, so that they may be restored to the public for settlement.

But what good end is this action to subserve? Can we expect that the millions of acres that are thus to be secured to American citizens can all be covered by factories and cities and towns? No, sir; the object of that policy is to give homesteads to be occupied, to be cultivated, that a living may be derived from them to the occupants. Agriculture will always constitute the business of the largest number of citizens in this country engaged in any one pursuit. It was Carlyle, I think, said "that the secret of free institutions in America was much land and few people." In whatever light the matter is presented, ownership in land, living on the soil, the homestead principle, are directly interwoven with our future success and prosperity, with the life, liberty, and happiness of the millions now living and yet destined to live on this continent. It is therefore a solemn duty so to guard the interests of the agriculturists and foster their industries to the end that this policy be maintained. This bill accords with that purpose.

Now, sir, the framers of this bill, contemplating the serious results that have resulted to the agricultural interests of this country by the manufacture of oleomargarine and other compounds of a like nature, and their sale as and for butter, through their representatives have asked for relief.

In searching the arsenal of legislation for a weapon of protection to a genuine and wholesome food product and a weapon of defense against a spurious and unwholesome product they have found it ready to hand in the internal-revenue system. So long as that system continues, so long as gentlemen, from the various motives of patriotism, morality, political economy, and monopoly, will persist in maintaining it, so long, so far as my voice and vote go, do I propose to use them for the moral purpose, the useful purpose, the constitutional purpose of preventing the imposition of fraud on the American people by the manufacture and sale as butter of an article which is not butter. When the time comes that a fair opportunity is afforded this House to abolish the system I shall be found ready to support it. When that time comes I do not doubt that statesmanship will find some other means of protecting the agriculturist.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment of my colleague from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I think it is a good, a wise amendment, and ought to be adopted. I think also that it is germane to the bill under consideration and is not subject to the threatened point of order.

This is a revenue measure. Anyhow it is said by some of its advocates that it has the raising of revenue for one of its main objects. Now, if this oleomargarine bill is passed it will become part and parcel of the internal-revenue system. If it is competent for Congress to add to that species of taxation in the manner proposed, why may it not appropriately and without incongruity reduce taxes of kindred character upon other subjects upon the same bill? I see no difficulty, and I can not think there can be any.

If gentlemen are correct in what they say, that it is desired to raise revenue from a tax on oleomargarine, then I say it is a most proper thing for them to do to also grant relaxation from some of the burdens upon other subjects which have been largely taxed heretofore.

Now, sir, this system of internal taxation was inaugurated during the war, is a relic of the war, and should be gotten rid of as one of the bad legacies of that unhappy time. It is a system wholly opposed to the agricultural and industrial interests of the country. Its burdens bear most heavily upon people least able to bear them. The section of the country which I have the honor in part to represent in this House has felt for years the blighting effects of this mode of taxation, and all our people would hail with pleasure its abolition, or even its modification, and I ask this committee to vote my colleague's amendment into this bill, for if any confidence can be placed in the assurance made to us by some gentlemen here that the tax on oleomargarine will bring in a revenue of nearly $20,000,000, there can be but little loss to the Government in abolishing the tax on tobacco. In fact the result of the transaction would be but little else than the transfer of the tax from one subject to another. Several gentlemen have told us that they are willing to help us get the tax off tobacco, but are not willing to so vote upon this bill. Why not? If it is just to take the tax away, why not do it here? It certainly will not injure your bill. This is the first chance we have had to make any movement of this character—it may be the last; and we ask the committee, if it is determined to pass this bill and to put an internal tax upon oleomargarine or anything else, thus augmenting and enlarging a bad system, to give us some compensation, to do one grateful act at least to the country, by removing a wretched burden from the shoulders of every tobacco worker and producer in the land. My colleague's amendment is well drawn, and properly guards the interests of the Government as well as the interests of all those engaged in the production, manufacture, and trade in tobacco. I hope it will be the pleasure of the committee to adopt it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I was in hopes at the beginning of this day's session that the explanation of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture would be of such a satisfactory character and so fully explanatory of the whole purpose of this bill that by this hour we might have reached some broad conclusions and got on the direct line of either passing or modifying its provisions. But I find that even in this committee there are two lines of explanation, and on those two lines we are led divergently from what we had sought. I find the gentleman who presented the bill, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE], using exactly the language that has passed through my mind in all the discussions, and which was fair and honest. First of all, that this should be a matter of regulation and not of prohibition; that oleomargarine should stand on its own merits, and the imitation should go by the board and be taxed out of existence.

Now, sir, from the first of this discussion until now that has been in every respect my position on this floor. If there is anything that I can hate it is a sham either in commerce or in politics. And I am willing with other friends here to go to any length with the chairman of this committee and the friends of this bill to stamp out every single imitation that is placed in the market. But I am unwilling under any condition, political or otherwise, to stand here and protect one industry and stamp the life out of another when both are legitimate.

My friend from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] has depicted almost with tears in his eyes the woes of the American farmer. Now, I want to say the party to which I belong has been the American farmers' friend all through, and for the purpose of showing to the House how well the American Congress, controlled by the Republican party, has taken care of the farmers of America, I want to read from the official list of the trariff—not to mention sugar, tobacco, hemp, jute, flax, wool, or lumber that grows on his lands—the specific articles under the provision schedule. These taxes, every one of them, support and hold that industry under closer bonds of protection than any industry that can be named in the whole tariff line.

I am speaking upon the line indicated by the gentleman from Virginia to-day as to where the Republican party can stand, and I call his attention to where it has stood.

I said a few nights ago that there was one entering-wedge in this bill which I look upon with horror, and I do so now. As a protectionist, born in the school of Clay and bound to die a protectionist, I am sure after thirty years of life in the Whig party and the Republican party I can not forsake the great cardinal principles that have made this country great, grand, and glorious, by taking the industries of this land and fostering them under the Hamiltonian line of policy, which has made it possible to conquer in a great war and stand the first of the nations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, while I do not agree with my friend from New York on the tariff question (I expect we shall never get together upon that), yet he has been so fair in his discussion of this bill that I very cheerfully yield my time to him.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I thank the gentleman from Missouri.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without occupying further time in addressing the House, I wish to read the list of the articles that are protected for the benefit of the farmer. Here is the list:

PROVISIONS.

Animals (live), 20 per cent. ad valorem.
Beef and pork, 1 cent per pound.
Hams and bacon, 2 cents per pound.
Meat (extract of), 20 per cent. ad valorem.
Cheese, 4 cents per pound.
Butter and substitutes therefor, 4 cents per pound.

Lard, 2 cents per pound.
Wheat, 20 cents per bushel.
Rye and barley, 10 cents per bushel.
Barley (pearled, patent, or hulled), ¼ cent per pound.
Barley malt, per bushel of 34 pounds, 20 cents.
Indian corn or maize, 10 cents per bushel.
Oats, 10 cents per bushel.
Cornmeal, 10 cents per bushel of 48 pounds.
Oatmeal, ¼ cent per pound.
Rye flour, ¼ cent per pound.
Wheat flour, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
Potato or corn starch, 2 cents per pound.
Rice starch, 2½ cents per pound; other starch, 2½ cents per pound.
Rice (cleaned), 2½ cents per pound; uncleaned, 1½ cents.
Paddy, 1½ cents per bushel.
Rice flour and ricemeal, 20 per cent. advalorem.
Hay, $2 per ton.
Honey, 20 cents per gallon.
Hops, 8 cents per pound.
Milk (preserved or condensed), 20 per cent. ad valorem.
Potatoes, 15 cents per bushel of 60 pounds.
Vegetables (in their natural state), 10 per cent. ad valorem.
Vegetables (prepared or preserved), 30 per cent. ad valorem.
Fruits (preserved in their own juices) and fruit juice, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

I want to ask my protectionist friends what further protection they want for any legitimate industry than is found in this list? The question that presents itself to my mind in connection with this bill is whether we must have protection involved in our protection. Now, sir, whether this is meant for a revenue measure, as some gentlemen claim, or not, there is one thing sure, and that is, that if we have to go back to internal-revenue taxes no man who has stood up for protection to American industries can hereafter go before the people to advocate that policy without having this proposition stare him in the face, that if we put on internal taxes the tariff taxes must come off.

I am free to say, and I do say now to the chairman of this committee, put on every police regulation that the law of this country can invoke to guard against base imitations, butterine, lardine, and all the other "ines" that you can find in a chemical dictionary, but when you are dealing with a legitimate product which utilizes the fat of an animal and is sold for legitimate commercial purposes, keep your hands off! [Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, which I will read:

Provided, That the revenue collected under this act is hereby dedicated to the payment of pensions.

I shall detain the committee but a moment. I agree that the internal-revenue system is a system which grew out of the war for the purpose of paying the expenses of the war. I furthermore agree that this system ought to be abolished whenever the expenditures of the war are paid. Those expenditures now consist, since the passage of the widows and orphans' bill, of an annual pension-roll of eighty-one millions, a sinking fund of forty-six and odd millions, and a public interest of forty-four and odd millions; aggregating somewhere about $160,000,000. This internal-revenue system, which was instituted for the purpose of paying these very expenditures, does not now raise a sufficient annual sum to pay the $160,000,000. There is a deficit of nearly $50,000,000 annually, which it is estimated can be paid by the sugar tax.

Now, sir; I think it is good policy to dedicate these internal taxes to these war expenditures, to let it be understood in the minds of the people that the internal-revenue taxes and the war costs are bracketed together, and that the expenditures that grow out of the war are to be met by these revenues as far as these revenues will go. This bill, so its advocates say, is a revenue bill—a bill for internal revenue. This, therefore, is the first time since the war that we have had an opportunity to bracket any new object of taxation with the war expenditure, because the other objects of internal taxation—tobacco and whisky—were selected during the war. This, I say, is the first time since the war that a new object of taxation has been sought for and an attempt made to bring it within the purview of the internal-revenue system. It is the first time, therefore, that the American Congress has had such an occasion to declare that this internal-revenue system is a temporary system, to be used solely for the purpose of liquidating the expenses of the war, and to dedicate whatever may be hereafter collected from these objects of internal taxation to that sacred purpose.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. If, as a matter of fact, the principle of internal taxation is wrong, why do you want to continue it for the payment of the war debt, or to keep it up until the war debt is paid? Why not collect from some other source the taxes to pay the debt that you forced upon the country?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, as to what was no doubt meant to be an offensive sneer at the end of the gentleman's pretended question, which question was doubtless asked with scant courtesy merely for the purpose of interruption and to introduce the sneer, I have nothing whatever to say, except that within the last twenty years it has not been a very infrequent thing for the praises of the "old flag" to be found in close company with a not overscrupulous grabbing of "an appropriation." I pass by the gentleman's "question" with that remark. I am offering this amendment in accordance with my own view of what is proper in reference to this system of taxation.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIEL. Do I understand the gentleman to announce the doctrine that he wants to continue the internal-revenue system until we have got rid of paying everything about the war?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not mean to announce that, because it may take many years, and we may be able to do better. We may grow to be more prosperous. There are other economic questions that may some time—God speed the day—be rightly and wisely decided, and when that day comes we may possibly find some way to get rid of these internal taxes.

Mr. Chairman, I have no concealment about this matter. While I do not like this internal-revenue system, while there are many things about it which I would like to see ended, I do prefer to tax whisky and tobacco, rather than the clothing, the shelter, and the food of the workingmen or the masses of the people. I do believe that it is better to put taxation on tobacco and on whisky than to put it on the wool, the leather, the food, the clothing, or the shelter of American citizens, and if that be not Democracy I must be pardoned for my heresy.

I did not mean, Mr. Chairman, to occupy a moment of the time of the committee, and now ask leave to append hereto this paragraph from the Democratic platform:

The system of direct taxation known as the "internal revenue" is a war tax, and so long as the law continues the money derived therefrom should be sacredly devoted to the relief of the people from the remaining burdens of the war, and be made a fund to defray the expense of the care and comfort of worthy soldiers disabled in the line of duty in the wars of the Republic, and for the payment of such pensions as Congress may from time to time grant to such soldiers, a like fund for sailors having been already provided, and any surplus should be paid into the Treasury.

And I also ask leave to append a letter received by me from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The resolution of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] referred to is for the purpose of repealing the taxes and duties on tobacco:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, May 12, 1886.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 8th instant, inclosing House resolution 164, introduced by Mr. FINDLAY, and asking me to do you the favor to give you such information as I may be able relating to the subject-matter of your letter and the resolution. You ask:

First. For a statement showing the actual and estimate receipts from the internal taxes on the manufacture and sale of tobacco, snuff, and cigars for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and the estimated receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

Second. For any information as to whether the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, and cigars has increased or decreased.

Third. The amount of capital invested in such manufactures.

Fourth. The quantity and value of such manufacture for the past few years.

Fifth. Whether the quantity and value of the tobacco crop, as given in the reports of the Bureau of Statistics, are accurate.

Sixth. You ask me to make any suggestion which may aid you in the consideration of the resolution you inclosed.

In reply to your first inquiry you are informed that the receipts from tobacco for the fiscal year 1885 were:

Cigars and cigarettes	$10,606,823 38
Tobacco and snuff	14,462,353 83
Special taxes of manufacturers and dealers	1,337,911 27
Total	26,407,088 48

Estimated receipts for fiscal year 1886:

Cigars and cigarettes	$11,104,000 00
Tobacco and snuff	15,672,000 00
Special taxes manufacturers and dealers	1,378,000 00
Total	28,154,000 00
Estimated receipts for fiscal year 1887	30,000,000 00

In reply to your second inquiry I have to suggest that the production of tobacco, snuff, and cigars is governed almost entirely by the demand for consumption and exportation from year to year.

Manufacturers are almost entirely governed by this demand, for the reason that tobacco and cigars do not, like whisky and wines, improve by age. An overproduction for any year is very likely to result in losses to the manufacturer.

Going back for sixteen years to the time when the mode of collecting taxes was changed from assessments to the stamp system, the reports of this office show that the production of manufactured tobacco for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1870, was 90,288,082 pounds, and of cigars 1,153,352,191; and for the fiscal year 1876 manufactured tobacco 110,380,602 pounds, and of cigars 1,906,227,982; and for the fiscal year 1885 manufactured tobacco 180,777,413 pounds, and cigars 4,417,721,871. These figures do not include the tobacco, snuff, and cigars exported.

The quantity of tobacco, snuff, and cigars exported has increased during these years, but not in the same ratio as the quantity consumed at home, although every possible facility has been afforded manufacturers to export these goods.

These figures show that the total increase in manufactured tobacco in ten years was 70,396,811 pounds, and in sixteen years 90,489,331 pounds; and that the increase in cigars in ten years was 2,511,493,889, and in sixteen years 3,264,369,680.

The percentage of increase on manufactured tobacco in ten years was over 63 per cent., and in sixteen years 100 per cent.; and the percentage of increase on cigars in ten years was 132 per cent., and in sixteen years was 283 per cent.

In this connection you are respectfully referred to the tabular statements published on pages 123, 125, and 126 in my annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, a copy of which has been sent to you by mail.

To your third inquiry I have to say that this office has no means for ascertaining either the exact or approximate amount of capital invested in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, and cigars. But the amount is unquestionably large, as the reports received at this office show that there are nearly twenty thousand persons, firms, and corporations engaged in this business.

To your fourth inquiry in regard to the value of these products I reply, that no definite information can be given. Assuming that the average value of the tobacco manufactured during the last fiscal year, exclusive of the tax, was 35 cents a pound, the total value would be $63,272,094.55; and assuming that the total value of the cigars, including cigarettes, exclusive of the tax, was $25 per thousand, the total value would be $110,443,046.77.

In estimating the value of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, I have placed the average value, as will be seen, largely below the present tariff duties imposed on these articles.

The difference in the aggregate value placed upon cigars and cigarettes over the aggregate value of the tobacco manufactured is due, mainly, to the fact that tobacco is almost entirely manufactured by machinery, while labor enters as a very large element in the cost and the value of cigars and cigarettes. I presume that there are to-day twice as many persons employed in the manufacture of cigars and cigarettes as there were fifteen years ago.

That cigar manufacturers should locate in cities and large towns is no more to be wondered at than that manufacturers of other articles should locate their mills and factories on rivers and flowing streams which afford ample water-power for the running of machinery.

The laborers scattered over the country, in the rural districts, find more profitable employment in the cultivation of the soil, in mining, lumbering, and the production of the raw materials to be used in manufactures.

Laborers that can be utilized in the manufacture of tobacco and cigars are principally to be found in the cities, and hence tobacco and cigar manufacturers locate there.

In regard to your fifth inquiry I reply that I am not able to form an opinion as to the accuracy of the statistics furnished by the bureau in charge of these matters. Undoubtedly they depend largely upon bills of lading and somewhat on estimated quantities and values. This, I presume, is unavoidable. The reports rendered to this office for the calendar year 1884 show the use of 242,215,634 pounds of leaf-tobacco in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, and cigars during that year. Probably as large a quantity of leaf was exported. And I judge that there might have been 20,000,000 pounds which were never reported to the Government. If these figures are correct they would show an annual product of 500,000,000 pounds of leaf-tobacco. The average value of this tobacco to the farmer, I presume, does not fall below 8 or exceed 10 cents a pound. I observe that, in the quotations given in the Louisville market for the first of this month the price varies according to quality from 3 to 18 cents per pound. The quotations given in other markets are about the same.

In view of the facts and statements contained in this communication I am unable to see that anything would be gained either by the Government or by the manufacturers by the passage of the joint resolution that you inclosed. On the other hand I think they clearly demonstrate that many of the statements made in the preamble are not warranted by the facts and figures herein presented.

I remain, sir, yours, very respectfully,

JOS. S. MILLER,
Commissioner.

Hon. WILLIAM C. P. BRECKINRIDGE,
Of Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. HATCH and Mr. DANIEL addressed the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. DANIEL. I want to speak in advocacy of my own amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Chairman, I think I have shown, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] has made more clear what I have shown, that the support of this bill, as it stands, is an utter and absolute abandonment by the Republican party of their American principles; because it is a bill to tax one industry out of existence, an industry acknowledged in the bill to be a wholesome one and demonstrated to be so.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir; not now. I will see you later. [Laughter.]

The Republican party has jumped the wall of all its previous enunciations upon economic questions. But, sir, astonished as I am at the nimbleness with which our Republican friends jump everything which they have hitherto pronounced to be walls of American defense, still more am I astounded when I see Democrats on this floor, who have pledged themselves to abolish war taxes and who have put upon their banner the motto of Thomas Jefferson: "Equal and exact justice for all men," take a wild leap over the walls of the Constitution and through the roof, turn a double somersault in the air, land far away from every landmark of their creed, and run ten leagues farther than ever the wildest radicalism of Republicanism gone to seed has ever gone. [Laughter.] Sir, there is a new song in the mouth of my Democratic friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] to-day that does not sound much like the resolutions which the Legislature of Pennsylvania adopted in 1791 when, uttering the free spirit of that State which had not yet died out after the Revolution, they protested against the ingrafting into America of the excise system. It will ever remain one of the proudest features of the first administration of Thomas Jefferson that in conjunction with Albert Gallatin he led the way to get rid of that system.

And sir, it seems to be indicated upon this floor that, under the first administration of Grover Cleveland, predestined, as was hoped by a great many of the American people, to resume the mantle which had so long been laid aside, the champions and leaders of the Democracy have come to stand here and preach a doctrine which will raise every powerful hand against every weak one. Disguise it as you will, salt it with rhetoric as you will, paint it with the extract of colored butter as you will, perfume it with clover blossoms as you will, and sing the song of the milkmaid about it as you will, the substantial fact remains that in this bill is the doctrine that Congress may create monopoly, and may help monopoly to crush out and destroy every wholesome industry that "comes between the wind and its nobility."

Murder has its rights; arson has its rights; every crime in the decalogue has its rights, when represented in the criminal, to have its fair hearing in a court of justice before it is condemned. But, sir, according to the doctrines that have been enunciated upon this floor and embodied in this bill—not to protect the citizen against fraud, not to ear-mark that which may be noxious or counterfeit—we are called on to authorize one industry to use the vast powers of sixty millions of people absolutely to destroy and crush out another industry which has no jury to try it, no charge to defend against, but must be condemned without a hearing in the House which should be the house of its friends. The gentleman from New York expressed my sentiments when he said that you had a right of regulation under the police powers of this Government given to you by the Constitution for its legitimate purposes, to regulate commerce. The States can not prevent the introduction into their borders from other States of vile, noxious, or counterfeit things, but the Federal Government is intrusted by all the States with the power to regulate the commerce between these thirty-eight free States of America, so that the counterfeit and the vile may be spotted and marked, and so that the criminal may be tried and condemned. But, overlooking those clauses of our Constitution which were made for the protection of dairymen, of farmers, and of everybody else against fraud and crime; overlooking the methods of rightful, just, and constitutional action against wrong, you are here simply raising the mighty foot of the Federal Government and bringing it down with crushing and destroying effect upon an industry which supplies food to millions, and which millions say is a wholesome and legitimate industry.

Mr. Chairman, I am no filibuster. I have not attempted to retard this bill one moment; but when I see Democracy betrayed in the house of its friends by those who should be its captains, when I see the Republican party here owning allegiance to a committee which the people did not elect and abandoning the representative character which it ought to hold from the Constitution and from the people who are sovereign, then I say that I, for one, will stand here until our term of Congress expires and will use every ability which God has given me to stand athwart this measure and for the people against tyranny and oppression. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HATCH. I move to close debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is it in my power to withdraw temporarily the amendment I offered?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not desire to embarrass the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and I therefore withdraw my amendment, intending to offer it again.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Was there not a point of order raised on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia?

The CHAIRMAN. There was.

Mr. DUNHAM. Has it been decided?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not been decided.

Mr. DUNHAM. What has become of it?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reserved.

Mr. HATCH'S motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill H. R. 8328, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of revenue bills; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the eighth section and all amendments thereto shall be limited to one minute, and upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to make it ten minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I have moved the previous question on my motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 127, noes 2.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. No quorum.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CABELL. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. SCOTT. I make the point that motion is not in order after the roll-call has been begun.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 179, nays 17, not voting 126; as follows:

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, with Mr. BALLENTINE.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. PETERS. I am paired with Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. If he were present, I would vote "ay."

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurring upon the motion of Mr. HATCH to limit debate upon the pending section and all amendments thereto to one minute, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn,

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask consent to submit a report by direction of the committee——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only business now in order is the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The result of the vote was then announced; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 11 o'clock a. m. on Tuesday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNES: Petition of M. G. McKinne, heir of John McKinne; of Mrs. A. A. Skrine, daughter of Mrs. Martha Prince, of Burk County; and of Larkin Witcher, of Gibson, Ga., asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CASWELL: Petition of Robert More and 20 others, citizens of Emerald Grove, Wis., praying for a tax on oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DUNHAM: Protest of E. Rothschild & Bro. and 112 others, employers and employés; and of Charles P. Kellogg & Co. and 105 others, employers and employés, engaged in the manufacture of clothing and cloaks in the city of Chicago, against the Morrison tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of New England Shoe and Leather Association, for issuing small bills—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, memorial of hospital stewards, for the passage of bill increasing their pay—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FORAN: Petition of the Board of Trade of Cleveland, Ohio, asking an amendment to section 5258 of the Revised Statutes of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. EUSTACE GIBSON: Petition of Moses Baylor, and of George P. Zanbro, of Middleway, W. Va., asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAYNES: Memorial of the New Hampshire Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in New Hampshire, for the protection of Chinese residents in this country—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LAIRD: Memorial of C. E. Denison and 111 others, homesteaders, pre-emptors, actual settlers along the east line of Colorado, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 721 to establish a national live-stock highway along the eastern line of Colorado—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LYMAN: Petition of Mills County, Iowa, asking the passage of what is known as the Reagan interstate commerce bill—to the same committee.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Resolutions of the Farmers' Club, of Clarke County, Virginia, in favor of the reduction of tariff duties, &c.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. T. B. REED: Resolutions of the city council of Portland, Me., asking for a speedy determination of questions relating to the fisheries—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. RIGGS: Petition of McAdams Bros., of Marcelline, Ill., in favor of taxation of oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SNYDER: Petitions of George W. Spotts, of G. W. Bane, and of Phillip Gordon, of Charlestown, W. Va., asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. T. B. WARD: Petition praying that a pension be granted James Lampkins, late a private in the Union Army—to the same committee.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petitions of G. W. Hinshaw, Catherine Anderson, and of William Allen, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 1, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department recommending an appropriation of $39,500 for repairs, painting, and ventilating the court-house building at Philadelphia, Pa.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by Mitchell-Post, No. 45, Grand Army of the Republic, Springfield, Ohio, favoring legislation by Congress in accordance with the recommendations of the national pensions committee of the Grand Army of the Republic; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of leading business concerns and banks of Youngstown, Ohio, praying for the passage of a law providing for the redemption of the trade-dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLATT. I present the petition of Mrs. Georgiana M. Amidon, of New York city, praying for the speedy settlement of her claim against the Chinese Imperial Government, known as the Ward estate claim. The diplomatic consideration of this claim forms one of the most interesting chapters in the history of our foreign affairs, and I ask that the petition may be printed as a miscellaneous document and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. CAMERON. I present the petition of E. Ford, president of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company and 25 other leading business firms of Creighton, Pa., representing $1,155,000 paid-up capital. As the petition is short I will read it:
